In this letter Mrs. Hurley relates how glad she and her brother are to tell how they were cured of indigestion and kidney trouble by Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

That is the kind of enthusiasm Dr. Chase's medicines arouse and that is why they are so generally known and used to-day. People who are cured tell their friends and neighbours, and so the word is passed along.

From the limits of Dr. Chase's practice at Ann Arbor, Mich., the good news of these medicines travelled until they are known the world over and considered indispensable in many thousands of homes.

This is the kind of letters we are receiving daily and there can be no mistaking the enthusiasm expressed here.

Mrs. J. J. Hurley, Upper Hanwell, York Co., N.B., writes: "I suffered from indigestion for two years, and tried a great many kinds of medicine, but got no lasting relief until I used Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. I would take severe vomiting spells and be weakened down so that I could not do my own work. I shall never be able to give the medicine enough praise for the benefit derived from its use, and will strongly recommend it to all my friends.

"My brother has also used Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills and they have entirely cured him of lame back and kindney trouble. He is always telling others about them."

Dr. F. L. Brine writes: "I can certify that this statement of Mrs. J. J. Hurley is correct in all details."

Chronic indigestion is almost invariably associated with torpid, sluggish action of the liver, kidneys and bowels, and can never be really cured until these organs are awakened to healthful action by such treatment as Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. One pill a dose 25 cts. a box, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Ltd., Toronto.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

PARIS, March 27.—There were no infantry actions in the Verdun region last night, this afternoon's official statement says. East of the Meuse the artillery action was violent along Douaumont-Vaux line. To the west of the river the night was relatively calm.

A German Torpedo Missing Since Fight

Special to The Examiner.

LONDON, March 27.—A German torpedo boat is missing since the sea-fighting which followed the British air raid on Saturday morning on the German aviation sheds in northern Schlweaig Holstein, according to an official German statement received here by wireless.

Germans Tried to Lure Italy Away

Special to The Examiner.

PARIS, March 27.—Germany has been making desperate efforts to detach Italy from the ranks of the Allies. This was learned to-day when the super-War Council of the Allies, one of the most important conferences in history, met for its first session at the foreign office to-day. The information came from a most reliable Italian source. The Germans it was learned, planned by a shrewd propaganda, and by a triumph of Verdun, to create such dissatisfacton in Italy that the Government would reconsider its plan to help "close the steel ring" around the Central Empires by joining in the Paris programme for concerted action.

Three More Vessels Have Been Sunk

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, March 27.—Three more vessels have been sunk within the last 24 hours with the probable loss of nine lives. They are the French steamer Hebe, the British steamer Cerne, and the British fish carrier Khartoum. All aboard the Cerne are known to have been saved, and it is believed the Hebe's crew was rescued. Nine of the Khartoum's crew are missing, and probably drowned.

LONDON, March 27.—Eleven persons were killed in the sinking of the British liner Minneapolis by a submarine in the Mediterranean last Wednesday. All others aboard the liner were saved.

BERLIN, March 27.—The repulse of further heavy Russian attacks west of Jacobstadt and near Postaway was reported by war officials this afternoon. Only artillery engagements have occurred around Vedrun. The principal activity on the western front occurred near St. Eloi. The British destroyed 100 yards of German trenches on this sector.

BERLIN, March 27.—A French transport carrying troops away from Saloniks struck a mine and sank with a large loss of life, according to Athens despatches to-day. Only 73 persons were rescued.

COPENHAGEN, March 27.—The small German steamer Greia struck a mine and sank outside Gelts-low, with the loss of about ten lives.

Was Committed For Trial

In this morning's police court, Maxwell McLaughlin of Toronto, was committed for trial on a charge of having obtained possession of a moving picture machine, valued at one hundred and fifty dollars. The machine was removed from the Tiz-It Theatre, which was under seizure at the time. Lee Petre, one-time proprietor of the Tiz-It Theatre, was committed for trial on a charge of having subsequently secured possession of the machine.

CONCERT FOR S. A. BAND TO-NIGHT

The concert at the S. A. Temple to-night in aid of the Temple Band funds bids fair to be a splendid affair in every respect.

Perry Luther will recite, Bandsman Loader playing alone and with Parkins & Son on the banjo, the Misses Hill's recitation, Mr. Hill's solo, Sergt. Naples, accordion, will all go to make the evening pleasant and profitable. Everyone is welcome.

In 1886 J. B. Dunlop, a Belfast merchant, happening to have a boy whose bicycle made a great clatter, took it into his head to lessen the vibration by putting air cushions about the wheel. Thus a father's wish to give his son a more perfect plaything made that plaything an instrument for man's service as important as the steam engine, and gave the world the modern bicycle with the modern pneumatic tire.

GERMAN LOAN A SUCCESS.

Imperial Treasurer Reports Subscriptions in Excess of $220,000,000.

BERLIN, March 25—Dr. Karl Helfferich, secretary of the Imperial treasury, told the Reichstag to-day that the fourth German war loan had been a brilliant success, the subscriptions having reached more than 10,000,000,000 marks ($2,650,000,000), not including subscriptions abroad and at the front.

It was pointed out, that the German war loans have now reached a total of 32,000,000,000 marks ($8,000,000,000), while the British loans have only totalled 19,000,000,000 marks ($4,750,000), and those of France, 11,944,000,000 marks (2,986,000,000)

on Leave—Recalled by the Militia Dept. From Shorncliffe Training Camp on Military Business —To Be in Canada a Month

39th MEN IN FRANCE

Sergt.-Major Hurrell Dodds of the 39th Overseas Battalion returned to Peterborough from the Old Country last night, and will be at his home, Engleburn Avenue, Ashburnham, for the next week. Sergt.-Major Dodds has been recalled to Canada by the Militia Department on military business. Just what that business is Sergt. Major Dodds was not prepared to say at present, but he thought he would be in Canada about a month.

Speaking to the Examiner regarding the 39th Battalion, Sergt.-Major Dodds stated that the original members of it were all in France with the exception of the staff, which is being retained in England as training officers. The Battalion had been filled up three times since the first ones left for the front, and these were all now in France. Sergt.-Major Dodds stated that a most rigid and thorough course of training was given the men when they reached the Old Country. The 6th Mounted Rifles were trained for infantry, and sent to the front as reinforcements for various battalions. Just here Sergt. Dodds paid a glowing tribute to the ability of Lieut. Harry Rogers, who, he said, was a popular and efficient officer. It was possible to train a man, ready for the front, in ten weeks after he arrived from Canada.

Sergt. Major Dodds remarked that the feeling in the Old Land was that the war would not be over for three years. Men and more men were needed, and all would be required before Germany was finally crushed.

Sergt. Dodds has met several Peterborough boys who are in training in England, and all, he reports, fine and in good spirits. They are well looked after and have no complaints.

Sergt. Major Dodds returned on the "Corinthian" and experienced a very rough passage.

Sergt. Sam. Worrall, another Peterborough member of the 39th, has also returned to Canada and will be stationed at Toronto, where he will be a Bayonet Instructor.

AT THE TIZ-IT THEATRE

Many are the good things said about the show at the Tiz-It Theatre.

This week we have an extra good programme, which is sure to please young and old, consisting of a very powerful drama in 5 acts, 'The Man Inside,' by the famous actor, Edwin Stevens; a laughing comedy, 'A Dismantled Beauty.' Also special singing by Mr. C. Blyth, along with good music.

Mrs. Jones is considering the patrons of this popular play-house in every way, and has made special arrangements to have this pretty little theatre properly heated, and will, without a doubt, pay every attention to give the theatre-goers two hours of the very best amusement for only 5 and 10 cents.

Come early so as to secure a good seat. Doors open at 1.30 p.m. and 7 o'clock sharp. Everybody who loves good music and good singing and good pictures, come to the Tiz-It Theatre.

SINKING OF SUSSEX CHALLENGE TO AMERICA

LONDON, March 27.—All Americans aboard the Sussex have been saved and accounted for. A statement issued by the American Embassy to-day declared. It was thought first that Miss Calliope Anastasia Fennell, of New York, was missing. Twelve bodies of passengers and members of the crew have been recovered, about seventy others are missing. The London newspapers generally agreed to-day that the Sussex was torpedoed, and speculated at length on what the United States will do.

"Obviously," said the Chronicle, "no more direct or defiant challenge was ever handed by one nation to another than that which Germany has launched at the United States. Whether the United States picks it up or lets it lie, the world and all the belligerents will know with a clearness hitherto lacking, precisely where the greatest of the neutral countries stands."

BUTTONS TO BE GIVEN TO RECRUITS PHYSICALLY UNFIT

Men Who Present Themselves and Fail to Pass Will Have a Badge of Honour--Smoker in the Armouries--Lance-Corp. Jas. Gibbons, Who Left Here With the 39th Wounded---Examinations For Non-Coms.---To-day's Orders and General Military News.

The Patriotic League are arranging to give to each man who presents himself, and is declared to be physically unfit, a button which will prevent this man from being canvassed twice.

Monday or Tuesday of next week the Sportman's Patriotic Association have arranged to bring some good boxing talent from Toronto and will hold a smoker in the Armouries, where a good programme of sports will take place and one of the best entertainments ever held in Peterborough is assured.

Last Saturday night a series of slides were exhibited on a sheet at the Customs House where a large crowd had gathered. Mr. Wearing made a short address and every word he uttered was to the point. Afterwards the results of the Willard-Moran contest were given and between the rounds various appeals were made for recruits.

The committee have decided to write personal letters to each eligible man in the city and county making a personal appeal to each man and asking for their assistance.

The spurt in recruiting noticeable last week is continuing, and this week starts off most promisingly, with thirteen recruits examined and attested. Capt. Bysott of C Company has done some very successful recruiting in Chemong Indian Village getting a dozen fine recruits in the last few days. A very successful meeting was held there on Saturday night. A detachment of the 93rd is being located at the Village and the men who were outfitted to-day will be sent out there.

The non-commissioned officers of the 93rd are being examined to-day by Lt.-Col. Brown and Major Brown of the headquarters staff and Major K. G. Loch of the 93rd Battalion. Part B in the course is being taken to-day.

Owing to the dangerous illness of his wife Pte. M. Tobin of the 58th Battalion, C. E. F., has been transferred to the 93rd Battalion, while Pte. R. Moriaty of No. 1 Platoon, 93rd, will go to Brockville in his place. Pte. Moriarty leaves to-morrow morning.

In to-day's casualty list appears the name of a soldier who left Peterborough a year ago with the 39th Battalion, Lance-Corp. Jas. Gibbons, who was transferred to the 21st Battalion. Lance Corp. Gibbons' home is in Beeton, Ont., but being a friend of Pioneer Sergeant Wes. Edwards of the 39th, he came here to enlist, and drilled with the local detachment for some time, making many friends. He is reported wounded.

Pte. H. J. Browne having recovered from his illness, is back to the B. O. R. of the 93rd Battalion.

J. E. R. Munro, Captain,
Adjutant 93rd Overseas Batt., C.E.F.

The electric sign erected by the recruiting committee at the corner of Hunter and George streets, just outside the Bank of Toronto, is attracting a lot of attention. It carries a double message. On the north side appears the legend "Young Men, The Spring Styles Call for Khaki" while on the south side is this startler "Ladies, would your escorts not look better in khaki?"

The Examiner has received the following letter, March 13, 1916.

Editor Examiner,—I got a box a week or two ago from St. Andrews Church Patriotic League. It followed me about and I got it in the 26 General Hospital, France. I was in the trenches on the 22nd of January and got wounded on the head and face but I am getting along well now. So would

BRITISH SEAPLANES SCORE IN A RAID

Visit the German Airship Sheds —Battle Royal Both in the Air and on the Sea Follows the Attack of the Plane.

A DESTROYER LOST

LONDON, March 26.—Great Britain gave her first effective answer yesterday morning to German air raids. A squadron of five seaplanes, convoyed by light cruisers and destroyers, crossed the North Sea and went straight to the home of the German planes which have frequently visited the English coast of late. They attacked the German airship sheds in Schleswig, east of the Island of Sylt. They were met however by an effective anti-aircraft defence, while their convoys were engaged by German patrol boats. A battle royal, both in the air and at sea, outside the harbor of Sylt, ensued. Only two of the British planes returned, the three others, including a battleplane, were brought down, according to the official statements. Stormy weather prevailed, and in the course of an exciting naval engagement, the British destroyer Medusa collided with the destroyer Laverpock. The Medusa is believed to have been lost, but her crew are safe. The Germans, on their part, lost two armed trawlers, the Braunschweig and the Otto Rudolph.

During the engagement four German torpedo boats were cut off by a number of British destroyers, but eventually succeeded in making their escape says a despatch to the Central News from Copenhagen

DETAILS OF THE FIGHTING

Several miles off the Island of Fanoe there was fighting Saturday between a squadron of twenty ships and a German squadron of five cruisers and twenty destroyers and two Zeppelins. A number of German aeroplanes also took part in the engagement.

Two German vessels were disabled, the remainder retired behind the Island of Roem, on the west coast of Schleswig. During the fighting several British seaplanes suddenly rose from the warships and raided Tondern, where they dropped bombs on the Zeppelin sheds, which found their mark.

Two aeroplanes, however, were shot down.

The Aphaus Tidente states that 25 miles from Esbjorg fishermen sighted the opposing squadrons. The thick snowy weather prevented the view, but firing was heard for twenty minutes.

The paper's correspondent at Esbjorg says that the German squadron was more than forty vessels strong, including several disguised merchantmen. Preliminary to the main action twelve British destroyers last Friday got beyond four German destroyers and Heligoland.

The Germans were compelled to steam northwards and were joined later by some twelve armed trawlers and other vessels carrying four seaplanes and two Zeppelins.

It is reported that part of this flotilla has been destroyed, but there is no confirmation of this report yet. Fishermen who arrived at Esbjorg report that the German trawlers Otto Rudolph and Braunschweig were sunk.

Three British cruisers on Sunday inspected Blaavaad, north-west of Esbjorg, but immediately afterwards steamed in a south-westerly direction.

The Daily News' Copenhagen correspondent telegraphs: Fishing cutters report Sunday evening that they saw about 50 German and 30 English warships at sea. Severe cannonading was again heard Sunday night from France and Esbjorg.

The following official statement was issue to-night:

CONSCRIPTION WAS EMPHASIZED AT RECRUITING MEET

Capt. Williams, of Lindsay, Made an Eloquent Appeal for the 93rd Battalion--Four Men Responded Lieut. Hudd's Address

LARGE ATTENDANCE PRESENT

Recurring reference to the possibility of resorting to some form of conscription was remarked in the recruiting appeal at armouries by Capt. Williams, Chaplain of the 109th Battalion, Lindsay, and Lieut. Hudd of the Canadian Buffs, Toronto. That there might be a departure from the voluntary enlistment was not directly asserted, but the mention and repetition of it had a more positive, if not significant, tone that sounded both as a plea and a warning.

Capt. Williams is a forceful, eloquent speaker, a splendid figure in his uniform, and possesses an impressive presence that attracts his audience and effectively thrusts his thoughts among them. Four recruits responded to his appeal delivered with a patience that must be sorely tried. Mr. George A. Gillespie, M.P.P., was chairman.

One of the most timely of Capt. Williams' thoughts touched upon the recent rumours of peace and the possibility that some men might feel they were not needed. He spoke strongly against such an opinion. Every man is needed right now, and the bigger the army the greater the influence in dictating the terms of settlement. But a stalemate, a drawn contest, would be next door to defeat.

Captain Williams spoke of the three weeks of precious time Belgium gave the allies in the first month of the war. They have promised that the gallant little country shall be restored to her position with grateful compensation, but in the mean time she has been devastated, sacked and ravaged by the Prussians. Capt. Williams mentioned some of the outrages the enemy had committed, then addressing the men said: "Our appeal is to the noblest thing within you, without which you are only walking clay, your soul." He spoke of the Zabern incident, gited taxation figures to illustrate the German burdens, contrasted the British and Prussian ideals both in and out of military affairs and otherwise sought to arouse the personal and material interests of his hearers. If eloquent exposition of the German menace aroused the sense of danger and duty the speakers hope for, the battalion would have been long since completed; and among those who have spoken here Capt. Williams must be given a prominent place. The earnestness of his appeal was convincing when he said that with God's help he would go wherever the 109th went.

Lieut. Hudd replied to the criticism that regiments are slow in getting overseas by stating that the tardiness was caused by the men not in khaki, who were holding back and delaying the early completion of the units. These men were far more ready to criticise a condition to which they were largely contributing, although possibly they did not realize it, than to freely offer themselves with the men already joined. Lieut. Hudd asserted that the happiest men to-day were those in khaki. Calling to the soldiers at the rear of the hall, he asked:

"If you had your choice, men, would you take it off?" To which came a rinsing "No" in reply.

Then, "Don't you think the men who are eligible should get into khaki?"

There was no mistaking that affirmative answer.

"Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unsurpassed."

MONDAY, MARCH 27, 1916

WORTH THE PRICE.

In the Toronto World of Saturday Sam Hunter's cartoon—clever in everything but the point—depicted Hon W. J. Hanna as a necromancer, with the conventional "toggery" of the craft, telling "old man Ontario's" fortune, to wit:

"You will go on a long journey—in a motor wagon; and you will be heir to a large—tax-bill."

Is it true that the loss of revenue by the practical abolition of license fees, will represent a compensatory large addition to our taxes? Without the figures of the license returns of the province, at the moment available one can reason from the manner in which prohibition will affect Peterborough's revenue. Peterborough's share of the revenue resulting from liquor license fees, is this year $2,700. To compensate for this loss of the revenue by local taxation requires an addition of about twenty-hundredths — one-fifth—of a mill on the dollar. This would mean a tax of one dollar on a thousand dollar assessment. This is not a very burdensome price to pay for the benefits of prohibition, that is the money saving; the lessening of the absolute waste of money, sepnt on intoxicating drink; absolute waste and worse. Not only does intoxicating drink, especially used to excess, represent an absolute waste of money, but a waste of manhood and waste of homes and home happiness. The money spent on strong drink necessary to "earn" Peterborough's $2,700 of license revenue would be counted in tens of thousands of dollars. It doesn't take long to spend $1.00, the amount of the tax on a thousand dollars at one-fifth of a mill— twenty glasses of beer does it. If the money spent on drink, especially by the wage earning classes, were to be saved by prohibition to be applied to useful purposes, we should have happier homes, better fed and housed families. The thousands we spend on drink, spent with our merchants would create greater prosperity, and in the long run we should be a hundred per cent. better all around by paying the extra tax— the cartoonist's "large tax." And the conditions throughout the province would be generally similar under prohibition. What appear a to be a trifling loss would be an immense gain. Of course we can't have so revolutionary a change as the destructive disturbance of conditions that have exiisted for generations and have become an evil part of our state, civic, and social life, without at least temporary inconvenience or necessity for readjustment. But before long, if prohibition remains in force, the sober habit will replace the drinking habit and the mass of the people will wonder how a civilised and intelligent people could so long have tolerated a traffic the has little, if anything, to its credit and tremendous things to its discredit.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.

The question of the abolition of the death penalty as a punishment for murder comes up in Parliament as regularly as the speech from the throne and as regularly gets the death penalty. Mr. Robert Bickerdike, M.P., of Montreal, session after session brings up the question of the abolition of "the old and somewhat pagan method of punishment," meaning the death penalty.

This is a subject upon which it is difficult to arouse any great popular enthusiasm. Fortunately it is one that has no personal interest for the general public, for most of the general public has no intention of risking either hanging or its suggested equivalent, life imprisonment. It is not a personal question like taxes, which are as inevitable as death itself. And it is doubtful whether it has a personal interest for criminals. We have had repeated instances where persons who know from term experience of the penitentiary what it is like, saying that when the question of commutation of the death penalty was in question, that they preferred the short shrift and the long rope to life imprisonment—hanging rather than the penitentiary as being more humane. The abolition of hanging is advocated because it is cruel and inhuman. But is a brief, momentary pang or shock of pain—too brief almost to be felt—to be compared for a moment with the long drawn-out suffering, the gradual death of body and mind that life imprisonment means?

Those who have been partially hanged and resuscitated, state that death from strangulation is painless; and not only painless, but on the contrary brings delightful visions, something like an opium pipe-dream.

Without attaching much importance to this phase of the question, it is a further question whether either hanging or life imprisonment is a deterrent of crime. Both prevent crime in the individual cases. One criminal is put out of the way, out of misery and deprived of the power to commit crime. With imprisonment the criminal is equally prevented from doing murder again; that is unless, as has happened, he overpowers or circumvents his keepers and escapes.

Does any form of punishment prevent, by deterrence, the commission of crime? It is doubtful, except perhaps in the case of minor crimes. It does not to any extent prevent the commission of capital crime. Every calculated, premeditated murder, is committed under the reasoned conviction that the criminal will escape detection. He has no dread of hanging or penitentiary for life. He has, he thinks, covered his tracks so thoroughly that he will not be caught. In crimes of impulse — unpremeditated murder or manslaughter, committed in a moment of intense and unreasoning anger, there is no consideration of punishment—everything is forgotten in the blind impulse of the moment.

In neither of these cases or conditions would any form of punishment act as a deterrent. So that we must regard punishment for murder as a punishment and not as a preventive —except in the case of the criminal himself. What the state is concerned with is making the criminal powerless to do further harm, upon the same principle that we kill a mad dog, not as punishment, but as a prevention. The question then resolves itself into this. In the death penalty or life imprisonment the better way to secure prevention. Which is the more humane, which is the less pagan? That is a debatable question. Sentimen argues against hanging. Reason, more or less, argues against life imprisonment.

The question is not one of popular interest—of personal interest. If we are to give importance and emphasis to the humane idea, then we might concentrate greater legislative attention upon other forms of cruelty. In the slums of all our cities, from bad housing, slow starvation and lingering death from insanitary conditions, there is more human suffering —more prolonged suffering—in a year than all the suffering caused by all the hangings since the days, and including the days of "Bloody" Jeffries." The cruelty to animals inflicted in this very city every day; the abuse of horses by delivery boy drivers is more inhuman, more painful to the suffering brutes and to the souls of the sympathetic, than swift, momentary, imperceptible pain inflicted upon a human brute who richly deserves hanging and who suffers infinitely less pain than he imposed upon his victim. When we get laws providing for painless and sentimentally considerate murders, we can reasonably consider legislation for elder-down treatment of the modern descendants of Cain.

MEN NEEDED NOW.

At the recruiting meeting in the armouries last night, one of the speakers brought out an important fact. Referring to the natural feeling of young men that in view of Germany making peace overtures, there would be no need for more men, he pointed out that there was more need now if peace were approaching, than ever for overwhelming man strength of the allies. The larger and stronger the armies of the allies, the greater their influence in settling the terms of peace. This is correct. We need to not only be strong to bring about peace, but we need to be strong to make a peace that will be permanent and permanently guarantee the peace and welfare of the world of humanity. The words of Premier Asquith, as effective to-day as when uttered, represent the unchangeable mind and spirit of the allies

"We shall never sheathe the sword until Belgium recovers in full measure all, and more than all, that she has sacrificed, until France is adequately secured against the menace of aggression, until the rights of the smaller nationalities of Europe are placed upon an unassailable foundation, and until the military domination of Prussia is wholly and finally destroyed."

To achieve this aim, Britain and the allies must come to the settlement of the terms and conditions of peace with the influence of overwhelming military strength. In this view we need more soldiers to make effective and satisfactory peace, than to merely defeat the common enemy of Europe and mankind. The mailed fist must not only be weakened, but chopped off. We need men for the 93rd battalion and other battalions. The young man that enlists now helps meet as important a demand as has existed any time since August 4th, 1914.

The Attitude of the People Towards Wars

The Hamilton Herald demands that we shall explain how the German women, if they had possessed votes, could have prevented the slaughter that is going on to-day.

By votes, we mean, of course, effective voting power. And we mean to say that German women, if the case had been properly presented to them, would have thrown their influence against the war, and would thereby have prevented the slaughter that is now going on.

Of course we are aware that voters may be possessed without real political power, and that is the position of many German men. Germany has the form, but not the substance of free institutions. The franchise is so arranged that the real voice of the people is not represented in German elections, and the Reichstag does not really represent the German people. We say that if the German people had been really presented there would have been no war; at least the probability of war would have been much diminished. And if, in addition to real manhood suffrage, there would have been another influence working against the war.

In other words, we mean that it was not the German people, but a clique of junkers and aristocrats who brought on the war. We are quite aware that the German people, once the war broke out, were united. But supporting a Government which has committed the nation to war is a very different thing from urging a Government to make war.

There is a class of thinkers, we know who regard this and other wars as inevitable, who talk about the irrepressible conflict of the Teuton and the Slav. We do not share their views. The same people talked a few years ago about the irrepressible conflict between the Anglo-Saxon and the Slav, and between the Teutonic races and the Latin races. Britons were then ranked as Teutons. To-day we are firm allies of the greatest Slav Empire in the world, and of the greatest Latin Republic in the world

We therefore believe that racial difference is not a necessary cause of war, and that men and women of different races could agree very well if they were not egged on to fight by men who have dynastic or military ambitions.

But if the people of Germany could not have prevented the war, even if they had possessed political power, the Herald and the rest of us must be wrong in blaming Germany. You cannot blame people for that which is inevitable. We think it was the result of the folly and ambition of the rulers of Germany. — Toronto Star.

MORE MARTYR MATERIAL.

The Germans may intern Cardinal Mercier. All friends of the Allied cause may well wish they would. The Belgian Cardinal is now, and will be for all time, one of the world's heroes and martyrs.—Globe.

THE NAVAL IDEA.

Every once in a while the Conservative papers break out in furious denunciation of the Liberal attitude on the naval question, the same attitude, by the way, which permits the gallant Australian cruiser Sydney to patrol the Atlantic sea coast of Canada, and see that no harm comes to our shipping. The Liberals need only point a finger to the east or to the west, where Japan watches over us. Lack of large statesmanship, not any lack of patriotism, prevented us from having a navy.—London Advertiser.

you express through your paper my heartfelt thanks for their kindness to me. I note with gladness that I have many friends in St. Andrews church and that fact helps to cheer me up and keep me going. I take the honour to send to all the dear members of St. Andrews church and my friends also to the dear devoted teachers my very deep and sincere thanks for their extreme kindness and delicate attention in sending the generous gift which I received. I am greatly comforted in thinking that my friends in St. Andrews, large and small are taking part in my welfare and praying to God that this dreadful war should be finished as soon as possible, but notwithstanding all as soon as I am well again I will be proud to return to the front again to defend with all my heart the cause of liberty and justice.

Bandmaster Peryer of the 59th Battalion band is home from Brockville. This is his final leave before going overseas.

The Lakefield News says: On Friday evening of last week a number of the members of the local squad assembled at the home of Pte. Geo H. Rowe, when Lieut. de Puyjalon, who has had charge of the squad here, but has been transferred to headquarters at Peterborough for duty, was presented with a handsome gold-headed cane, as a token of appreciation and of the good feeling that has existed between Lieut. de Puyjalon and the members of the squad. After the presentation the evening was spent in a pleasant social manner.

1,000 War Derelicts Jolly Guests of King

LONDON, Mar. 27.—King George gave a party at Buckingham Palace and there could scarcely have been a jollier one. It was for sick and wounded soldiers and sailors from various London hospitals to the number of nearly a thousand.

Some of them had to be carried in on stretchers; others came with nurses, and about fifty required careful guidance to their seats, for they were totally blind. These last came from St. Dunstan's Home, established by C. Arthur Pearson, formerly a London newspaper proprietor and editor, to whom came almost total blindness several years ago, and who soon after the war began devoted his energy and organizing capacity to caring for soldiers upon whom the war inflicted a misfortune similar to his own.

From the moment the King and Queen, accompanied by Princess Mary, Prince Albert, in middy's uniform, and a small retinue, entered the palace riding school, where their guests had gathered, till the final burst of cheering ended the festivity, the Monarch and his merry men, were equally at home and pleased with one another.

First and foremost a jolly party, it was secondarily a musical party. There was something for every taste, serious and gay, though the latter predominated in the programme. The men screamed with laughter at the antics of two musical comedians, joined with the full strength of their lungs in the choruses of such popular songs as Evie Greene's "Keep the Home Fires Burning," which nowadays is heard oftener than "Tipperary," and applauded comedians like George Robey, Will Evans, G. P. Huntley and Joe Coyne. The massed bands of all the Guards' regiments could hardly have filled the capacious riding school with a greater volume of sound than that company of sick and wounded succeeded in creating when the American song, "Upidee," was given.

The entertainment was the second of a series of three given by their Majesties, and it was enjoyed hugely by the Royal party. As for the others, one had only to hear those poor sick and wounded, maimed, and blind sing "God Save the King," to get the measure of their happiness.

In 1913 J. B. Dunlop visited the United States, and in a number of speeches corrected some erroneous impressions regarding his tire invention. It seems his boy was not delicate as commonly supposed. Therefore, the father's delving into ways and means to get a "softer" riding surface was really because his boy was well and wanted "a little speed".

When J. B. Dunlop brought out his first pneumatic tire everybody laughed. But he lived to see those laughs turned into universal approval.

FREE-FOR-ALL IN STANLEY CUP GAME

MONTREAL, March 26.—By defeating the Portland Rosebuds at the Montreal Arena Saturday night the Canadiens placed to their credit two of the three games played so far for the Stanley Cup. The score last night was 6 to 3 and the game one of the best ever witnessed in this city. The local team was on the aggressive from the start. The visitors' scoring was confined to the first two periods, Canadiens having a lead of one goal at the conclusion of the second, and easily outplaying Portland in the third.

Besides being a good exhibition of hockey the game developed into a free fight, which was stopped by Chief Moffatt of the Westmount police force, and one of his constables. Lalonde was backchecking Irvine when Johnson knocked Lalonde down and went at him with his fists, being joined in the assault by Oatman. Then it was a sort of "come all ye," players of both sides taking part with their sticks until the police interfered. Oatman and Johnson were benched and the game was resumed with Portland thus handicapped:

LITTLE PROSPECTS FOR THE CANADIAN LEAGUE

LONDON, Ont., March 26. — A meeting of the Canadian League, scheduled to take place here to-day, failed to materialise. It was hoped to decide definitely whether baseball would be resumed this season, but, on account of the clubs failing to send delegates, the proposed meeting was postponed until Thursday next, when it will convene at Brantford. Mr. Dulmage of the Guelph club was the only outside representative to put in an appearance.

The prospects for a resumption of baseball in the Canadian League are not bright. President James P. Fitzgerald of the league has tendered his resignation. He has enlisted and will go overseas with the 180th Sportsmen's Battalion of Toronto, as a member of the administrative staff.

Careful inquiry into conditions in the defunct South Michigan League with which it was proposed to amalgamate, would indicate that such a merger would not be advisable at present. Well informed baseball men here are of the opinion that the Canadian League should not, and will not, operate this season.

The Birthday of Miller Huggins

Manager of St. Louis Cardinals is Forty-Six Years Old To-day

Miller Huggins, the peppery little manager of the St. Louis Cardinals will attain the venerable age of 38 today. Like many other men eminent in American public life, Miller is a native of the Buckeye State, and was born in Cincinnati-by-der-Ohio, on March 27, 1880. Huggins still does his voting in Cincinnati and adds to his income by working as a salesman in the gelid months. Miller was a boyhood chum of "Red" Doolin, the former pilot of the Phillies. They are of about the same age, and both got their baseball start on the Cincinnati lots, often playing on the same "kid" nine.

The Cardinal Chief played his first game for money at Wapakoneta, O., a little city a few miles south of Lima, in 1899. The following season he was with Mansfield, in the Interstate League, and in 1900 he played Summer ball at a Catskill Mountain resort. In those days Miller's specialty was shortstopping. In 1901 he was hired to cover second base for the St. Paul Western League club. Miller's father was strongly opposed to baseball as a profession for his young hopeful, and wanted him to become a lawyer. Miller refused to heed the paternal counsel, but he effected a compromise by adopting an assumed name, and joined the St. Paul team under the alias of James M. Proctor.

When St. Paul was given a franchise in the American Association in 1902 'Jimmy Proctor' remained in the line-up, and he remained in the Minnesota capital until the latter part of the 1903 season, when he broke into the National League in the uniform of that dear old Cincinnati. At St. Paul the diminutive Chicagoan had played second base like a demon, and had batted well over the .300 old three-sapper.

Huggins wore the uniform of the Reds for six seasons. He never succeeded in breaking into the .300 class while in Cincinnati, his best year having been 1903, when he swatted the pellet for .293. He landed in St. Louis in 1910, having figured in a trade, and hung up an average of .204 in 1913. In 1913 he succeeded Roger Bresnahan as leader of the Cardinals. The club finished eighth his first year, but grabbed third place in 1914, and were sixth last year.

Huggins has announced that he will be a bench manager this season, and will not also play in any games between the time the player limit goes into effect and the time the drafting season opens. It is going to be difficult to fill the hole left by the retirement of Miller's clever second baseman, but Huggins thinks he will have a dandy infield. On paper the Cardinal bunch looks to be about the weakest in the old circuit, but if Miller is in a despairing mood he hides it mighty well.

Huggins is the twenty-fourth man to pilot the St. Louis Cardinals since 1876. In all that time the Mound City has never had a National League flag. When Huggins landed the team third in 1914 he surpassed all his predecessors except S. W. Graffen, who led the Mound City aggregation in 1876, the first year of the National League, when St. Louis was surpassed only by Chicago and Hartford. Charley Comiskey, Roger McCluskey, Roger Bresnahan and other stars of the game have all tried in vain to nail the gonfalon to the Mound City flag pole.

Willard Has No Trouble in Winning From Frank Moran

NEW YORK, March 25.—Jess Willard easily retained his title of champion pugilist of the world by outfighting Frank Moran in Madison Square Garden to-night. He won despite the fact that he broke his right hand in the second round. Willard was not merely too big and strong for Moran, he was vastly too clever. Round by round he jabbed and uppercut his smaller opponent almost at will, though unable to land a knockout punch. The first round, when Willard, mush softer, fatter and higher-stomached than his friends would have had the public believe, was a little nervous, was even, but every other round was the giant cowboy's by a big margin.

He not only landed three blows to every one scored by Moran, but he never had a chance. In two rounds, so the experts believed, Willard given two good hands would have beaten Moran insensible to the canvas.

Probably 15,000 persons, the largest fight crowd that ever got together indoors on Manhattan Island, saw Willard's victory, though the great majority of them cheered for Moran. It was one of the most remarkable crowds ever gathered at a sporting event, consisting as it did of all sorts and conditions of men, from statesmen and financiers, and men of large affairs, to the dregs of the town. Women were there by the hundreds, at least 2,000, it was said, but they were not easy to find among vast banked tiers of men.

It was estimated that at least $150,000 was taken in from the ticket sales. Of this Willard received $47,500 and Moran $20,750. Each man earned his money. Moran particularly. What would have happened had not Willard broken a bone in his right hand can only be guessed. Probably Moran would have been knocked out. After the third round Willard used his left hand almost exclusively, jabbing with it, uppercutting with it, tearing Moran's face to ribbons, but Willard's right was practically useless.

No more courageous battle was ever fought than the yellow-haired Moran made against tremendous odds. He weighed 201½ pounds to Willard's 250¼. He stood six feet one inch to Willard's six feet seven inches, but his size was not daunted. He tore in like a wildcat, taking such punishment as few men have endured and kept on their feet. By the middle of the tenth round of the fight his left eyebrow was gashed deeply, his nose was battered, his mouth was a swollen monstrosity. There was little human left about his face. In the seventh round it seemed for a moment as if Moran must crumple under the savage uppercuts that Willard drove to his chin and jaw. He was groggy, driven to a clinch, but he weathered the evil moment and came back in the eighth round hungry for more punishment.

At most times during the thirty minutes of fighting Willard was the aggressor, forcing Moran to the ropes time after time, Willard fought standing straight up. Moran crouched awkwardly. Willard's blue eyes searching his opponent's constantly. Moran held to the level of Willard's stomach. Referee Charley White, alert, quick-footed as a lad of 20, followed the fighters from point to point in the ring, his staccato commands ringing clear in the silence,

"Break now—come on and box—get away clean." He had little trouble with the two big men. Moran clinched a good deal toward the last, but he let go readily at White's sharp admonition. Willard was good-natured all the way through.

The total receipts were $151,254, and the attendance just exceeded 14,000.

Compliment to the Vice-Skips

The committee in charge of the vice-skips' bonspiel, of which Mr. M. C. Tooley was chairman, has received the following communication from the Club:

At the last meeting of the Committee of Management the report from your committee was duly received and I was instructed to convey to you and your committee the thanks of the Committee of Management for the very able manner in which the bonspiel was carried on, and also to advise you that your recommendation as to handing the surplus funds to the Overseas Tobacco Fund met with their approval, and that they would have the same carried out. I remain,

Yours truly,
F. Brownscombe,
Secretary.

Curlers' Social On Thursday Night Next

A little social evening on Thursday will just about pull down the blinds at the curling rink for another year. All the members are asked to be present. There will be cards and a programme of music, and a last get-together before the ice goes out. The rink will be open to this year's players and to those of other years. To-day there was an inch or more of water on the ice, and apparently this week will see the end of the season. But the players are willing to lay aside the stones after a more than active winter, with the exception of the January thaw.

A poll by the Literary Digest of New York, of 500 editors in every state in the Union part the "preparedness" agitation in the United States, shows the average estimate for the regular army to be 28,078 and for the reserve 1,215,359. As to the Navy 40 per cent. of replies on this point favor a navy second only to Great Britain's, while 60 per cent. favour a navy as large as any in the world.

SCOTTISH SOCCER STOPPED BY SNOWSTORM

City Team Wins Manchester Game in English League—Saturday's Scores

LONDON, March 27.—Football in North Britain was sadly interfered with by heavy and widespread snowstorms. In the Scottish League only two of ten scheduled games could be played, none of the leading clubs being engaged.

In the Lancashire section of the league Evrtron now have a clear lead, if a small one. The most interesting fixture was that which brought the two Manchester teams together. They played on United grounds, but City won by 2 goals to nil. The day's results were:—

LONDON COMBINATION
Brantford 4, Queen's Park 0.
Chelsea 4, West Ham. 0.
Clapton 4, Luton 0.
Millwall 3, Croydon, 1.
Reading 1, Arsenal 1.

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

Last Will and Testament of Pioneer, Dated 1804, Proves Existence of Slavery in Essex

The existence of slavery in Essex country during the early part of the 19th century is amply proven by an old document dug up by Registrar Henry Clay a few days ago.

Mr. Clay is modernizing the filing system of county documents and is shaking dust; which is more than a hundred years old, off the musty old records which have long reposed in the court house vault.

One bundle of papers, bearing the date of 1804, was opened by him Tuesday and in it was found the will of James Girty, a relative of the noted plainsman and Indian fighter, Simon Girty, who resided in Gosfield township, coming to Essex county during the latter part of the 18th century.

When Girty came to Canada from the south, he brought with him his full retinue of slaves, which he bequeaths to various members of his family in his will.

"In the name of God, amen, I, James Girty, of the Township of Gosfield and County of Essex, in the Western District of Upper Canada, yeoman, being of sound mind and memory, but considered the uncertainty of human life, do make this my last will and testament," is the way the document begins.

After a clause expressing a desire to be buried at as little expense as decency will permit, the testator gives his 200-acre farm on Lake Erie to his daughter and son.

Had Many Slaves.

"I also bequeath to my son, James the following six Negro slaves or such of them as may be alive at the time of my death: Virgil, Jim, Hannah, Jot, Betsey and Tom and also the children which may be born of the said Hannah and Betsey. To my daughter I bequeath my Negro woman called Sal, and also the Negro woman called Nancy, with her five children, the said Nancy having been the property of the mother of my children and intended by her for my daughter.

All other property shall be divided between the son and the daughter with the exception of "my Negro slave Paul, whose freedom I hereby bequeath him for his long and faithful service."

The old document will be filed away in the new fire-proof cabinets recently purchased by the county.

Conscription Was Emphasized, etc.

"The man who hides behind a newspaper letting a woman stand in a street car is not fooling the woman. He is only fooling himself. There are a lot of men with lame excuses for not enlisting who are not fooling their pals; they are only fooling themselves, and they won't fool the state much longer. Buck up, fellows and get into khaki. Canada needs every able-bodied man. Don't worry about what the other fellow does or fails to do. This thing is up to the individual first, last and all the time. And remember, the time for talking is about done. Only one thing will win this war—trained men— and we've got to get them."

Mr. Wm. A. Moran, of Toronto, invalided with rheumatism from the 83rd battalion, recited the shooting of Dan McGrew, and the 93rd band played several selections, among them a Verdi potpourri.

Scotch Tea Great Success

Canadian Kitchener League Entertained in the Turnbull Building

The Scotch tea held under the auspices of the Canadian Kitchener League in the Turnbull building on Saturday was a great success, the sum of $22 being realized. The room was very tastefully decorated with Scotch plaid and flags, carnations and ferns, while interest was added by the showing of an old time spinning wheel, presided over by Miss Austin, and an antique punch bowl. Mrs. Joseph Knox received the guests at the door, while the entertaining committee were Mrs. Doupe, Mrs. Baumer, Mrs. Lawrence and Mrs. Wride. Mrs. Wm. Hartley and Mrs. Jackson were the tea hostess, while Mrs. Hartley, Jr., presided over the cups. The Scotch lassies in national costume who assisted were Miss Daisy Stocker, Miss E. Jackson, Miss V. Knox, Miss Austin, Miss Waterman, Miss M. Lawrence and little Miss Dorothy Knox. Mrs. Kimberly was the cashier for the day.

The Kitchener League wish to express their thanks to the Daughters of the Empire for the loan of dishes to Mr. Might of the Turnbull Company for the use of the room, to Mr. Green who furnished a grafonola, and to all who participated in the success of the event.

Weather During First Half of April Will Be Colder Than Usual

But for the Latter Half of the Month High Temperatures Will Prevail Says Foster in His Monthly Weather Bulletin

WASHINGTON, D.C., March 25—Last bulletin gave forecasts of disturbance to cross continent April 1 to 5, warm wave March 31 to April 4, cool wave April 3 to 7. This will be the most severe storm of April, and heavy rains are expected from it. Its cold wave will reach meridian 90 about April 6, and frosts will go much further south than usual. The storm centre is expected to pass through the southern states and up the Atlantic Coast. It will be the most severe storm of the month and during its transit colder weather and more rain than usual are expected.

Temperatures of April will average higher than usual but the first half of the month will be colder than usual. Most rain is expected during first half of the month; not much rain last half of month. From about March 30th to April 12th a great fall in temperature is expected and during the week centering on April 11, killing frosts are expected to go further south than usual. Great high temperature will prevail during last half of April, one of them crossing meridian 90, near April 20, and another near 27. Frosts will again go far southward about 1st of May.

April will be good crop weather month. Immediately following April 14, will be one of the finest crop growing periods of the spring months and farmers should have their grain in the ground ready for that favourable season. Probably the most important growth of the crops will occur from April 14 to 30. Of course the latitude must be considered.

Next disturbance will reach the Pacific Coast about April 6, cross Pacific slope about April 7, central valleys 8, eastern sections 10. Cool wave will cross Pacific slope about April 9, central valleys 11, eastern sections 13.

This wil be a great storm on the Pacific slope and will decrease in force as it nears the Atlantic Coast. Heavy rains are expected along and south of latitude 40, particularly in southeastern states. Most rains on Pacific slope will be south of San Francisco. Severe storms are expected west of meridian 90.

Indications are that the cold wave of this storm will cause heavy snows in the northern Rockies; that following that cold wave a great rise in temperatures will melt much of the deep snows in the Rockies and cause floods. To some extent, similar conditions will prevail in the northern Alleganies and it may be well to expect floods.

Last half of April will be rather quiet and favorable to farmers' work. A great boom in crop growth is expected during those two weeks.

HOT BED GARDENING

Since Christmas and, perhaps, earlier, before even imported fresh vegetables were beginning to attract the attention of the majority of backyard or vacant lot gardeners, articles on the construction and management of hot-beds have appeared from week to week, and have been read with more or less interest by good people who intend to begin operations as usual, when spring shows some sign of approaching. The middle of March, about the time that the ancient Romans began their year, is the time that really quickens the interest of the average gardener; and that date is early enough for the beginning of practical operations, where not too much artificiality is brought into play.

Quick-growing vegetables sown at this date will be ready in time to allow of the starting of plants that are later to be set out in the open ground or removed to cold frames, especially as there is little satisfaction in having to hold back plants that threaten to become spinding before danger of frost is over.

Understand we would not discourage real early hot-bed work, but for the man who has to depend on the manure-heated hot-bed to bring his earliest small stuff to maturity and who wishes to make that manure, and his frames, do double service by bringing on his plants of tomato, cabbage, celery, etc., March 10th is early enough for starting the preparation of his hot-bed.

In many cases the frame of last year's hot-bed has been allowed to stand out through the winter, possibly resting on the old bed, and everything will be found frozen up when the work of starting for this year is commenced. To get this old frame in shape for another year's work it will probably be found necessary to take it apart and very likely some of the boards or scantlings will be ruined in the act. If it is found necessary to do much repairing, or if a new frame has to be built, it will be as well to consider the advisability of extending operations for this year, as it is little more trouble to ventilate, water, and care for two or three beds than to do the same work for one, and there is little doubt that any produce in excess of what is needed for the home table will find a ready market among the neighbours who are not fortunate in having room for hot-bed work on their own premises.

Starting with an additional room of, say, two sashes, which would bring the usual three-sash bed up to five, it will pay to have the extra sash of the double-glass type, so that the earliest work may be started with greater safety than under the single-glass frames. The object of the double glass is not only to keep the plants from freezing, but to ensure rapid growth and to have a place for some of the more tender vegetables after the first and hardier crop is removed.

Beginning with the manure, which in the case of most city gardens has to be purchased from a livery or other horse stable, this important factor of the hot-bed should be in an active state of decomposition, but not fire-fanged, and as soon as it is delivered should be piled and then turned over after three or four days to ensure its becoming evenly heated thoughout, prepare the place for the bed by thawing out the soil, as this ensures an easier keeping of the necessary temperature after the bed is made. This thawing may be helped by setting the frame on the desired spot and using the glass, and banking the outside of the frame with manure during the process. With everything warm and as dry as necessary the work of making the bed may proceed. Possibly the ground from the place where the bed is to be set will have to be used for a seed bed; in such a case, it should be removed from within the frame and, if possible, kept from freezing until it can be placed on top of the manure, which is tramped into the frame to the depth of at least one foot.

Before any sowing of seed is done use should be made of a thermometer to make sure that the temperature of the bed is keeping even, also that the heat is sufficient. Vegetables that are to be matured in the bed may be sown directly in the original seed-bed, but when the plants are to be transplanted plats give better satisfaction, as the seedlings may be removed very easily, where necessary, and the soil in the plats can always be very exactly prepared when small seeds are to be planted. For planting direct in the bed procure a board of convenient width, and the length of the inside of the fame, sharpen the edges of this and use to make the small trench for the seeds. After covering the seed use flat of the board to press down the soil.

The temperature of the hot-bed should not be allowed to rise above 70 degrees, nor to fall below 50, at any time. If there is any trouble with too much heat the required degree can be arrived at by raising the sash at one end, or by pulling it down to make a small opening for air. This treatment will make the plants hardy and will prevent damping off. Tender plants should occupy a section of, or a hot-bed by themselves, and the same ruling applies to hardy sorts, so that temperature and ventilation may be regulated to suit either. In the cold weather, such as is present during March, hot-bed sash should be covered with matting at night, and the outside of frames should be banked with manure.

Nothing has been said in this article with regard to the site for the hot-bed, but it goes without dispute that a southern aspect and a well drained location are necessary in every case.

BROCK STREET RINK CLOSES FOR SEASON

The Brock street rink closed on Saturday, after one of the longest skating seasons on record. In fact there has never been skating as late as there was this year. The revival in skating was quite noticeable, numbers of persons using the rink who had not been on ice for many seasons. The season was greatly enjoyed and the opening next winter will no doubt be looked forward to by those who enjoy this great Canadian health-giving sport. The taking out of the ice will be accomplished to-morrow.

Voice of The People

Correspondence under this heading, containing or involving attacks on individuals or violent or extreme statements, must to secure insertion, be signed with writer's real name, the owner of which thus assumes the responsibility.

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—Would you kindly put in the paper on Monday night what "black muck" is made of?

Yours sincerely,
W. Doughty.

Black "muck," as that word is understood in this country, is of vegetable origin. It results from the deposit of decaying vegetation, largely from the decay of leaves and other tree growth. Black "muck" is found in "pockets"—generally low lying land or valley. For centuries, perhaps, fallen leaves rotted tree branches and trunks have been deposited and were gradually converted into what we call black muck. The depth of the deposit is explained by the possible fact that not only the tree and vegetable growths on the spot has rotted and been deposited, but streams have washed down leaves and vegetable rubbish from other places. In the British Isles "muck" is applied to rotten manure or a mass of rotten vegetable matter; or to something mean, vile or filthy, and not regarded as a soil constituent, as it is understood in this country.

Dear Sirs,—Some time ago I used to read with great interest the sermons of our ministers preached on Sunday evening, and I used to enjoy reading Mr. R. B. Grobb's of All Saints' church. Why is it that they are not published in the papers now on Monday evening?

I shall be very much pleased to see the answer of my letter in your paper when you have a vacant space. Thanking you.

Yours truly,
A Daily Reader of the Examiner.

For the benefit of "A Daily Reader" it might be stated that a number of sermons appear in every Monday's issue of the Examiner.

REV. G. M. SHARPE AT THE TABERNACLE

Well Known Evangelist Addressed a Number of Meetings Yesterday —Meetings To-night

Rev. G. Morton Sharpe, the big eccomio singer Evangelist of Toronto arrived in the city Saturday and opened his Evangelistic campaign in Bethany Tabernacle yesterday.

The first day of his return visit was a busy one. He spoke in the morning at the Tabernacle addressing the Christians with an earnest appeal for each one to prepare themselves to be soul winners and stated that they could only work effectively for God by being filled with the Holy Spirit, whom God had sent to empower Believers for service.

Mr. Sharpe spoke in the afternoon to a fine crowd of men at the Y.M.C.A. and pictured most clearly the young man's race with sin under the figure of the red horse and the white horse.

The red horse stood for sin he said, and the white horse was typical of the manner in which young men start out in life in the race with sin. But the red horse always wins—sin is sure to overcome those who can make a young man strong to cope with this mighty enemy.

The big Evangelist got his audience in excellent spirits through a lively song service and had everybody smiling before he was ready to preach. He said he didnt want the people to sit in his meeting with long faces, but he wanted them to look happy and have a good time. I believe we're going to have a good time. He said he thought that Gospel services ought to be made so attractive and so enjoyable that people wouldn't want to go to the picture shows and cheap entertainments for their enjoyment but that they would find their highest enjoyment in religion. Judging from the excellent spirits of the big crowd, which was present to greet the Evangelist they certainly seemed to agree with him that religion could make people happy. The powerful Evangelist was as full of life and fire as if the night service had been his first meeting during the day.

In the course of his address he spoke on various ways in which men are lost or the 'Roads which lead from Peterborough to Hell". These were ungodliness, infidelity, Christless morality, procrastination, etc. He declared that more people went down to Hell on the road of procrastination than in any other way.

Mr. Sharpe announced that he would speak to-night on the "Happy Man". Everybody was invited to come and have a good time. Service each night this week at eight o'clock.

Weather Hard On the Sleighing

Farmers Will Find it Difficult to Get Around Until the Roads Improve

The mild spell of yesterday and to-day proved disastrous to the sleighing, and as a result, farmers and others will be compelled to remain at home until the roads improve. The hot sun of yesterday, followed by rain to-day, will remove much of the snow that remains and pave the way for an early spring.

The Spring Robin.

Upwards of five hundred people residing in and around Peterborough claim credit for having visualized the "first" spring robin. According to one native gunner, several of the song birds are here in anticipation of spring.

DEATH OF JOHN WICKETT.

PORT HOPE, March 26. — John Wickett dropped dead in his store last night. He was walking up the store with his head clerk discussing a change in one of the windows when he dropped to the floor and expired instantly. Mr. Wickett was one of Port Hope's most prominent and influential citizens and very successful in business, having three large stores. He was vice-president of the Midland Loan and Savings Co.

Married Men Demand Derby's Resignation

Protest Meetings Held Simultaneously in English Cities.

MANCHESTER, March 27. — The Earl of Derby's resignation as director-general of recruiting is demanded in a resolution passed at a meeting of married men who have attested under the Derby scheme. The meeting was held for the purpose of protesting against the married being called to the colours before all available single men had joined the army.

Similar meetings of protest were held simultaneously in other cities.

MANY SMALL SUBSCRIBERS TAKE CANADIAN BONDS

At Least $75,000 will be Subscribed in Minneapolis.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., March 27. —Financiers participating here in the $75,000,000 Canadian loan are enthusiastic not only because of the prompt response of subscriptions but also because of the class of subscribers.

"Call are being received for small lots of two, three, five and ten and fifteen bonds," said one financier today. "This is an indication that the real investor, the general public, is taking a hand in the buying.

"At least $75,000 will be subscribed through Minneapolis clients.

RUSSIAN RUSE TOO CLEVER FOR GERMANS

According to some of the Danish newspapers the inhabitants of Randrup, a small town of Jutland, are still laughing at the daring and yet amusing manner in which a party of Russian prisoners outwitted their German captors and escaped over the border into neutral territory. The captives were engaged in farm work near the frontier and made up their minds that it would be possible for them to escape.

One of the young Russians, who had much ability as a mimic, studied the actions of the soldiers on guard. He made a study of the officers and of their characteristic Prussian form of speech. In a short time he was able to give commands in a way to make the best Prussian officers envious. He then coached the other prisoners in the details of his scheme and chose a time just after midnight to carry out his idea.

Lining his fellow conspirators up in military fashion, he gave to them each a long stick which easily could have been mistaken for a rifle in the darkness. He then marched them boldly to the spot where a German guarding squad was watching the border. Here the leader loudly commanded his men in German to halt and rattled off a volley of commands in his best Prussian style to the German guards. They were completely deceived and thought that a relief patrol had come to take their places. The Russian then gave the order for the patrol to line up in marching order.

Thinking the time had come for them to be taken off duty the Germans responded quickly. Then the Russian gave them the order to about face. At the same instant he shouted for his comrades to run, which they did with vigour. Before the Germans, taken completely by surprise, guessed what had happened the fugitives had dashed along the few yards of road which separated the two countries and were busily surrendering themselves to a patrol of Danish dragoons. The men were placed in a Danish detention camp.

BISHOP'S LONG TRIP TO SEE SOLDIER SONS.

KINGSTON, March 28. — Bishop Lucas of Mackenzie River Diocese came all the way from the far north to see his two sons, who are members of the 59rd (Queen's) Battery, which is shortly leaving for overseas service. Part of his long trip was made in dog sledge, and he slept in the open with the thermometer 60 degrees below zero.

MAPLE SYRUP SEASON IS IN NEAR FUTURE

With plenty of snow in the woods and the maple sap season near at hand, night frosts and sunny days are all that is necessary for a copious supply of syrup this spring. On the market Saturday farmers said that they had not yet turned their attention to the woods, but it should be only a short time until the flow begins, and there is every prospect that it will be a generous one.

"An attack by British seaplanes was delivered yesterday morning upon German airship sheds in Schleswig-Holstein, eastward of the Island of Sylt. The seaplanes were conveyed to their rendezvous close to the German coast by an escorting force of light cruisers and destroyers under Commodore Tyrwhitt.

"Three of the seaplanes which took part in the attack are missing. The destroyer Medusa was in collision with the destroyer Laverock, and it is feared that in the stormy weather which prevailed last night the Medusa may have been lost, but no misgivings are felt as to the safety of the crew. Two German armed patrol vessels were sunk by our destroyers.

"No detailed report has yet been received, but from Danish press messages it would appear that this operation, which was carried out within the enemy's waters, achieved its object."

The Laverock, 280 feet long, was built in 1914, and displaced 905 tons. She was armed with three 4-inch guns and two torpedo tubes. Her normal complement was 100 men. The latest available British navy records give no destroyer Medusa.

HUNDRED MEN FROM PRISONS SOME VETERANS OF BATTLEFIELD REDEEMING THEMSELVES AT FRONT

One Previously Mentioned for Distinguished Service Has Met a Soldier's Death—All Were First Offenders

OTTAWA, March 27. — The penitentiaries of Canada have sent a hundred men to the front. Most of them have fought and not a few have died in defence of the rights of society, against which they had offended in time of peace.

Mr. J. D. Turriff, when justice estimates were up, asked if men had been released from penitentiaries that they might enlist. Judge Doherty said that there were men in the uniform of the King who, when war broke, were in prison garb. More than one hundred had been released for military service, and from sixty to seventy had gone overseas with the first contingent, and had fought in the fierce encounters at St. Julien and Festubert. No more were being released, but the Department of Justice had no reason to regret what it had done; the men from the penitentiaries had been obedient, brave and soldierly in every case.

MANY HAD VOLUNTEERED.

When war was declared and word that Canadians were gathering for the fight, many behind prison walls volunteered. Some were able to show distinguished military records, and asked that they might once more risk their lives for their country. The matter was given serious consideration; the records of the prison volunteers were carefully investigated; their civil, military and prison lives were carefully reviewed; the military authorities were consulted. So the prison gates were swung open and a hundred men marched forth, with heads erect, to join the bayonet-bearers and redeem their records.

In the case of some of the prison volunteers the examination disclosed distinguished military careers. Every man released was a first offender. In every case, after looking over the records, the military authorities had asked for the services of the men.

MET SOLDIER'S DEATH.

One man was able to prove that he had previously been mentioned for distinguished performance on the battlefield. His short term in prison was nearly completed and he was released. Again he had shown soldierly qualities which gained him recognition for gallantry and he had squared accounts with society by bravery, facing a soldier's death.

There was no criticism of the Minister's policy from the opposite side, especially as the Minister had made it clear that releases had not been given on a wholesale scale.

PROVIDENCE IS GUIDING US IN THE MINUTEST DETAILS OF LIFE

An Able Address to Soldiers By Rev. Thos. H. Mitchell at St. Andrew's Church Sunday Morning

A detachment of the 93rd Battalion worshipped with the people of St Andrew's Sunday morning, and listened to a splendid address by Rev. Mr. Mitchell, who spoke on the "guidance of Providence," and some things which are standing in the way of the coming of the kingdom of God. His text was taken from Genesis 50:20: "But as for you, ye thought evil against me; but God meant it unto good, to bring to pass as it is this day, to save much people alive."

During the discussions of a gathering of literary men in Boston, a few years ago, their theme became: "What is the best told story in all literature?" Their decision was: the story of Joseph, as recorded in the last of the book of Genesis.

Joseph, the favourite of his father was hated by his brethren; was sold by them to a band of gypsies, who in turn, sold him to Potiphar; was blackmailed by Potiphar's wife, and thrown into prison, where he met a baker and a butler, whose dreams he interpreted. Two years later Pharaoh has a dream, the butler remembered Joseph, and related his experiences in the prison. Joseph interpreted Pharaoh's dream and was made governor of Egypt. A famine spread over the land and the brothers came down to buy corn from Joseph, who made himself known unto them. The father died and was buried, and the brothers thought Joseph would take revenge on them now that the old man was gone, but they were mistaken, as we see in the text, "God meant it for good," said Joseph.

Thus we have a grand theory of Providence, one that we need to-day.

Lucretius held that the gods had no concern with the world or human beings. Cicero maintained that gods conversed with heroes, but not with ordinary beings. Even Victor Hugo entertained the same idea. The Christian theory goes so far as to state that the very hairs of our heads are numbered. Christian doctrine says that Providence is guiding us in the minutest details of life. Anyone who has examined a hair under a microscope realizes that an intelligence created it, and that an intelligence takes care of it.

Applying this theory to our time to the outstanding facts of the war there are four or five things standing in the way of the coming of the Kingdom of God; while the Kaiser and his followers meant it for world domination it is rapidly ushering in the Kingdom.

Ignorance.

One thing standing in the way is ignorance. We have not known one another. We have been suspicious of each other. Nation has not trusted nation. We have come to realize that civilization cannot be built on force. Class is finding out class. The rich and poor are fighting together in the trenches, and are learning that God is the common maker of all. Nation is discovering nation. A book has been compiled recently with quotations from the text books of the schools of France and Germany, and the wonder is that there were no perennial wars between these nations. Truly the cause of the present war was an exaggerated nationalism.

Now we know the boundaries of Belgium, the problem of Poland has become real to us. A returned missionary from China states that the Chinese regard this war as one of the finest arguments for Christianity. They see that a materialistic civilization never abides unless permeated with the religion of Christ.

Indifference.

At a recent election a respectable citizen named Smith was opposed by a scalawag and was beaten, simply because some of his friends failed to support him. Sixty men of his own church neglected to vote at all. In the city of London, at the last election, only 62 per cent. of voters voted, and of the women who had the privilege of the franchise only 23 per cent. exercised it.

Intemperance.

What an obstacle it has been! Social service workers tell us that intemperance, extravagance and idleness are the three chief evils against which they have to fight, and the greatest of these is intemperance.

In one of our asylums they have a unique test for sanity. They ask the one to be tested to empty a large vat into which the water is flowing through a tap. If he turns off the tap they declare him sane, if he does not they send him to a cell. Judged by that standard for a long time. We license men to sell that which destroys our homes, and we build churches, reformatories penitentiaries and asylums to counteract it. Why, in the name of reason, don't we turn off the tap?

Russia has done it. France has banished absinthe; Britain, in a way is curtailing its sale, and Ontario has at last wakened up. When it is done the biggest obstacle to the coming of the Kingdom is out of the way.

Selfishness.

One other thing is selfishness—the most ugly thing in the universe. A selfish man in a home upsets everything that should be harmonious. There are very few selfish soldiers. They are getting a splendid training in unselfishness. Think of what the women are doing in the common cause. A moral benefit of the war is that it brings out the magnificent virtue of unselfishness and sacrifice.

What is the war doing for our soldiers?

A Chaplain has written a book entitled "With our Fighting Men at the Front." Says he: "Our men have discovered the unity of faith. It does not matter any more if a man is Anglican, Methodist, Presbyterian, or Roman Catholic, the ministry of the Chaplain is always received and no questions asked to his church. War's meaning a revival among the soldiers. One London soldier in writing to his mother, said: There is nothing here but soldiers and God. Another soldier writing to his home in England, says: There are no atheists in the trenches. If there are any in England send them over here."

Providence is Not Automatic.

Joseph did his part. Are we willing to do our part? Learn to do God's will. Get into sympathy with the Eternal One and the hour will come when nation will not lift up the sword against nation, and when the peoples of the earth will know no more.

—Paul Penman.

BATH JAIL OCCUPANTS SAW BARS

Left Water Running Into Sink to Deaden Sound of Operations

BATH, March 27.—Three prisoners in the county jail were caught Friday night after they had sawed out several bars of a cell. The prisoners are Jesse Palmer of Bath, in jail for alleged forgery, and McFarlin and Welch, held on the charge of an automobile theft at Corning several weeks ago.

The jail guards heard water running at a sink in one of the corridors and upon investigation found McFarlin engaged in sawing out a bar, the water having been left running to cover up the noise made by the sawing.

With the bars sawed out the prisoners could have gained access to a cold air shaft, and thence to the roof whence they could easily have gained their freedom. The guards allege that the three men were engaged in the plot, as five other saws were found concealed in the cells. Whether the saws were left by former prisoners or were smuggled in to these men lately is not known.

AN EX-REEVE DESIRES INFORMATION

Editor of The Examiner:

Sir,—Your news item of March 15 to hand, with an explicit understanding from the Commons' England, that no more horses should be purchased in Canada for war purposes. What is the object? Are our government officials grafting to such an extent that it has made it impossible for England to purchase them, or are the Canadian horses of an inferior class? Do you call that justice or just dealing with us? You ask for the young men and the prime of our country, and see us taxed up to the limit, and also responding freely to all patriotic calls. I think this kind of dealing has nearly reached its limit. A reply to the above, also an explanation, will be much appreciated. I am a good average taxpayers, also a good British subject, and only want fair play.

Yours truly,

Joseph Johnston,

Ex-Reeve of Township of Belmont and Methuen.

Italy Astounded That Turk Prince Was King's Cousin

Decoration Made Jussuf Izzedine a Relative of Emmanuel

ROME, March 3.—By Mail.—The recent suicide at Constantinople of Jussuff Izzeldine, the Turkish hereditary prince, developed that he at one time in the past was decorated with the Italian order of the Annunziata. The disclosure came as such a surprise to the great bulk of Italians that an official explanation had to be made. The Order of the Annunziata is not only the highest honour the King of Italy can bestow, but it ranks as one of the oldest and highest orders of knighthood in all Europe.

There are only thirty-three of the decorations, and upon the death of a member the gold collar, which is the insigna of the order, has to be returned to the king, who can then confer it on someone else. Each person who receives the decoration is elevated to the relationship of a cousin of the king of Italy. When, therefore, it became known that Jussuff Izzedine had been a cousin of King Victor, the Italian public wanted to know how it had come about. It developed that the order had been conferred on him in 1872 by King Victor Emmanuel, the Second, grandfather of the present king and founder of modern Italy.

Made by Mistake.

The conferring of the decoration was said to have been made through a mistake, easily explainable by the fact that Jessuff Izzedine, who only a mere boy then and that nothing was known personally about the Turkish royal family of Osmanli, except that it was the reigning family. Prince Jussuff, however, is known to have been very fond of the decoration and thereby hangs another tale. Upon the death of Murad V. Abdul Hamid, in ascending the throne, took possession of all the decorations which had been conferred upon his predecessor, sold them, and had the cash turned into his personal treasury.

Amongst the lot, there happened to be also, the gold collar of the Annunziata belonging to Prince Jussuff, and which under the rules of the order would have to be returned to King Victor upon the prince's death. Prince Jussuff was very sorry to have his uncle steal his decoration and accordingly in 1909 sent a special representative to Rome to have a new gold collar of the Annunziata made for him. Italy being at war just now with Turkey, it is doubtful if even this one will ever find its way back into King Victor's hands.

WAITE CONFESSES TO BUYING POISON

Declares That Father-in-Law Wanted to Commit Suicide

Alleged to Have Offered $1,000 to Maid to Corroborate His Story.

NEW YORK, March 27.—Confession was made to-day by Dr. Arthur Warren Waite, according to District Attorney Swann, that he bought the poison believed to have caused the death of his father-in-law, John E. Peck, of Grand Rapids, Michigan, but he asserted he made the purchase at the request of the millionaire, who was despondent over the death of his wife in January, and wanted to commit suicide.

Another sensational development late in the day was the statement made to Mr. Swann by Raymond Schinder, a private detective, that Dr. Waite had asked him to attempt to bribe Waite's negro maid, Dora Hillser, to corroborate the dentist's story. "If she will say in court that she heard Mr. Peck ask me to buy the arsenic," Schindler told the District Attorney Waite said, "and that she saw me give him the package unopened, I will give her a check for $1,000."

Dr. Waite, according to the detective, thereupon signed what purported to be a check for $1,000 to the order of the girl. This "check" is now in the possession of Mr. Swann.

Dr. Waite was taken to the prison ward at Bellevue Hospital to-night, where he is kept under the closest possible surveillance.

Mrs. Waite had no knowledge of her husband purchasing poison, Mr Swann said the dentist told him.

Mr. Swann said to-night he would proceed with his plan to charge Waite with first degree murder and to have him indicted on that charge.

Easter Will Not Be So Late For Next Twenty-six Years

Easter will be celebrated very late this year, falling on April 23.—Eleven years ago, Easter fell on April 23, and after the coming Easter it will not come again so late until 1943. April 25, 1943, will well mark the most advanced Easter during the whole stretch of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. It will not fall due again on April 23, however, until the year 2000. By that time the child born this year, if it survives, will be a tottering old man.

WEDDING BELLS

BAILEY—MONGOUR.

The wedding took place in St. John's church on Tuesday, March 21st, Rev. Mr. White officiating, of Pte. W. W. Bailey, 93rd Battalion, to Miss Dorothy Mongour of Peterborough, sister of Pte. A. Mongour of the 8th C.M.R. The bride was assisted by Mrs. Stewart of Peterborough, while the groom was supported by his brother, Pte. E. Bailey of the 93rd Battalion. Pte. and Mrs. Bailey are residing at 414 Dublin street, Peterborough.

OBITUARY

After an illness extending over some months, there passed away last night at ten minutes to seven at his late residence 159 Rubidge street, Mr. Bertram Read, in his thirty-ninth year. The late Mr. Read was born in Cheshire, England, where his father and one brother still resides. He came to Peterborough ten years ago, and during that time made a large number of friends. He was prominently identified with the Peterborough choral society, being practically the founder of the organization. He took a keen interest in all musical enterprises, giving his assistance and time to accomplish their success. He was a member of St. Andrew's choir. He was a man who was highly esteemed by all who knew him and the news of his death will cause deep regret among a host of friends.

He leaves to mourn his loss, a sorrowing wife and two children, as well as his father and brother in the Old Country. His brother Walter Read, predeceased him three years ago and another brother, William Read, was drowned at Stoney Lake, seven years ago.

The funeral will take place to-morrow afternoon at two o'clock from the above residence to the Little Lake cemetery.

J. B. Dunlop, inventor of the pneumatic tire, is still living. He is 77 years of age and quite active.

MACBETH.

A very small audience saw Mr. John E. Kellerd's masterly presentation of Macbeth at the Grand on Saturday night. The tragedy was beautifully played, Mr. Kellerd's work in the title role being fully up to the standard of his "Hamlet" the preceding evening. It is unfortunate that his visit to Peterborough was not greeted by larger audiences.

MAY INTERN CARDINAL

Vatican Fears Germany Will Take Harsh Measures With Mercier.

ROME, March 24.—The Messagero publishes a report that Cardinal Gasparri, papal secretary of state, has sent a long despatch to Cardinal Hartmann, Archbishop of Cologne, requesting him to intervene with the Emperor of Germany to prevent any measures being taken against Cardinal Mercier, and that he has also telegraphed to Cardinal Mercier urging him to observe the greatest prudence.

The situation between the Vatican and Germany, the newspaper says, is most delicate as a result of what is happening in Belgium, and the Vatican may be placed in a difficult position should Cardinal Mercier, as feared, be interned in Germany.

New York Irishmen will, this St. Patrick's Day, wear green paper emblems made in Japan, this year, instead of similar articles made in Germany as formerly.

History Has Repeated Itself In Striking Detail in the Struggle For Verdun

In 1792 as in 1914 the Prussians Approached the Fortress by Way of Longwy---Then as in 1916 the Prussians Approached the Stronghold in Exactly the Same Sector.

PARIS, March 27.—History has repeated itself with curious fidelity to detail in the struggle for Verdun and in some of its sidelights. In 1792 as in 1914, the Prussians approached the fortress by way of Longwy and in the same month of August. In 1792 as well as in 1914, Longwy fell after two days' bombardment. The Duke of Brunswick avoided the armies of the Marquis de Lafayette and de Luckner in 1792, and marched on Verdun as did the Crown Prince in 1914. In 1792 as in 1916, the King of Prussia was a spectator of the assault. Then as in 1916, the Prussians took the route by Ottnont and Haumont, and approached the stronghold in exactly the same sector as in 1916.

Goethe related the passage of the troops through Samogneux August 30, 1792, to bivouac at Bras, just south of the Cote du Poivre (Pepper Hill) the object of furious German assaults in 1916. Etan, Eix, Manheulles as well as Samogneux were the scenes of operations and would, as to-day, have figured in the official communique of the revolutionary government had there been such a thing.

In 1792 as in 1914, France was unprepared for war. Legislators had neglected to supply war material; Verdun was armed with only four pieces of heavy artillery and had a garrison of only 3,500 men; then as to-day the cry was "more cannon—more ammunition"; that was the demand made to the revolutionary leaders by Lieut.-Colonel Balbend, commanding the fortresses. His cry was unheard and he solicited and obtained of Lafayette the privilege of fighting in the ranks.

Nicolas Joseph Beaurepaire, who succeeded him, went to his post like a man approaching suicide. "Assure the legislative corps," he wrote, "that when the enemy has become master of Verdun, Beaurepaire shall have ceased to live."

The legislative assembly, impressed by the fall of Longwy, sent 3,000 rifles to Verdun—too late. The Prussian commander had occupied the place "in the name of Louis XVI., and Beaurepaire shot himself.

Verdun had 140 pieces of cannon and was garrisoned by 6,000 troops in 1870. It was again in the month of August that the Prussians poured into the Argonne, 122 years almost day for day, after the surrender of the place to the Duke of Brunswick, and the suicide of Beaurepaire.

The fortress had elements of both strength and weakness then in the estimation of so good an authority as Marshal von Moltke himself. "Thanks to its high walls and its deep ditches filled with water," he said, "Verdun was in a state to resist an assault absolutely. On the other hand it was surrounded and dominated on all sides by heights at the feet of which were villages and vineyards permitting the besiegers to approach very close to the exterior works."

Fierce Hand to Hand Fighting On the Austro-Italian Front

LONDON, March 28.—Prince August William, the Kaiser's fourth son, is to be Governor of the conquered Belgian territory.

ROME, March 28.—Three Austrian aircraft were brought down by Italians during a raid near Isonzo.

TORONTO, March 28.—Proposal for compensation for liquor men received a death blow in the Legislature.

PETROGRAD, March 28.—The Russian attack was renewed and capture two lines of trenches northwest of Postavy.

LONDON, March 28.—Fierce hand to hand fighting took place on the Austro-Italian front, the Italians capturing two lines of trenches with the bayonet.

LONDON, March 28.—It is officially announced that the British captured first and second line trenches on a six-hundred-mile front at St. Eloi, including a number of prisoners.

10,600,000,000 Marks in Loan

BERLIN, March 28.—Dr. Karl Helferich, Secretary of the Imperial Treasury, told the Reichstag to-day that the fourth German war loan had been a brilliant success, the subscriptions having reached 10,600,000,000 or marks not including subscriptions abroad and at the front.

It was declared that the German war loans have now reached a total of 36,500,000,000 marks, while the British loans have totalled only 19,000,000,000 marks, and those of France 11,944,000,000 marks.

As forecast in Berlin advices last night, the total in subscriptions for the fourth German war loan, incomplete as yet, according to Dr. Helfferich's statement, is less than for the third loan, but in excess of that for the second loan. Final figures on the third loan showed total subscriptions of 12,160,000,000 marks, while the subscriptions for the second loan were 8, 626,072,000 marks.

Ever Eat Grape-Nuts?

(Made in Canada)

There's a vast army of physical and mental workers who do.

One reason—its delicious nut-like flavour.

Another—it is easily and quickly digested—generally in about one hour.

But the big reason is—Grape-Nuts, besides having delicious taste, supplies all the rich nutriment of whole wheat and malted barley, including the "vital" mineral salts necessary for building brain, nerve and muscle.

Always ready to eat direct from the package. Grape-Nuts with cream or good milk is a well balanced ration—the utmost in sound nourishment.

Seven German Aeroplanes Bombarded Salonika Killing Greek Soldiers

German-Bulgarian Operations Now Assuming the Character of a General Attack on the Allies' Advanced Lines

SALONIKA, March 28.—In retaliation for the attack on German camps by French airmen, seven German planes yesterday bombarded Salonika, killing some Greek soldiers. The warships' fire drove them away.

ATHENS, March 28.—Despatches yesterday afternoon report German-Bulgarian operations now assuming the character of a general attack on the Allies' advanced line. Heavy artillery is being brought up.

WASHINGTON, March 28.—Turkey yesterday informed the United States that it was not their submarine that sunk the "Persia" in the Mediterranean recently.

TORONTO, March 28.—Port Credit inquest into the G.T.R. wreck on Thursday disclosed evidence that freight train crew were 22 hours on duty. The Engineer admitted dozing, and the fireman admitted sleeping.

PARIS, March 28.—Vast plans by which the Entente Powers hope to end the war by the present year are being made by the Allies' Council here. England has pledged to financially aid any countries lacking funds.

WASHINGTON, March 28.—The War Department announces the destruction of two aeroplanes being used in the Mexican campaign near Columbus.

Censors Buried In Mail Matter

Some Are Stolid, Others Amorous, But All Are Cheerful

LONDON, March 28.—A British regimental chaplain in the field writes the following description of the censoring of the soldiers' letters:

Pity the padre in the leaky postal wagon, knee-deep in picture postcards, love letters, brief acknowledgments of parcels, and stolid accounts of doings too epic for the written word. As postal censor we parsons often relieve keen, combatant subalterns, who would otherwise be fretting and pouring over the pencil scrawls which Tommy produces by the hundred thousand.

Each letter is carefully read for incautious revelations unreasonable grousing, and matter "calculated to alarm or depress" folks at home if published. Our soldiers know what not to say. What is more, they know they are better looked after than soldiers ever were before. The man to be checked is the "lonely soldier" who is after creature comforts and—such is public kindness—succeeds in coaxing a perfectly monstrous mail from home—to the fury and disgust of the postal section of our Royal Engineers.

So we clip the lonely soldier. He may be a good sort, and share the booty, but any extra stress thrown on our Field Post Office is very properly resented at headquarters. Then there is the too fluent amorist—a real nuisance to the censor, landed (and bewildered!) with five "darlings" and "ducks" to get safely back into the right envelopes; together with acres of heroic, screaming shells and V.C., deeds (entirely unrewarded), which I know took place miles from the firing line.

UNFINISHED LETTERS.

Very sad are unfinished letters of the dead. "Well, Sim, we are parading in a minute. Good-bye, and the dearest kiss. To be continued to-morrow!" Alas, there was no to-morrow! "The padre will censor this," I read again. "Look up to Heaven,' says he last Sunday," ——I said no such thing. 'We did ——and bang! came bombs from an Aviatik." "Consider the fields." says he—and up went a mine under our feet." "There is victory in the air," says he—but all we could see of it was poison-gas from a new shell."

In the main, Tommy's letter is stolid enough or gay. Hal and Jim have little gift for self-expression, whereas French soldiers translate their deep motions into real prose. Yet our men's poverty in this way reveals their real strength. You can't imprison or deprive a lad who tells his mother:

"We need more ground to bury these tin-hats!"

Men write gaily of their hair-breadth escapes. They give brief account of daily life in the "dog-kennel," with its door from a ruined cottage, and "Hotel Cecil" across it in sprawling chalk. "Have read of my death, but am well," is a strolling card. I pity the Adjutant-General's Department, charged with these endless casualty lists. I know a family who'd been in black six weeks for a son when he wrote them a "chirpy" letter from the prisoners' camp at Torgau! Letters from the dead are astonishingly frivolous.

I saw an anxious note at the end of one: "Do we have to give back the insurance?"

CENSORED 1,600 A DAY.

I have censored 1,600 letters in a day. It is tedious work and anxious. I once passed a seemingly trivial local allusion to a church service, regularly held in a certain spot. A few days later the congregation was plastered with shell from German batteries two miles away.

The average subaltern dislikes the role of censor, though it gives him new insight into the character of his men. I found that one officer whom I relieve at short notice had slipped a ten-shilling P.O. into a wistful note, hinting at mouth-organs and blank "brokeness" in the matter of funds. And that sub. was none too flush himself.

Tommy's news seems trivial enough to the outsider. Will close now. Whistle blowing us to business. What shall I bring from Berlin?"—how he'd got hung up on the mug-rag (barbed wire,) in a night attack. The finding of a stray pig in a ruined farm with "chops for lunch that morning."

GERM ON "HELLO" WIRE

Telephone "Bug" Makes Girls Brazen, Says Californian.

If telephones kept diaries, the literature of the world would be enriched by a curious document, the why and the wherefore of the new woman. According to Justice Elmer E. Johnson, of Alameda, Cal., who is advocating a bottler deal of marriage and an insistence on the clause "till death do us part," the telephone has taken a leading role in transforming the genus "girl" from the modest violet to the arrogant and independent rose.

Justice Johnson has detected a new germ lurking in the wires, which scurries through receiver and mouthpiece to the tongue of the maid as she stands chatting with a youth several miles away. This germ inoculates her with a boldness and a carelessness, he says, so that she speaks with a courage which would fade were the man face to face with her.

From the day when the first shy "hello" fluttered over the wires to the present hour, when long conversations are casually held, one can perceive a steady evolution from bashfulness to brazeness, according to Justice Johnson.

A little planning about a house, some large trees, with most of the planting along the boundaries, is desirable. Unsightly objects may be screened or covered up with planting.

HOLDS BABY FOR BILL

Weeping Mother Appeals to Judge for Return of Her Infant.

One of the most novel cases ever brought before the courts of Louisiana will be tried before Juvenile Judge Andrew H. Wilson in New Orleans.

A baby is the stake over which two women are at war. One is the mother, who is heart-broken at being separated from her child, while the other is a landlady who is holding the babe as security for a $30 board and room bill of the mother.

Mrs. C. C. Lard, pretty, young, a decided blonde, shocked the officials of the juvenile court when she appealed for the return of her baby from Mrs. Rose Didier, the woman with whom Mrs. Lard lives. The woman cried and begged for her baby.

Being complex, and without a parallel in Louisiana history, Judge Wilson was unable to do anything, but has ruled Mrs. Didier and the baby into court, when he will decide whether or not the baby can be held as security for board and lodging.

HIS EXPLANATION.

"Henry," said the travelling man's wife, "what does this mean? I found a receipted hotel bill in your pocket when you came back from your last trip and among the items is this one: 'Bar, $6.'"

"Why-er," stammered Henry, "you see, I had a lot of the firms money in my pockets that night, so I had the landlord put a bar on my door as a precaution against burglars."

CARS SPREAD ILLNESS.

Doctor Believes Overcrowding Causes 90 Per Cent. of Respiratory Diseases.

Many know that long street car rides in poorly ventilated cars result in headaches and feelings of heaviness. These are merely immediate effects.

Dr. Howard Lankester, Commissioner of health of St. Paul, Minn., says that 90 per cent. of all respiratory diseases are caused by poorly ventilated street cars during the winter months. He says further.

"When one considers the crowded conditions of the cars, many of the occupants suffering from respiratory diseases caused by the respective germs of such diseases and that thus people practically imbibe an atmospheric soup composed of carbon dioxide, bad smells and microbes, my estimate that 90 per cent. of all such respiratory diseases is brought about by the poorly ventilated street cars is not to be wondeerd at.

"It is my opinion that in a car crowded with 180 people or thereabouts, made to carry only sixty, good ventilation is an impossibility."

OBITUARY

MRS. A. ORR HASTINGS.

After an illness of four days, Mrs. A. Orr Hastings, wife of Dr. A. O. Hastings of Toronto, died early Sunday morning from pneumonia. Since the death of her mother, Mrs. J. B. Grafton of Dundas, three weeks ago, Mrs. Hastings had been ill, and when pneumonia set in on Thursday it developed rapidly. Mrs. Hastings was a daughter of the late J. B. Grafton, a clothing merchant of Dundas.

She was married to Dr. Hastings 24 years ago. Mrs. Hastings had been actively engaged in Red Cross work prior to her mother's death. As a prominent Church worker and a member of Central Methodist Church, she was an active figure in the church life of the city. Besides her husband she leaves three sisters and one brother: Mrs. (Dr.) Albert Dickson of Hamilton; Mrs. Harold wife of Dr. Harold of Kingston; Miss Nellie Grafton of Dundas, and Mr. James Grafton. The late Dr. Stewart Grafton, Spadina Avenue, was also a brother.

Nerves!!

—"On Edge"

—"Jumpy"

Yours is a case for Wincarnis

If your nerve centres have become weakened by overwork, worry or anxiety, they are unable to transmit the necessary nourishment, and the nerves become worn out and "on edge." Then it is that a sudden sound makes you "jump"—you get irritable—you suffer from neuralgia—you are restless and depressed. In this condition there is nothing to equal

WINCARNIS

Because, being a powerful nerve food, Wincarnis gets right to the root of the trouble, and, by creating a supply of new nerve force, stimulates and revitalises the whole nervous system. Try Wincarnis for "nerves." It is wonderful. Over 10,000 doctors recommend it.

HAD WEAK HEART HAD TO STAY IN BED

Many women are kept in a state of fear of death, become weak, worn and miserable, and are unable to attend to their household, social or business duties, on account of the unnatural action of the heart.

To all such sufferers Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills will give prompt and permanent relief. They do this by their calming, strengthening and invigorating action on the heart causing it to beat regularly and naturally, and in addition to this they tone up the whole nerve system.

Mrs. J. Day, 234 John St. South, Hamilton, Ont., writes: "I was so run down with a weak heart that I could not even sweep the floor, nor could I sleep at night. I was so awfully sick sometimes I had to stay in bed all day as I was so weak. I used three and a half boxes of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, and I am a cured woman to-day, and as strong as anyone could be, and am doing my own housework, even my own washing.

"I doctored for over two years, but got no help until I used your pills."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50c per box, 3 boxes for $1.25. They can be had at all druggists or dealers, or will be mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Shattered NERVES

How utterly weak and helpless one becomes when the nerves give way. Sleepless, nervous, irritable and despondent, life becomes a burden.

But there is Dr. Chase's Nerve Food to rebuild your exhausted nervous system, restore the action of your bodily organs and change gloom and despondency into new hope and courage. Try it—to-day. 50 cts. a box, at all dealers.

OUR SERIAL STORY

"Flower of the Gorse"

BY LOUIS TRACY

Even in the chaos of the hour Yvonne was conscious of a certain surprise at Raymond's singular foresight, but she took the proffered telegram and read:

"Yes. Arrived in Paris early yesterday. Residing Hotel Chatham. 'Duquesne.'"

"Ah, how thoughtful and clever of you!" she cried. "Can anything be done now? Suppose Madeleine is in the train, would Monsieur Duquesne meet her and urge her to return at once?"

"How would he recognise her?"

"Oh, dear! I had not thought of that. But it might be possible to telegraph a general description, and there will not be so many young women traveling alone in a train reaching Paris in the small hours of the morning that he should have no chance of picking out one in particular. I know it is asking a great favor of your friend; but he may act with decision if you hint at a matter of life or death. And it is all that. Poor Madeleine will never survive the shame of public scandal. If Madeleine would only come back, I should meet her on the way, and persuade her to go straight to her cousins in Quimperle. Don't you see, Raymond, she would be saved, saved? You have accomplished wonders already. Please don't hesitate, but send a telegram at once. I sha'n't know how to thank you if you succeed in this. But I forget. You cannot write. Let me write for you. Now what is Monsieur Duquesne's address?"

Yvonne, flushed with new hope, was seated already at a small writing table, pen in hand. For once Raymond was caught off his guard. He had not expected this development, and would vastly have preferred a friendly and sympathetic chat; but he dared not refuse the girl's excited demand. Moreover, he would be earning her gratitude and repaying some of Rupert Fosdyke's insults in the same breath. So he blurted out the information.

"Duquesne, 110 Avenue Kleber Paris."

Yvonne wrote rapidly. "Will this do?" he asked.

"Person mentioned in earlier message is probably decoying to Paris a Breton girl of twenty, Madeleine Dumoret, from her home in Pont Aven. She is believed to be in train due Saint Lazare 2 a.m., is good-looking, slim, of medium height, and quietly dressed. You are besought to discover her, and use all possible means to convince her that she ought to return. Her friend Yvonne will meet her at Quimperle on receipt of message, and promises that everything will be arranged satisfactorily. Her aunt, Madame Brissac, is grief-stricken and prostrate. Madeleine should come home if only for her sake."

"There Mr. Raymond—can I add anything to make it stronger, more emphatic? Should I say that all expenses will be paid?

"No," he said bending over her, and resting his left hand on her shoulder. "That is quite clear and understandable. Any man of experience should read between the lines that the underlying motive is vital and imperative to the last degree. If I were in trouble Miss Yvonne, I wish I dared think that you would display such heartfelt interest in my affairs."

"You—" she cried, rising hurriedly. "You are one of the best of men. You hardly realise yet what good you are achieving. Mrs. Carmac, I am sure, will appreciate your kind actions as I do. Shall I take the telegram to the postoffice?"

One moment. We have plenty of time. Should a message of that direct nature be despatched locally?"

Some of the light died out of the girl's eyes. The officials in the Pont Aven postoffice were discreet as any in France, and courteous beyond the average; but they all knew Madeleine! Still, Yvonne might be trusted to fight to the last ditch in her friend's behalf.

"There is a train to Quimperle with in half an hour she said. "Someone must go. If necessary I'll go myself. You are not fit to travel, Mr. Raymond. If only Lorry would come——!"

"You may leave the mission in my hands, Miss Yvonne," said Raymond suavely. "Indeed, rather than risk the journey over that bumping tramway, I'll hire an automobile, and reach Quimperle more quickly."

Barbe came in with a laden tray, and Raymond swallowed a cup of tea and ate some of Mere Pitou's famous cakes.

He was bidding his hostess an impressive farewell when Inggersoll and Tollemache appeared. Yvonne's father, observing men and events with a certain detachment in these days, was not drawn to the ungainly secretary. He was puzzled at finding the man there, and even bewildered by the warmth of Yvonne's introduction. But Raymond was master of himself now. He withdrew promptly, trusting to Yvonne's enthusiasm to make smooth the way for his next visit. And indeed his back was hardly turned before she plunged into a recital of the day's doings.

Her father listened quietly, passing no comment other than to express a brief but complete agreement with every step she had taken.

Then she hurried out, being restless until assured that her message had really started for Quimperle.

Ingersoll sighed deeply, rose to reach a tobacco jar from the mantel, and threw a question sidewise, as it were, at his companion, who was smoking meditatively, and apparently in a somewhat subdued mood.

"Lorry," he said, "what do you make of this chap Raymond.

"I've no use for him, Socrates, and that's a fact."

"Yes; but why?"

"That is what is bothering me. There are two points about his behavior that may have escaped you. In the first place, if Madeleine has gone to Paris by arrangement with that scamp Fosdyke, he of course will meet her at Saint Lazare, so what chance will Raymond's 'friend' have of intercepting her? Again, who is this Duquesne? I have a good memory, and reported in the newspapers about a month ago, a case in which a private inquiry agent of the name figured, and his address was in the Avenue Kleber. I don't profess to recall the number; but when name and street coincide it is safe to assume that Raymond's Duquesne and the other Duquesne are one and the same individual. Now the momentous question that presents itself is, Why should Raymond be in prior communication with a private inquiry agent in Paris?"

"I can't guess."

Ingersoll stooped, and tapped his pipe on one of the heavy iron dogs himself, he drew a labored breath, like one who braces his nerves to face a dreaded but unavoidable ordeal.

"Then I'll tell you," he said. 'Mrs. Carmac is Yvonne's mother. She left me soon after Yvonne was born—went off to her people in the States. There after some delay, she secured a divorce. Later I heard that she had married Carmac, who was immensely rich, while I could barely afford to maintain a small flat in Montmarte. Carmac was not a bad sort of fellow in his way. He was I believe, devoted to Stella, my wife. Soo too was better suited to him than to me.

"But Carmac, though of Southern birth, had become a naturalised Englishman, having, I understand some ambition toward a political career on this side. Now I doubt very much whether the divorce proceedings were valid according to British law, and a wife takes her husband's nationality. Had I been wise and dispassionate, I should have given Stella her full freedom. But I did not—may Heaven forgive me! I was so utterly crushed after leaving Paris and seeking sanctuary in Pont Aven that I disregarded her entirely. None of my associates knew where I had gone. Every sort of effort was put forth to find me, but without success. Eighteen years ago, Lorry, Pont Aven was a long way from Paris. There was no railway, and communication with the outside world was mainly by sea.

"At last, despairing of any assistance from me, Stella and Carmac risked everything on the American decree. They were married openly. The wedding was announced in all the society newspapers. Even I, buried alive here, read of it. But if this question were raised, it might be held in England that Stella is still my wife in the eye of British Law.'

Ingersoll made this astounding statement in a voice so calm and free from emotion that Tollemache stared at him in blank amazement. Of course events had given the younger man some inkling of the truth; but he had never imagined anything so disastrously far-reaching.

"Good Lord!" he gasped. "That is terrible—that means all sorts of beastly complications!"

What They Do

DAVISVILLE, ONT.

"I had trouble with my Kidneys and Bladder so I got a sample of Gin Pills and followed directions. I felt better after the first dose and I kept taking them for a month.

One day, Mr. Simpson, of this town, told me about the trouble he had with his kidneys, and I recommended him to try GIN PILLS, and gave him one to take. The next day, he bought some for himself, and both he and his wife have derived great benefit from them." HERBERT H. BAUER.

On Saving.

"The late James Molloy," said a music publisher, "wrote numerous songs now and then, but it is as the author of 'Love's Old Sweet Song' that he will be remembered.

"Yet his humor was quick, caustic, bright, clean and pure. He liked to make fun of people who lived in the country. I once heard him say in London to a Devon man:

"'Why do you live in the country, anyhow?'

"'So as to save money,' was the reply.

"'Are vegetables and milk and meat cheaper?'

"'They are, on the contrary, slightly dearer.'

"'How do you save, then?'

"'No opera, $50 a year. No restaurant dinners, $100 a year. No theater, $100 a year. No taxicab fares, $50 a year. No distractions of any kind, $75 a year.'

"'Look here,' said Mr. Molloy, 'wouldn't you save money if you died?'"—New York Tribune.

INSPIRED AUTHORS.

Ideas Come to Them, It Would Seem, in Spite of Themselves.

Bernard Shaw has stated more than once that he is "inspired." "I am pushed," he says, "by a natural need to set to work to write down conversations that come into my head unaccountably. At first I hardly know the speakers and cannot find names for them. Then they become more and more familiar, and I learn their names. Finally I come to know them very well and discover what it is they are driving at and why it is they have said and done the things I have been moved to set down."

Other writers and painters, too, have described their processes in a similar way. William Blake was positive and emphatic in describing himself as a mere amanuensis, writing down the words that were audibly spoken to him, and he painted in the same way from a model set before him even as visible to him alone. Rodin, the French sculptor, gave his account to the same idea of models visible to the eye of the artist. Dickens said that his characters were actually visible and audible to him, and it will be remembered that "Kubla Khan" was dictated to Coleridge while he slept.—London Spectator.

He Joined Up.

A Liverpool contemporary vouches for this story. Religious instruction was in progress at a Liverpool school, and the master asked:

"What did St. Paul do at Derbe?"

The reply given at any rate showed an appreciation of the present national situation, if not exactly an intimate acquaintance with St. Paul's achievements, for the answer was:

"He joined up under the 'Derbe' scheme, sir."

Sleeping to Order.

The late Lord Alverstone could go to sleep at any time and wake up at a predetermined hour. This exceptional capacity has also been attributed to the great Duke of Wellington and to Lord Roberts.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

AUNT ALINE'S TRYST.

The Coming of the Man She So Anxiously Awaited.

By JOHN ROXBURY.

"Why, Aunt Aline! How pretty you look! What have you been doing to yourself? And where are you going?"

"Is it so unusual for me to look nice, Dollie?"

Miss Sherwin turned from the glass before which she had been giving a final touch to the soft brown hair that waved around her white forehead and smiled quizzically at her niece.

"No," returned the little matron with cordial sincerity; "you always look lovely to Dan and Neil and me. But you never would buy yourself pretty clothes while we were with you, and as you were always doing something for us you seldom took time to look at yourself. That new golden silk is wonderfully becoming, and that necklace at your throat, with the quaint brooch of coral and silver, is most artistic. And you have such a pretty pink color in your cheeks. One would think you were a young girl going out to meet your lover."

"You mustn't come flattering me," she said. "And—I don't wish to hurry you, but you'll miss your train to town if you stay much longer."

"Mercy me! So I will!" And with a hasty glance at the clock and a hurried kiss she rustled away at a rapid rate.

Miss Sherwin turned again to the mirror when she was alone. Dollie was right. She did not look her twenty-nine years. Indeed, the face that smiled back at her was very sweet in its bright serenity. The lips that parted over gleaming white teeth were full and rosy. And the large gray eyes, looking forth from under dark brows and lashes, had a beaming brilliance.

"Maurice won't see much change in me," she said as she put on her hat. She slipped on a wrap and took up her gloves. But suddenly she stood still, shaken by the cruel dread. Suppose he were not there! It was a long journey here from Australia. Accidents innumerable were occurring every week. What if he were the victim of one? What if he were ill and could not make the trip?

The one greatest dread of all she did not voice even to her inmost consciousness.

"How foolish you are, Aline Sherwin!" she said, with an impatient little toss of her head. "His last letter said he would meet you at the old trysting place on this day, the anniversary of our engagement there. Maurice would never break his word."

She walked at a brisk rate the many blocks which lay between her home and the park. The charming suburban pleasure ground was gorgeous in its autumnal robes of amber and crimson and living gold. There was a continual drifting of glowing leaves through the blue, hazy air. And everywhere children were making merry, running and laughing and playing games.

But when Alice Sherwin reached the great stone fountain where the leaping water no longer glittered her heart sank with sudden, sharp disappointment. There was no one there but a gray haired, spectacled man, who glanced up at her approach only to bend instantly again over the paper he was reading. She took out her watch and consulted it.

"My watch is fast! I am ten minutes too soon! How foolish of me to—to fear!" she said.

She walked up and down the gravelled path near the fountain. To sit still was impossible. She watched the different avenues up which he might come. It was ten years since they had parted. Five minutes gone! At 3 he would be there, he had written—seven minutes!

And he need never have gone away. If it had not been for Mary's unexpected death she might have gone with him. But Aline had declared herself bound to take care of her sister's children.

Six months ago freedom had come to her. Dan was a man and prospering. Dollie was married, and Neil had gone to live with her. So Aline Sherwin wrote to her lover that she was waiting for him.

She started, and her reticule fell to the ground. Three, and he was not here! Each clang of the bell had struck on her heart like a blow.

"You have dropped your bag!" The man on the bench picked it up and offered it to her, lifting his hat. "I'm afraid you are disappointed," he said pleasantly. "You were expecting some one?"

She hardly glanced at him. But she was in the mood for confidence, and his voice was sympathetic.

"Yes," she said and sat down. "A friend who has been long abroad was to have met me here this day, this hour, and he has not come."

"I've been a great traveler myself," the man said. "Where did your friend live abroad?"

"In Australia." Her eyes were still seeking an advancing figure along the paths that led to this fountain.

"I've been there. But of course it's a mighty extensive country, and the cities are populous."

"I suppose so," she assented abstractedly. Her heart was like lead within her. "It would be absurd to suppose you had known Maurice Farrar there."

"Let me see," he repeated musingly. "Yes, I did know a man of that name. What did your friend look like?"

"He was straight and handsome," she returned dreamily. "He had brown, beautiful eyes, a classic, clean shaven face and curling black hair."

"Oh, that isn't the man I know at all," he said positively. "The Farrar I know is rather stout and bearded and quite gray."

Miss Sherwin nodded indifferently. She glanced again appealingly at the clock in the tower. Fifteen minutes past 3! He was not coming.

"There is no use waiting," she said, rising. All the joyousness seemed to have left her. "Maurice would be here—if he were alive!"

How dreary the golden day had grown, how cold! And what a moan there was in the wind, a desolate cry that found its echo in her heart.

The man on the bench sprang erect, a straight, robust figure. He thrust his smoked glasses in his pocket, swept off his hat and held out eager arms.

"Aline!" he cried. "Maurice is here!"

For one wild, stunned, incredulous moment she stared at him. Then she took a faltering step forward. His arms closed around her as she sobbed out her gladness on his breast. Marked by exile and labor, prematurely gray, and yet the same—the old sweet smile, the old loving eyes!

"It was no deliberate deception, dear. It was only when I saw you approaching that I remembered the glasses I must wear in strong light since and slipped them on. I cannot read with them on," he laughed, "but I beat over the paper just the same. My dearest own girl, will you forgive me? You have kept your girlish beauty. The fever that made my hair gray makes me look older than I am."

Her color had come back in a rose red tide. She smiled up at him, standing stalwart and dignified before her, and she cried to him: "You are handsomer than ever, Maurice! But even if you were really bent, and crippled—yes, and blind—you would be, as you've always been, the only man in the wide world for me!"

And now the leaves had a merry rustle and the wind a song of joy.

BRONCHITIS

NEGLECTED COLD.

Bronchitis starts with a short, painful, dry cough, accompanied with rapid wheezing, and a feeling of oppression or tightness through the chest. At first the expectoration is a light color but as the trouble progresses the phlegm arising from the bronchial tubes becomes of a yellowish or greenish color, and is very often of a stringy nature.

Bronchitis is usually at its worst in the morning on account of the phlegm becoming lodged in the bronchial tubes during the night, and it very often takes some time coughing and gagging before you can get the throat clear of the phlegm.

When this happens you may be sure that if the bronchitis is not attended to immediately it will sooner or later develop into pneumonia, or some other more serious lung trouble.

Mrs. Ray Conner, Greenwood, Ont., writes: "I must tell you what Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup did for me. Whenever I got a cold I would be troubled with bronchitis, and sometimes I would almost choke to death. After taking two bottles of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup I was cured."

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup is 25c and 50c. per bottle. See that you get the genuine.

CANADA AS A KNIGHT

Famous German Suspect so Described Our Part in War

Ignatius T. Lincoln, the famous spy suspect, once wrote of the events that led up to the European outbreak of August, 1914, through the analogy of a chess board. The main figures and countries in Europe are put down as follows: The Players: King Edward and Kaiser Wilhelm II. The King: Russia. The Queen: France. The Two Knights: Canada and Australasia. The Two Bishops: Italy and Servia. The Two Castles: Japan and Portugal. Pawns: Belgium, Persia, Manchuria, Mongolia, Balkans, Turkey, Morocco, and Egypt.

Austria vs. Hungary

The Austrian is, by tradition, politically a tyrant and reactionary. He was the chief foe of the progress of liberty in Europe throughout the nineteenth century. Socially and individually, however, he is an amiable and cultivated person, and we may hope to be friends with him again at no distant date. The Hungarian, except for the accident of his inclusion in the Dual Empire, is a libertarian, a nationalist, and the bitterest possible foe of Pan-Germanism. We can afford to regret deeply that he is forced to fight against us, and to look forward to resuming pleasant relations with a fine race of gentlemen and Christians as soon as possible.—Book's Weekly.

Visitor Says Canadians Need Not Worry Over Victory

Mr. Yale Kurtzmanoff, a trapper, and member of the fur-dealing firm of Kurtzmanoff, Sons & Co., of Irkutsk, who was in Montreal, tells the people of Canada to "not be alarmed about Russia, for she has nine million men against Germany's and Austria's 3,500,000, and it has much more ammunition than have the Central Powers on our front." The amount saved by the people now and in the future, through the abolition of vodka, will go a long way towards recouping the nation for the losses sustained in the war, says Mr. Kurtzmanoff. DOCTOR ADVISED OPERATION AS ONLY CURE FOR PILES

It is by the cure of extreme cases like this that Dr. Chase's Ointment has won the reputation of being about the only actual cure for piles—itching, bleeding and protruding piles.

Mr. Samuel Parker, fruit grower, Grimsby, Ont., has made the following declaration before Mr. W. W. Kidd, Notary Public, of the same place: "I do solemnly declare that I was troubled with bleeding Piles and was advised to go to the hospital to have an operation performed. My wife said 'No, get a box of Dr. Chase's Ointment.' I did so and have used it according to directions while living in Manitoba, and obtained a complete cure, for I have never been troubled with Piles since. I am now 70 years of age and want to recommend Dr. Chase's Ointment to all sufferers from Piles. My wife has used it for itching skin and obtained complete cure."

Mrs. William Schettler, Spy Hill, Sask., writes: "I have used Dr. Chase's Ointment with great success as a treatment for Piles. About 15 years ago I had this ailment very bad and suffered greatly. By using Dr. Chase's Ointment a complete cure was affected and I have never had a return of the old trouble. It is undoubtedly the best Ointment made and no family should be without it."

Put Dr. Chase's Ointment to the test and it will not disappoint you. Sixty cents a box, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Ltd., Toronto.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

CHILD'S APRON DRESS.

By Anabel Worthington.

It is not altogether with the idea of saving that we dress a child in an apron over under a warm coat, so that he may enjoy the many pleasures of winter sports—especially sleigh riding—but because the arms and limbs have full liberty in a most comfortable garment. Later on, when the weather becomes warm, this same garment will take the place of the dress-waist and the child will be cool and comfortable and dressed, just the same. An apron dress that will serve beautifully for the purpose of protecting a good dress or suit, and quite properly as a dress or suit for practical wear, is shown in the illustration.

No. 7671 This is made with a box plait in each half of the fronts, forming a panel across the waist, where they lose their fullness to give fulness to the skirt section. The closing is made at the centre back with buttons from the neck to the point where the straps that are stitched at the side back seams confine the folds of the apron to give the same neat effect to back as in front. A novel shaped patch pocket is ornaments either side. A trimming of the color and neat cuffs finish the neck and sleeves.

This pattern is cut in sizes 4, 6, 8 and 10 years.

It will require for a child of six years 2¼ yards of 36 inch material and ¾ yards of braid to trim if a more dainty finish is desired.

You may obtain the pattern by sending 10 cents to the office of this publication.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

Leopard's Ideas On Posing in Bed Are Boisterous

Exciting Times in New York Hotel With Pet from African Wilds.

NEW YORK, March 27.—"Leopard—A large and ferocious spotted cat of South Asia and Africa. It is somewhat arboreal and often lies in ambush for its prey, which consists of almost all animals weaker than itself. Sometimes even human beings are attacked."

Noah Webster, in his best seller, said this about leopards and most everybody believes him. But Miss Ethel Steward-Forster, who is living at the Majestic Hotel, says Mr. Webster is entirely wrong, never had a speaking acquaintance with any of the beautiful, sinuous, parlor rug family and is doing well bred leopards an injustice with his slanderous impressions of them.

Miss Steward-Forster comes from London and is a sister of a baroness somebody in Berlin, and just to prove that Mr. Webster's idea of a leopard is erroneous she arrived at the Majestic on Saturday in a taxicab accompanied by a leopard about the size of a Newfoundland dog. Half a dozen doormen who flew to assist her, took a look at the inside of the vehicle and suddenly found occupation in other directions.

Mr. Copeland Townsend, owner of the hotel, walked straight out to the curb to tell Miss Steward-Forster that his place was no annex of the menagerie. But when he glanced into the honest eyes and gleaming teeth of the leopard he became a diplomatist at once. Yes, he believed Miss Steward-Forster that the unchained smirking feline was her household pet, absolutely harmless and would obey her every command.

Oriental Rugs as a Dish.

So he allowed the two to enter, and Claude—that's the leopard's name—immediately displayed his aesthetic taste by trying to swallow the $2,000 Oriental rug on the foyer floor. Mr. Townsend knew right away that he had met an exceptional pet.

Miss Steward-Forster was assigned to rooms on the seventh floor, one special suite being arranged for Claude. But after maturer deliberation some one suggested that perhaps Claude might snore in his sleep and wake up persons in the hotel.

Then they thought of a better place he might like. They took him away down stairs into a wire wound room where they store the special dinner china and fine cut glass.

They gave a reception for Claude yesterday afternoon at the hotel Miss Steward-Forster said she would show how lovely and sweet Claude was, and moreover, she would have her picture taken with the leopard lying beside her in bed.

Everything was there. A small bed was set in the centre of the room and white sheets stretched around so the picture would be just as Claude would like it. There were a score of proper persons at the reception, including photographers, reporters, nervous hotel employees and the like.

Claude Spoils the Party.

Miss Steward-Forster, arrayed in a white, fancy dress, stood inside the room, but back of the opened outer wooden door of the cage. Laurens Jansen, who helps her take care of the gentle Claude, spoke sweetly to the leopard, but the animal would not come forth.

Jansen then coaxed and coaxed but Claude would not come out. Miss Steward-Foster coaxed, but Claude was immovable. Then Jansen put chunks of meat in a line to induce Claude to come out and get them. Claude Streached forth a huge paw, jerked the meat into the cage and ate it.

As a last resort Jansen crawled half into the cage and pulled the leopard to the front, but that was as far as he could get him. Two paws that seemed almost as big as elephant's feet, blocked the way Jansen hampered the leopard with the butt of his long black-snake whip.

Bang! Out of the cage like a streak flew yellow thirteen-inch shell shot Claude. He aped through the air like an arrow, landed clear across the room, smashed against a shelf of gold-rimmed dishes and sent them crashing to the floor. With his tail he knocked over another tower of plates and three piles of cut glass at almost the same stroke. He bounded to the other side of the room, hurling over another thousand dollars worth of plates and demolishing a $100 camera in his flight.

Limitation on Running.

At the first burst of the leopard the spectators turned. The only reason they did not run ten miles was because the carrion was only fifty feet long.

Jansen had thrown himself on top of the leopard, and grabbed him by the throat and ear. He cuffed Claude and beat him with his whip. But the animal fought hard to escape the grip of the trainer, digging his claws into the legs of the man.

Jansen finally fought the leopard back to its cage, half carrying it. He tied the animal by his chains to the cage bars and then left the room quickly. He was badly wounded, his left hand being lacerated on both palm and back, and his right leg was torn. But he smilingly said it was nothing and he could dress his wounds in a few minutes.

Miss Steward-Forster then stood beside the cage, speaking softly to Claude feeding him raw meat. She finally coaxed the animal to get up on top of the cage and was making fair headway in restoring the animal's calm when the spectators took heart enough to return.

Miss Steward-Forster said there was too much electricity in the air—the dynamos were whirring about 40 feet away. Some of those present thought there was more electricity in Claude himself. Claude could not be induced at all to have his picture taken and his few cantankerous moments spoiled the whole party.

Some one remarked that while Miss Steward-Forster might know something about leopards, Noah Webster was named after a man who handled a whole boat load of animals all by himself, and he ought to know.

UGH! ACID STOMACH, SOURNESS, HEARTBURN, GAS OR INDIGESTION

The Moment "Pape's Diapepsin" Reaches the Stomach All Distress Goes

Do some foods you eat hit back—taste good, but work badly; ferment into stubborn lumps and cause a sick, sour, gassy stomach? Now Mr. or Mrs. Dyspeptic, jot this down; Pape's Diapepsin digests everything, leaving nothing to sour and upset you. There never was anything so safely quick, so certainly effective. No difference how badly your stomach is disordered you will get happy relief in five minutes, but what pleases you most is that it strengthens and regulates your stomach so you can eat your favourite foods without fear.

Most remedies give you relief sometime — they are slow, but not sure. "Pape's Diapepsin" is quick, positive and puts your stomach in a healthy condition so the misery won't come back.

You feel different as soon as "Pape's Diapepsin" comes in contact with the stomach—distress just vanishes—your stomach gets sweet, no gases, no belching, no eructations of undigested food, your head clears and you feel fine.

Go now, make the best investment you ever made, by getting a large fifty-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin from any drug store. You realize in five minutes how needless it is to suffer from indigestion, dyspepsia or any stomach disorder.

A CHILD GETS CROSS, SICK AND FEVERISH WHEN CONSTIPATED

Look, Mother! If Tongue Is Coated Clean Little Liver and Bowels

If your little one's tongue is coated, it is a sure sign the stomach, liver and bowels need a gentle, thorough cleansing at once. When your child is cross, peevish, listless, pale, doesn't sleep, eat or act naturally; if the breath is bad; stomach sour, system full of cold, throat sore, or if feverish, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the clogged-up, constipated waste, sour bile and undigested food will gently move out of the bowels and you have a well, playful child again.

Sick children needn't be coaxed to take this harmless "fruit laxative." Millions of mothers keep it handy because they know its action on the stomach, liver and bowels is prompt and sure. They also know a little given to-day saves a sick child tomorrow.

Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which contains directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly on the bottle. Beware of counterfeits sold here. Get the genuine made by "California Fig Syrup Company."

KEEP URIC ACID OUT OF JOINTS

Tells Rheumatism Sufferers to Eat Less Meat and Take Salts

Rheumatism is easier to avoid than to cure, states a well-known authority. We are advised to dress warmly; keep the feet dry; avoid exposure; eat less meat; but drink plenty of good water.

Rheumatism is a direct result of eating too much meat and other rich foods that produce uric acid which is absorbed into the blood. It is the function of the kidneys to filter this acid from the blood and cast it out in the urine; the pores of the skin are also a means of freeing the blood of this impurity. In damp and chilly cold weather the skin pores are closed thus forcing the kidneys to do double work, they become weak and sluggish and fail to eliminate the uric acid which keeps accumulating and circulating throughout the system, eventually settling in the joints and muscles causing stiffness, soreness and pain called rheumatism.

At the first twinge of rheumatism get from any pharmacy about four ounces of Jad Salts put a tablespoonful in a glass of water and drink before breakfast each morning for a week. This is said to eliminate uric acid by stimulating the kidneys to normal action, thus ridding the blood of these impurities.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, harmless and is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia and is used with excellent results by thousands of folks who are subject to rheumatism. Here you have a pleasant, effervescent lithia-water drink which helps overcome uric acid and is beneficial to your kidneys as well.

MONTREAL, March 24.—Another step was taken in the Empress of Ireland vs. Storstad case yesterday when counsel for all the interested parties held a joint conference with W. Simpson Walker, K.C., Registrar of the Admiralty Court.

The claims totalled $3,075,429.31, and it was agreed that these be reduced to $2,888,888.01. In addition, however, the enormous costs in the case have to be taken into consideration; and these by law, take precedence over all other claims. The Canadian Pacific Railway claim of $3,000,000 was reduced to $2,406,822. Some of the claims had been filed too late; some took precedence over others. Some were privileged.

Enemy's Works in Parroy Woods Have Been Captured By French

All the German Occupants Were Killed or Captured and the French Blew Up the Position---No Intantry Fighting is Reported in the Neighbourhood of Verdun---Sussex Case Causes Great Anxiety in the United States.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

PARIS, March 28.—French troops captured an enemy work in the Parroy woods, fifteen miles east of Nancy, killing or capturing all the German occupants, the War Office announced this afternoon. The French then withdraw after blowing up the position.

LONDON, March 28.—The British steamer Empress of Midland has been sunk. All aboard her were saved.

BRITISH DROP BOMBS ON TURKS' POSITION

Examiner Special:

LONDON, March 28.—A successful aerial raid on the Turkish advance base at Bir-El-Hassanah, one hundred miles east of the Suez Canal, is reported from Suez. Forty bombs were dropped on the Turkish camp, which was set on fire. Other bombs hit a reservoir and buildings erected by the Turks in the last few months. One British airman routed single-handed, a body of Turkish infantry. Descending to within two hundred feet, he approached the Turks from behind, and opened fire with his machine gun. The Turks fled in a panic. All the aeroplanes returned in safety, having flown some two hundred miles.

GRAVE STRIKES AMONG CLYDE MUNITION WORKERS

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, March 28.—Grave strikes among the machinists at Clyde are holding up the manufacture of big guns, Christopher Addason, Under-Secretary for Munitions, informed the House of Commons, this afternoon.

The strikes were inaugurated for the purpose of forcing the Government to repeal the Conscription Act and other measures. Addason said six of the agitators have been removed from the factories, and the Government is considering punishing them and taking sharp measures to meet the situation.

The munition works at Clyde have been hot beds of anti-conscription propaganda for several months. On one occasion Lloyd George was hooted by a crowd at Clyde when he urged the workers to speed up the production of munitions.

Berlin Report of the Fighting Around St. Eloi

Special to The Examiner:

BERLIN, March 28.—The fighting around St. Eloi, where the British launched heavy attacks against the German lines, is developing into what may prove to be a strong enemy offensive, the War Office reported this afternoon.

No Infantry Fighting on Verdun Front

Special to The Examiner.

LONDON, March 28.—No infantry actions occurred on the Verdun front last night, Paris despatches reported to-day. German and French artillery engaged in lively exchanges northwest of the fortress.

Artillery Fighting is Spreading in the West

Special to The Examiner.

BERLIN, March 28.—Reports from the western front say that the artillery exchanges are now spreading to sectors which have been quiet for several months, as if indication of heavy spring fighting.

WASHINGTON, March 28.—Whether the United States on proof that the Sussex and Englishman were victims of German torpedoes, will first allow diplomacy to take its course, or whether relations shall be broken off immediately, was discussed to-day by President Wilson with his cabinet, and with Senator Stone, his chief Congressional adviser on foreign affairs. Both cabinet members and Senator Stone were expected to tell the President he would be backed by Congress and the public if he should take the more drastic course. Meanwhile the State Department was gathering every bit of possible evidence, in line with the determination of President Wilson not even to make an enquiry of the German Government untill all phases of the question had been conclusively examined by this government.

Sportsmen's Champs To Perform Here

Next Tuesday night will be a red letter one for the Sporting fraternity of the city when a big smoker and assault-at-arms will be held in the Armouries under the auspices of the Peterborough Sportsmen's Patriotic Society and the 93rd Battalion. The Sportsmen's Battalion of Toronto is cooperating with the 93rd in the event and Lt.-Col. R. H Greer and Capt. Tom Flanagan of the Sportsmen's will be here to assist, bringing with them a string of the well-known boxers who are members of the 180th, including Pte Danny Johnston for the past two years welterweight champion of Canada. It will be the greatest sporting event of the year, and no doubt the Armouries will be crowded.

FRUIT BUSINESS CHANGED HANDS

The good-going fruit and fish business, known as the City Fruit Market, 208 Charlotte Street, hitherto carried on by Mr. Peter De Carlonis, has been taken over by Mr. James Long, formerly in the employ of the W. J. Oak fruit business. Mr. De Carlonis is giving up business on account of his health and intends going into the market gardening business, by which he hopes to recover his strength by good, full doses of all outdoors. Mr. Long enjoys a good reputation as a careful handler of fruit, and should continue to make the City Fruit Market a good live delicatessen.

FIRE AT THE C.G.E. LAST EVENING

At eleven o'clock last night the Fire Brigade was called to the Canadian General Electric works, where a fire had broken out in the brass-finishing department, among some books and papers. The blaze didn't cause much damage, but considerable was done by water.

SEEKS AN ORDER RESTRAINING MUTUAL BENEFIT SOCIETY

William Drain of This City is Plaintiff in an Action Instituted Against Catholic Mutual Benefit Association of Peterboro'

CASE NOT CONCLUDED

TORONTO, March 28.—William Drain of Peterborough, yesterday brought an action before Mr. Justice Middleton at Osgoode Hall to obtain against the Catholic Mutual Benefit Association of Peterborough an order restraining the association from putting into force a tariff of rates passed at the 1913 convention. He maintains that the directors have no right to discriminate among members, and on his own behalf and on behalf of another member under the age of 65 he maintains that the directors have no right to apply $640,000 of an accumulated reserve toward the relief of members over the age of 66 years, declares that the money belongs to the whole association, and that the application of it as suggested would be detrimental to the other members. The case was not concluded. Mr. Daniel O'Connell, K.C., is representing the plaintiff.

Was Elected By Acclamation

STURGEON POINT, March 28.—At the nomination proceedings held yesterday for the purpose of nominating a candidate to fill the vacancy in Sturgeon Point council, Mr. B. L. McLean was the only candidate nominated. He was, therefore, elected by acclamation.

Council Experiences Rather Quiet Week

This is the week of civic calm following the fitful fever accompanying aldermanic concentration upon the estimates.

It is safe to predict a meeting and a febrile relapse before what some would unjustly call the natal day of Aldermen. Monday night will see the regular April meeting of the council and a couple of committees will likely give their files another once over. And in spite of the time already spent and the worry, Monday night is likely to see another effort to cover the ground that has grown familiar of late but with the object of undoing what has already been done.

ALLIES' CONFERENCE MEANS THE END FOR GERMANY

Special to The Examiner:

PARIS, March 28.—The Allies' great war conference was resumed to-day at the Foreign Office. "The Allies," said the Temps, "are fully aware that harmony of operations on all fronts is the price of victory. They are willing to make mutual sacrifices. When the conference adjourns to-night, the world's mightiest preparations for war will be complete. All our resources will be in play. The Allies will be able to hasten, under the best conditions, the end of the nightmare that has been weighting down civilization for twenty months. Germany is aware of her danger. The Verdun drive was her mightiest attempt to stave off defeat. Failing at Verdun, she must now wait chastisement."

SOME EXCUSES FOR NOT ENLISTING ARE ANSWERED TO-DAY

Read Over the List of Questions and Answers and See if Any Meet Your Case---93rd Battalion Band to Give a Series of Concerts---Yesterday's Examinations---To-day's Orders and General Military News.

Following are some of the reasons given for not enlisting, with answers, furnished by the Recruiting Committee:

1. My mother does not want me to go.

Answer. Your mother does not want you to go, but nevertheless if you do go she will be that much prouder of you, and appreciate you all the more on your return.

2. Who will look after my farm?

Answer. Your farm will be looked after by some one just as capable as you. Necessity always provides a way, and ten chances to one there is some one waiting to do it for you.

3. Let the militia man enlist first.

The majority of the militiamen have done their duty. The duty to defend the country is just as much your's as their's, and you can become just as good a soldier.

4. I am needed at home.

Answer. Every one is needed at home. Every citizen is an asset to the State, that is why suicide is a crime, but the need is far greater at the front.

5. I don't have to go.

Answer. No one has to go but some have gone and others are wanted; that is why England has conscription for the first time in her history.

6 England has all the soldiers she needs.

Answer. It costs $1000.00 or more to properly train and equip one soldier. Does it stand to reason that this amount will be spent unless the necessity calls for it.

7. Canada is in no danger.

Answer. Canada is in danger in two ways at least. First, she has promised to supply 500,000 soldiers, and unless the Canadian men respond she will fail in her word. Second—Canada is part and parcel of the British Empire, and if Germany wins this war we will be no more.

8. The war might end before I get a chance.

Answer. The war will end some day, but the ending will be disastrous unless more men are obtained. The longer you delay the less chance you will have in being a decided factor in bringing about victory.

9. I would go if I could get a commission.

Answer. Canada, at present, does not need any more officers, but she does need men to fill the ranks, and it is your duty to go where most needed. The soldier in the ranks does his duty just as efficiently as any officer, and the best officers to-day are those who have been promoted from the ranks.

10. My wife objects.

Answer. Your wife would not be true to you if she did not object, but this war must bring a sacrifice, not only to those who go into the trenches, but also to those who remain at home.

11. I cannot go now, but I intend to go later.

Everyone would of course like to be among those who will march into Berlin behind the band, but there is much work to be done first and there is only one time to do it, and that is now, not later.

12. I cannot afford to lose the position I now hold.

The best positions in Canada have been given up in order that men may go to the front. There will be lots of vacant positions when the war is over and the returned soldier will receive the preference.

13. I will go when I am needed.

Answer. Many men are hard to convince that they are needed; in fact some act as if they did not know a war was taking place. An idle excuse is worse than nothing.

Answer. Many harsh things have been said about the loafers and you have no use for them; yet you ask them to defend you. The loafer, as a rule, is a useless person and you would not depend upon him if you really wanted something for yourself or your house was on fire.

15. I do not think that I could pass the medical examination.

The medical examination is as much a protection for you as for the army. The least you can do is to try.

16. I have conscientious scruples about taking up arms.

There is more authority for taking up arms than not, especially when your cause is right.

BRITISH ON THE OFFENSIVE CAPTURE FOE'S TRENCHES

PRISONERS TAKEN

LONDON, March 27.—The long-expected British offensive in the west, aimed at relieving the German pressure against Verdun, appears to be under way. At many points of the Anglo-German front, from Ypres to Albert, there was lively activity to-day, although thus far confined to mining and artillery actions. The British scored an important success when, after successful mine explosions, the Northumberland and Royal Fusiliers rushed forward and launched a furious assault against the German salient at St. Eloi, due south of Ypres. They broke through the first and second line of the German trenches on a front of 600 yards, inflicting heavy losses on the defenders and capturing two officers and 100 men. The fact that the troops who accomplished the feat are mentioned in the official report may mean that the British headquarters staff has decided that in future the battalions taking part in battles will be named in the reports.

How It Was Accomplished.

Sir John Haig's report of the success reads:

"This morning after exploding mines, infantry of the Northumberland and Royal Fusiliers assaulted the German salient at St. Eloi successfully, taking first and second-line trenches on a front of some 600 yards. Heavy casualties are known to have been caused to the enemy. Two officers and 188 men were made prisoners."

The German official report, referring to the destruction of the St. Eloi trenches, says: "By an extensive mine explosion the British damaged our position near St. Eloi, south of Ypres. More than 100 yards of trenches were blown up and casualties were caused among the company occupying the trenches."

The German report carefully ignores the infantry attack and the loss of trenches and prisoners.

The British report also told of mining operations at La Boisselle and crater fighting near the Hohenzollern redoubt, in which the British were successful, and recorded the damaging of some British trenches with resultant casualties by the explosion of German mines opposite Hulluch, but added: "We are established on the crater formed by the explosion."

APPLICATION FOR FIXED ASSESSMENT BEFORE LEGISLATURE

Private Bills Committee is Informed That City Council Was Not Unanimous to Grant a Fixed Assessment to the Grand Opera House

BILL PASSED

TORONTO, March 28.—The City of Peterborough this morning applied to the Private Bills Committee to confirm the municipal by-laws fixing the assessment to the Campbell Flour Mills Company Ltd., at $10,000 and the Grand Opera House at $20,000. It was pointed out that the Council of Peterborough was not unanimous upon the proposal, there being only a majority of three and the ratepayers had not voted on the by-laws. The bill was passed.

His Worship Mayor Duffus and City Clerk S. R. Armstrong were present on behalf of the city.

DUKE OF CONNAUGHT PRAISES Y.M.C.A. WORK

A notable tribute to the work of the Y.M.C.A. both in peace and war was given last night at the headquarters of the association on Drummond street by his Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught at a meeting held to signalize the opening of the four days' campaign designed to add a thousand members to the association to replace those who had gone to the front. An interesting discovery had been made during the day showing that His Royal Highness was one of the oldest members of the Y.M.C.A., having become a member in 1870 at the old buildin gat the corner of Craig and Alexander streets. The Duke, although suffering from a severe cold, spoke at unusual length. It was plain that his impromptu remarks were inspired by a soldierly admiration for the work of the Y.M.C.A. He gave them every encouragement. He eulogized what they had done for the soldier both at home and abroad, and concluded with the following:

"I hope my presence will show my sympathy with the objects of your meeting and I can assure you that I wish you every possible success. His Royal Highness afterwards left for Ottawa on a C.P.R. special.

Was Born Here 93 Years Ago

Mrs. Catherine Hanrahan Was One of Peterboro's First Children

Born here ninety-three years ago, before the Robinson immigration, and when Peterborough was known as Scott's Plains, Mrs. Catherine Hanrahan passed away after an illness of two years at her residence, 321 Simcoe street. The place of her nativity was on Hunter street, in the vicinity of the Quaker Oats building. The settlement was only a clearing and the woods were all about. Mrs. Hanrahan lived for some years in Douro, and she used to recall among the recollections of her girlhood the blazed trails which she saw her father and others made when they came into the city. They marked the trees with hatchet blows in order to find their way back through the forest. Mrs. Hanrahan was one of this city's real pioneers and all of her life of nearly one hundred years was spent within fourteen miles of Peterborough. She leaves one brother, Mr. Daniel O'Brien of Indian River, three sons, John, Michael and Timothy of Peterborough, and three daughters, Mary and Bridget at home and Mrs. Mitzby of Rochester, N.Y. Her descendants counted seventeen grandchildren and seven great grandchildren. The life of the deceased was marked by faithful attendance at her church and practice of her religion, and by warm friendships and service among her neighbours. Mrs. Hanrahan was predeceased by her husband about thirty-four years ago. The funeral will be held on Wednesday morning at 9 o'clock to St. Peter's Cathedral and thence to St. Peter's cemetery.

DIED.

HANRAHAN.—In Peterborough, on Monday, March 27th, 1916, at 4 o'clock, Mrs. Catherine Hanrahan. Funeral Wednesday, March 29th, at 9 a.m. from her late residence, 321 Simcoe street to St. Peter's church and cemetery.

BLOMFIELD.—At his late residence 676 Battery street, Victoria, B.C., on Saturday, March 25th, 1916, Charles James Blomfield, fourth son of the late Rt. Rev. C. J. Blomfield, D.D., Bishop of London, and husband of Jennie Strickland, daughter of the late Col. Strickland, of Lakefield, Ont.

BIRTH.

LONG.—On March 25th, to Mr and Mrs. J. E. Long, 240 McDonnell street, a daughter.

HUNT.—On Saturday, March 25, 1916, in the Nicholls Hospital to Mrs. Bert Hunt, 214 Wescott street a son.

NOT REPRESENTATIVE.

The Dominion Parliament has, by a vote of 68 to 46 killed the proposal for a Dominion-wide measure of prohibition. The destructive amendment adopted was moved on behalf of the Government. Premier Borden vetoed a demand for a straight vote on the main motion, declaring for Dominion prohibition. Of course Parliament is supreme; but it is safe to say that the members, in the action they took, ceased, in this regard, to be representatives; they did not, in their action, represent the sentiment of the great mass of their constituents.

A WEAK SPOT.

Of course there will be criticism of the new prohibition law from all angles of view. Opponents of prohibition will point out what they consider its unjust defective and undesirable features, and even those favorable to the principle will be inclined to find some fault with the provisions the law contains for the application of the principle. One of the objectionable features which even the friends of prohibition are inclined to condemn in the prohibition law, as drafted, if finally passed in this form, is that it will create a new situation. The law, as proposed, provides for the sale of liquor by druggists. We are informed by reports from all the larger towns and cities that the druggists are not enamoured of the idea of becoming the main and, in fact, exclusive, channel for the distribution of strong drink, and assuaging the thirst of habituals, which will be all the greater, with the opportunities for its satisfaction removed or concentrated upon the drug stores. We find men in the drug dispensing business taking as strong stand against going into the business of the sale of liquor, as another body of men have against going out of the business. And with good reason. The druggists cited do not feel that the dignity, respectability and appeal to popular patronage of their business would be increased by making drug stores clearing houses for the disappointed thirst of the community. Then complications in respect of breach of the law would be sure to arise. Among doctors and druggists will be found, as there will be found among all classes, unscrupulous men—men who would give prescriptions for liquor for other than purely medical purposes, and men who would fill them, knowing that they were a breach of the law. This seems to be a feature of the new law which could be greatly improved. It is advocated by some, to place the sale of liquor for medicinal and economic purposes in the hands of government representatives who would have no personal or financial interest in connection with the retail sale of strong drink.

THE RIGHT THING TO DO.

The Dominion Government, in passing, as stated on the authority of the Mail and Empire, an order in council prohibiting the export of Canadian nickel to any but British centres, has taken an action that is cordially approved by the Examiner, and by all who have a belief in the wisdom of the policy of "Canada for the Canadians." The Government has, however, not been quite open and ingenuous in its attitude to this matter. It combatted the patriotic charges or complaints made to the effect that the permitted export of nickel for refinement provided facilities for Canadian nickel reaching the enemy in Germany, and being used as a weapon against us, with an assurance of a protective "understanding." We were told that there was an "understanding" with the International Nickel Company of New Jersey, which made it impossible that Canadian nickel should reach Germany. The prohibition of export by the Government, in face of this assertion, indicates that the Government had little "faith" in the efficiency of its "understanding," and to make assurance sure, had decided to do the right thing, to adopt the only way to insure Canada the full control of its nickel resources, and Canada and the Empire the full benefit of their exploitation. The despatch to the Mail says:

"At the outbreak of the war the desirability and importance of preventing Germany and her Allies from securing nickel in Canada was given consideration by the Government . . . An arrangement was made with the International Nickel Company of New Jersey . . . Since then the statement has been made in parliament by Hon. Arthur Meighen that not a pound of Canadian nickel had gone to Germany since the war began.

Hon. Mr. Meighen could not, in the nature of things, give such an assurance except on the boldest assumption. The value of such assurance is in inverse ratio to the assurance implied in giving it. However the Government has, at last, done the right thing—the very thing it should have done twenty months ago—when, as stated, "it gave the matter consideration." The Government is to be congratulated on having become awake.

AN APOLOGY TO PROHIBITION

Milton says that it is no humiliation to confess one's self mistaken and apologize—it only shows that one is wiser to-day than he was yesterday. The Examiner feels constrained to confess an error, and apologize. In a little article yesterday, dealing with the matter of the loss of civic revenue from prohibition, it was pointed out that the burden of taxation would not be very greatly increased to the individual taxpayer. This sentence was used: "It doesn't take long to spend (in drink) $1.00, the amount of the tax on a thousand dollar assessment at one-fifth of a mill—twenty glasses of beer, does it?" This was an inadvertence; the sentence should have read: "It doesn't take long to spend twenty cents, the amount of the tax on a thousand dollars' assessment at one fifth of a mill—five glasses of beer does it." This makes the burden of taxation resulting from the loss of fees by prohibition, one-fifth less than the amount erroneously stated. Prohibition, as a taxation oppressor, received an injustice, and an apology is hereby tendered. When we consider solely the substantial the material, gains the people of the Province will receive through freedom from the evils the drink traffic produces, we can regard the addition of one-fifth of a mill to our taxation with complacency. A man with a thousand dollars' assessment will have only twenty cents added to his tax bill to make up the loss of revenue, and a man will have to be assessed five thousand dollars to have a dollar added to his tax bill from the same cause. From the revenue point of view, therefore, it does not seem that prohibition will be a very burdensome thing. Not at once, but later, compensation for this loss will come in large measure. The hundreds of thousands we now spend yearly upon our insane asylums and houses of refuge, to whose population drink very largely contributes, the amounts we now spend on prisons and upon dealing with the crime due to strong drink will be rendered largely unnecessary with the disappearance or decrease of drink consumption and drunkenness. At the beginning, of course, with the habit so firmly fixed, with the appetite for drink so irresistible, there will be breach and evasion of the law, and we shall have to have a sufficient and vigilant police force and thorough and honest inspection. But after a time, if the law is honestly applied, we shall have less trouble. The habitual drunkard will have passed away and the moral face of the country will have so changed that the necessity for expenditure in enforcement of a prohibitory law will diminish or disappear. In time the people at large will acquire the habit of doing without strong drink as they have under centuries of license acquired the habit of using strong drink.

In the French military archives is a black-list of the names of German commanders held responsible for various crimes against international law during the war. When Germany is beaten to her knees and compelled to sue for peace it is the intention of France to visit upon these barbarians swift punishment for their foul deeds. By every law they are outlaws from society. The greatest catastrophe of the war is the virtual suspension of international law, due to the conduct of Germany. This is not a campaign in which the defeated enemy is entitled to be treated with the honours of war. Germany has trampled honour in the mire, and no peace terms will be satisfying to the Allied nations or enduring that readmit Germany to international society on the old terms. This is the conclusion reached by Professor J. H. Morgan in his report on German atrocities after an investigation extending over five months. Commissioned by the Home Secretary to undertake the investigation in France into the alleged breaches of the laws of war, Professor Morgan personally interrogated some two or three thousand officers and men, visited every place of importance formerly in possession of the enemy, and had exceptional facilities for a painstaking inquiry into the various atrocities charged against German troops. No one can rise from a perusal of his "German Atrocities" (Fisher Unwin) without a feeling of horror, that such unspeakable crimes could be committed by a European power and officially justified on the ground of military expediency. The prophecy of von der Goltz has come to pass. This is a war not between armies but between peoples.

In her policy of "frightfulness" Germany has committed almost every crime in the calendar. "Some of the worst things have never been published," say Professor Morgan, and these he attributes to "perverted sexual instinct." The "bestiality of German officers and men" found expression in unprintable offences—"so disgusting that they are unfit for publication."

"The public has been shocked by the evidences accepted by the committee as genuine, which tells of such mutilations of women and children as only the Kurds of Asia Minor had been thought capable of perpetrating. . . . There is very strong reason to suspect that young girls were carried off to the trenches by licentious German soldiery, and there abused by hordes of savages and licentious men. People in hiding in the cellars of houses have heard the voices of women in the hands of German soldiers crying all night long until death or stupor ended their agonies. One of our officers a subaltern in the sappers; heard a woman's shrieks in the night coming from behind the German trenches near Richebourg l-Avoue; when we advanced in the morning and drove the Germans out a girl was found lying naked on the ground, 'pegged out' in the form of a crucifix."

Not less infamous are the records of nefarious crimes against the Allied troops—the murder of the wounded, the treacherous use of the white flag, incendiary bullets that set the victims on fire, the shooting of prisoners, firing on stretcher-bearers and field hospitals, and the use of gas and liquid fire. But the crimes against the civilian population cry to Heaven against the Prussian barbarian. There is no tribunal for such a foe but the battlefield. There can be no safety in premature peace. The orgy of crime is but a symptom of the national disease and the fruit of Prussian military tradition. "An unbroken chain links together Clausewitz, Bismarck, Treitschke, von der Goltz, Bernhardi, and the official exponents of German policy to-day."

It is a fight for existence in Europe. Millions have sprung to arms to avenge the victims of the Prussian outlaw. To the end of time, from generation to generation, in the places where the ruthless invader occupied the land men will recite to their children's children the story of his infamy and shame. The brand of Cain is on his brow.

FOND OF THEIR CAPTORS.

Russian Weeps When Son of Family Keeping Him Goes to War.

London, March 28.—With nearly all Hungary's manhood under arms, the Austro-Hungarian Government has distributed half a million Russian prisoners among the great land owners of Hungary to till the soil and keep agriculture going.

From more than one point of view the experiment of setting the prisoners to farm work is proving a great success, for, strange as it may seem, says that Budapest correspondent of the Morning Post, the Hungarian peasantry and the Russian prisoners have come to regard one another as brothers.

The correspondent cites one touching incident of friendship between a Russian Cossack and the peasant family he lived with. The young son of the family, not yet 18, was called to the army, and the whole family accompanied him to the station, with the Cossack at their head. The parting scenes were most touching. Everybody, including the Cossack was in tears. He took off a kind of St. George's medallion he was wearing and agve it to Pista, the young Hungarian hussar, saying: "If you wear this God will save your life, as he saved mine."

CAT DIES OF STRONG DRINK.

Becomes a Toper and Expires all in One Night.

In the alcove of the Seattle jail yard, Ole the county jail cat, lies buried beneath a neat mound of ashes and cinders, with a cross-board bearing the words, 'He died of drink," above his head.

The legend on the cross-board is true. Ole died of drink. Not drink of poor quality, but smooth, 100 proof stuff that he imbibed not well but too copiously.

Ole was locked in a room containing hundreds of quarts of liquor that had been seized in raids. One of the barrels of whiskey had sprung a leak. Some of the pungent amber liquid had made a little pool in the centre of the floor. Ole lapped at it gingerly. It bit his tongue and he made a wry fae.

Then a wonderful change came over him. He felt rejuvenated. He felt powerful and combative. Throwing back his head disdainfully, he looked around for Deputy Bush's dog that he might whip him. But the door was locked. So Ole went back and lapped again at the queer, fiery liquid that bit his tongue. It beat any catnip he ever tasted. Again he imbibed.

An Extravagant Doctor Or a Wise One?

Ambitious Dr. Lydgate of "Middlemarch" may have been extravagant with his 2 horses, and servants and plate, and Policy of Life Insurance Most people now-a-days, however, would at least have called the Life Insurance Policy a necessity. The horses were sold, the servants dismissed, and the plate taken by the bailiff. The Life Insurance Policy alone stood at the last between Rosamond and penury. There have since been many Rosamonds of whom the same story might be told. Has the Rosamond of your home been adequately provided for? If not, her lot may be adequately secured by a Policy in

The saving in the Soup Tureen

Bovril makes soups and stews so much more nourishing that they can often take the place of expensive joints. It saves many dollars in the kitchen. Bovril is the concentrated goodness of the best beef—so strong that it cannot possibly be manufactured in cheap cubes. Insist upon the real thing—Bovril in the Bovril bottle.

THE WORK OF THE WAR CONTINGENT ASSOCIATION

Mrs. Julia Henshaw the well-known Vancouver lady who has recently returned from a tour of inspection in England and France as a special commissioner of the National Service Committee to supervise the distribution of the Christmas wallet which was presented to the troops on active service, and also to study the question of Field Comforts generally, pronounces in her report a highly favourable opinion upon the way the soldier is being looked after by the Canadian War Contingent Association.

Mrs. Henshaw whose tour of inspection was made under the auspices of the Militia Department with Captain's rank, was given by the generals commanding in the Canadian Military area in England, every facility to acquire a comprehensive idea of the conditions in the Canadian camps and hospitals. In conjunction with Sir George Perley, she made a special study of all matters relating to the distribution of Field Comforts sent from Canada. "There can be imagined," she states "nothing more admirable than the machinery and methods of the Canadian War Contingent Association. The manner in which this society handled the distribution of the Christmas wallets was beyond all criticism. Both in England and France practically every man of the Canadian Expeditionary Force received the wallet, and it is safe to say that no more acceptable, useful or suitable Christmas gift was sent from Canada to our troops in field and hospital.

"I cannot speak too highly regarding the favourable reception of the wallets by the officers and men. Nothing received by them at Christmas time pleased them better, or was more generally appreciated, and wherever I went in France, I saw these wallets being used by them, in hospital wards, marsh. In some cases the wallet was the only Christmas gift received from Canada by our men. In addition to the thousands of postcards which have been received by the National Service Committee in Toronto, very many letters were sent to the W.C.A. expressing grateful thanks for this gift.

In England Mrs. Henshaw visited many hospitals of various types, including the Duchess of Connaught's Canadian Red Cross Hospital at Cliveden, and the Canadian Red Cross Convalescent Home. At Upper Lodge Bushby Park, the King's residence and the Canadian War Contingent Association Hospital at Beechborough.

Mrs. Henshaw also went to France on special authority and visited the Canadian Hospitals there. She reports that their equipment, efficiency and management are magnificent. These hospitals in the field are as well supplied with excellent operating quarters, V-ray rooms, stores and general equipment as any hospital in large centres. They are officered by surgeons and physicians who are at the head of their profession. The matrons and sisters are women of whose capability, devotion to duty and untiring service—Canada may justly be proud.

"I cannot," concluded Mrs. Henshaw, "convey in a brief report one quarter of what I would like to say on the subject of our Canadian hospitals both in England and France. Some day the history of the splendid work they are accomplishing in this war will be written, and it will be a Golden Record of work well done, of steadfast courage, skill and kindliness."

The National Service Committee's special ommissioner also visited numerous British hospitals, where of course there are as many Canadian wounded as in the Canadian hospitals. She visited in addition French and Belgian hospitals and institutions where post-treatments are given to convalescents, and the important work re-education of the returned wounded is being systematically undertaken with most excellent results. This is a subject which Mrs. Henshaw believes will command the bulk of public attention after the war.

The work of the National Service Committee is bound to benefit greatly by thorough and first hand information on all subjects connected with Red Cross supplies and Field Comforts which their commissioner has required by reason of this unique tour of investigation.

LOST APPETITE QUICKLY REVIVED

A FITFUL APPETITE IS GENERALLY ASSOCIATED WITH A GENERAL WEAKNESS OF THE SYSTEM, FERROZONE, THE BEST TONIC AND APPETIZER, SHOULD BE TAKEN AFTER EACH MEAL, AND A RAPID IMPROVEMENT IS SURE TO FOLLOW.

Distastes for food often follows La Grippe and fever, or is brought on by over excitement or worry. It is a serious condition and paves the way for more sickness. On this account it should be at once corrected by the regular use of Ferrozone.

A wonderful medicine is Ferrozone. It instantly imparts a real zest for food, and gives power to the stomach to digest and assimilate all that is eaten. Dyspepsia and indigestion are quite unknown to those who use Ferrozone, simply because it digests food so quickly, that it has no time to ferment or sour on the stomach.

If the liver is torpid, or the kidneys not eliminating as they should, they are soon restored to normal action, and the poisons that might otherwise be retained in the body to cause disease and ill health, are carried off through natural channels.

The surest road to perfect health is Ferrozone. Young girls who have been accustomed to eat almost nothing at breakfast, soon get over the bad habit by using Ferrozone, and as a result grow into healthy vigorous womanhood. When people get up in years and loose the strength and vim of youth, they need a good tonic and blood builder to enable them to resist the trials of our vigorous winter, and this is where Ferrozone can be used to great advantage.

Both the young and the old, the weak and the strong, male and female can derive untold benefit from Ferrozone. It is guaranteed to contain no opiates or injurious drugs, and will do just what is claimed for it.

Druggists recommend and sell it, price 50c. per box, or three boxes for $1.25.

SHE GAINED 35 POUNDS.

Mrs. George Bradshaw, Harlowe, Ont. writes: "I was troubled for many years with weak, watery blood and dropsy. I had nervous headaches, dizziness, and sinking spells, and was in fact, a semi-invalid. Doctors told me my heart and kidneys were diseased and gave me up but by using 10 boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I have been cured of many of my old complaints and gained 35 pounds in weight.

Citizens Play Mean Trick On Five Editors

ST. CLOUD, Minn.—Every now and then, as is the way of editors, the editors of this city have viewed with alarm the unfortunate trend of the times.

They have pointed out in pungent paragraphs that things were on the toboggan; that disaster was imminent and that rack and ruin stared us immediately in the face, or words to that effect.

The results of succeeding elections have not pleased them. They have digressed at length upon the laxity of the laws and commented with distress upon the indifferences with which prominent men looked upon the idea of taking up the people's banner and going forth to battle for the ballot in the interest of the public weal.

All this is past. For the next four years there will be no bad laws enacted in the city council of St. Cloud. For the body politic of this municipality has, with a keen sense of humor, fixed it so that none but editors shall have aught to do with city legislation.

Unbeknown to the editors, probably while they were sharpening their pencils to cry aloud once more at the moribund attitude of leading citizens in re the political welfare, certain sovereign voters went forth in the night and at the last minute circulated petitions naming five editors as candidates for the city council. They will have no opposition so their nomination is equivalent to election.

The new council will include the following:

Alvah Eastman of the Journal press.
H. Z. Mitchell of the Journal press.
C. F. McDonald of the Times.
Fred Schiplin of the Times.
George Rosenberger of Der Nordstern.

So there will be an era of political good feeling in St. Cloud for the next four years—so far, at least as discussion in the public prints is concerned.

THE KINGDOM OF THE SKY

Herbert Spencer has said that "The crowbar is but an extra lever added to the levers we already possess in our arms."

The telescope is but an added pair of lenses to those which exist in our eyes.

In a very deep sense all human science is but an increment of the power of the eye. All human power is but an increment of the power of the hands. Vision and manipulation, these in their countless indirect and transfigured forms, are the co-operating factors in all intellectual progress."

Let us see what these instruments can tell us about Mars.

Looking south on George street about 10 p.m. you will see a little more than two-thirds up the sky, a brilliant red star. This is our neighbour Mars. It revolves just outside the earth's orbit. With the exception of one of the small asteroids and our moon, it comes nearer to us than does any other body in the Heavens. It sometimes comes within 35,000,000 miles of the earth. Mars is just 1/7 of the bulk of the earth, and 1/9 of its mass.

It has two very small moons, 35 and 10 miles in diameter respectively.

Mars could never have had tides similar to those of the earth.

Weight alone has perhaps more to do with the development of a sphere than has any other single influence.

The mysterious power of weight and gravity, holds all the universe together, and at the same time retards or hastens its development.

All that is known about gravity is, that the power of gravity increases in proportion to mass, modified by bulk.

Mars is not a mountainous globe. Partly owing to the erosion of the elements, but chiefly owing to its lighter weight. The pressure of earth matter upon itself raises its temperature sufficiently high to liquify its interior and make volcanoes possible.

The mass of Mars is not sufficient for this result. So whatever mountains may be on Mars they have been formed by the adjustment of the outer crust to the shrinking, cooling interior.

The erosion of the elements has doubtless cut down, to a certain extent whatever elevations have been there.

If Mars had a mountain 2,500 feet high it could be seen from the earth. It is claimed that no such elevation has ever been observed.

Professors Lowell and Slypher observed what seemed to be high projections, but careful subsequent observations showed that the locations of the supposed mountains had changed and they were very probably dust clouds.

Air pressure in Mars could never have been more than about one-third that of the earth. Our lungs could not in that atmosphere perform their function.

Owing to the small atmospheric pressure, water must always have boiled there at a very low temperature.

Water vaporises just at the point when the expansive power of the water equals the pressure of the atmosphere upon it.

Evidence of this law can be found upon earth. Travellers who have tried to cook food high up in the mountains, have discovered, that, though the water was boiling, yet it was not hot enough to burn their hands.

It would be impossible to cook food in Mars. In fact it is a grave question, if you could even start a fire there, oxygen being so rare.

This articles will be continued on Saturday.

HOW PNEUMONIA STARTS AND HOW OFTEN PREVENTED

You catch a little cold to-day, and by to-morrow it has reached the throat, next day the lungs are affected and you wish you had used "Catarrhozone" which kills colds in five minutes. In the first place Catarrhozone soothes the irritated membranes and relieves congestion,—then it cuts out the phlegm and destroys the germs. It enables the blood to retain a natural supply of oxygen, lung food, and vitality. In any cough bronchitis or catarrh, it's guaranteed to positively cure. Beware of dangerous substitutes offered under misleading names for genuine Catarrhozone, which is sold everywhere; large size, containing two months' treatment, costs $1.00, small size, 50c.; trial size 25c.

Acted as Spotters in C.P.R. Cas: —Two More Conductors Freed By Jury

OTTAWA, March 28.—Conductor Francis Nelson, and Clarence Borts news agent, were on Saturday found "not guilty" of conspiring to defraud the C.P.R. The jury was only out about fifteen minutes. Later in the day, Conductor Charles A Merriam was also acquitted on a similar charge. Conductor Merriam was tried alone. There are no further charges against Borts, and he was discharged from custody.

The evidence in the case against Conductor Merriam was to the effect that he had received return portions of tickets from passengers which he did not turn in to the company. The crown called four women, who testified that the tickets produced in court were the tickets that they had given to Conductor Mirriam. These tickets had not been turned in by the conductor.

Rosenthal, the Pinkerton operative, testified that he had afterwards purchased those identical tickets from Harry Merson.

The women who gave evidence were the wives of the Pinkerton men.

Conductor Merriam denied that he had received tickets that he had not turned in, and Harry Merson went on the stand and swore that he never got any tickets from Conductor Merriam.

Conductor Merriam was very ill, but he was anxious to have the trial proceed.

Mr. Justice Clute, in his charge to the jury pointed out that there was a link missing that was necessary to bring the charges home to the conductors.

WEDNESDAY THURSDAY and FRIDAY

We will demonstrate the latest details of fashion for Misses and Women. We are featuring medium priced numbers in Suits, Coats, Dresses, Waists and Separate Coats; and it will be to every woman's advantage to see the range while it is complete.

You are Cordially Invited

THE REASON

We have postponed our Opening or show of Spring STYLES until now—is that the styles were not exactly settled until about a week ago and there is a marked change in all Spring Styles in the last three weeks. Visit our store this week and see a complete range of authentic styles.

SPRING OPENING

New Spring Fashions in Outer Garments

Tomorrow and following days will bristle with interest for women and young women who have patiently awaited this showing of apparel. We have not hurried this display as we wished to make of it a complete presentation of fashion's final word. That is, we wanted to include in it ALL up-to-the-moment fashions. Others will come later but they will simply embody modifications of the general style features noted in these new and charming garments. These style ideas hear outlined.

THESE NEW SUITS Are Most Attractive

CAPTIVATINGLY original silhouettes with coats that flare a bit and even wider and shorter skirts than have heretofore been seen are introduced for Spring. In models and fabrics there is so much choice that one's only difficulty will be a matter of selection.

Here Are The LATEST STREET and DRESS SKIRTS

FULLNESS and more fullness is the Spring note in skirts. This is developed in various smart models, all of which we now display in every wanted fabric and size.

SPRING DRESSES Are Wonderful

THEY are more reversions than creations, being copies or adaptations of the styles of various French periods; also of the peasant costumes of various countries. And they are so decidedly different that even your latest Winter dress won't "do" at all for spring wear if you wish to be in fashion.

NEW BLOUSES Were Never More Becoming

IN the Blouses for Spring the limit of loveliness seems to have been attained. They abound with frills and tucks and trimmings that will particularly appeal to women and misses who appreciate dressy effects. Shown in Silks, Wash Fabrics, Lingerie, etc.

THE REID CO.
Where The Styles Come From

NEW COATS Here Are Many Becoming

NEW DESIGNS that will be liked instantly are shown in a variety of charming fabrics. A novel idea is the introduction of shoulder capes and sleeves on some of them. Before selecting a spring coat this collection should be carefully looked at.

THE SEMI-CENTENARY OF DOMINION OF CANADA

Next year will mark the semi-centenary of the Dominion of Canada, and, while the war has somewhat interfered with the plans for the celebration of the anniversary, 1917 will not pass without notable commemoration of the rounding out of fifty years of national existence. To-day is the forty-ninth anniversary of the royal assent to the British North America Act of Queen Victoria, under which the new Dominion of Canada was formally inaugurated on the first of July following.

The idea of federal union of the provinces of British North America had been discussed for more than half a century preceding the actual union. The first important gathering of the statesmen who favored confederation was held in Quebec in 1864, when Upper and Lower Canada, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland were represented by their ablest men. It was a growing fear of the hostility of the United States, as manifested in the Trent affair, the Fenian raids, and the abrogation of the reciprocity treaty, which made the confederation movement popular and gained for it the allegiance of a majority of political leaders and the masses of the people.

The original conference of the "Fathers of Confederation" resulted, after long deliberation, in the passing of seventy-two resolutions which eventually became the British North America Act, and the constitution of the new Dominion. Union resolutions passed the Canadian Assembly and council with little gained. In Nova Scotia there was a great deal of opposition to the plan, but it finally received the assent of the Legislature. In New Brunswick success was achieved only after two general elections. Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island, although represented at the Quebec conference, remained aloof.

Of the changes made in the original resolutions before they were passed by the Imperial Parliament and received the assent of the Queen, the principal one had to do with the official title of the new confederation. In the original draft of the act, prepared by Sir John Macdonald, the union was called the Kingdom of Canada. Lord Stanley, afterward the sixteenth Earl of Derby, who was then British Foreign Secretary, opposed this name as like to be offensive to the people of the United States, and the title of "Kingdom" was dropped and "Dominion" substituted.

Canada, which comprised the present provinces of Quebec and Ontario, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick comprised the original provinces of the Dominion. The first years of the new nation were marked by strife and discord. The Dominion had scarcely been launched when Joseph Howe, one of the leading statesmen of Nova Scotia headed a secession movement which soon assumed formidable proportions. For a time it seemed that the new ship of state was headed toward the rocks, but a wreck was averted and the controversy amicably settled.

Manitoba was the first addition to the union, having been admitted in 1870 after the suppression of an armed insurrection against Canadian authority. British Columbia was admitted to the Dominion in 1871, and two years later Prince Edward Island cast in its lot in the confederation. Saskatchewan and Alberta were carved into provinces and joined the sisterhood in 1905. The Dominion will celebrate its centenary as a union of rich and prosperous provinces stretching from coast to coast.

Huns Are Trying To Blow Verdun to Atoms, Says Report

Baffled in Their Effort to Enter Verdun, Germans Are Bent on Destruction of the City

HEADQUARTERS OF FRENCH ARMIES AROUND VERDUN, March 28.—Thrice baffled in their effort to enter Verdun, the Germans are now seemingly bent on destruction of the city, writes Philip Simms of the United Press.

Daily they hurl incendiary shells of large calibre into purely business and residential districts. In these sections I saw several large fires raging simultaneously. (The German official statement Saturday reported Verdun in flames.) From the military viewpoint Verdun is unscratched. Otherwise the city seems destined to become another Rheims, Arras, or Ypres, threatening the utter destruction of its beautiful cathedral, bishop's palace and other buildings of note. About 350 big shells fall upon Verdun daily.

Our party arrived in Verdun in the morning at coffee time when there was a lull. We asked the General in command if the bombardment would occur. "Certainly," he said with a smile. "That's our daily ration." As he spoke, explosions recommenced from an elevation outside the town. The scene was tensely gripping. Great clouds of smoke pierced by far-away red shafts of flame, rose over the city. Guns hammered an accompaniment.

FRENCH ARE CONFIDENT.

To the northeast, the crest of Donamont, scene of so much bloody fighting, was being laid under heavy fire from French guns. The ridge resembled Vesuvius, belching black smoke. On the southern slopes German shells exploded thickly, in flashes of fire, smoke geysers shot up like magic mushrooms.

Paris was confident about the situation at Verdun when we left, more confident are the French soldiers, to be quite true. During the bombardment we entered the underground city of Verdun, dug beneath the Citadel many months ago in preparation for just such shell fire. A group of soldiers, off duty, were lying calmly on cots or sitting on boxes of army beef, absorbedly listening to a young violinist playing Saint Saens' "Le Cygne" and other classics. The other troopers were mending, knitting, shaving, hacking, or fiddling around in small routine affairs, as if a monotonous peace brooded over the world and only petty events occurred to pass the time away. Up above, the guns were shrieking fire and death.

Further heavy attacks on the Verdun front will not surprise French soldiers, but they believe they are foredoomed to failure. Officers say they would ask nothing better than a continuation of the attacks, since the enemy's losses have been higher with each new onslaught.

Proceeds of the coming sale are to buy needs for the soldiers in the trenches.

URIC ACID SUFFERING.

Uric acid is an accumulation of poisons which finds lodgment in the system when the kidneys fail to remove it from the blood. In the kidneys and bladder it forms stones, in the joints and muscles it causes rheumatism. In any case the pain and suffering is almost beyond human endurance. Uric acid is promptly removed from the system when the kidneys are kept healthy and active by using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

Donation of Business Girls Acknowledged

The following letter has been received by the Secretary of the Business Girls' Club from Fane Sewell, Hon. Corresponding Secretary in Toronto, of the Overseas Club:

Toronto, March 25, 1916.

Miss V. I. Guthrie, Secretary Business Girls' Club, Peterborough, Ont.

Dear Madam,—I have much pleasure in acknowledging receipt of a cheque for $30 for the credit of the prisoners of War Fund, which will go forward by the next remittance for the benefit of two British and two Belgians for a period of six months. This is indeed very generous of the Club, and let us pray that before the expiration of this contribution the end of the war will be in sight. Please do not let your interest flag, but speak of the Fund among your friends, so that more help may come forward because all we send is not enough. We cannot do enough for our prisoners who are experiencing such severe privation, while we are living in peace and comfort.

Yours truly,
Fane Sewell.

Lost On Icefield

Terrible Fate of Wilson Liner's Crew—Grim Arctic Story

A graphic story was told at Hull, England, by two survivors of the Wilson liner Sappho, which was abandoned in the White Sea. There were twenty-two on board the vessel, including Captain Martin, and only three are believed to have survived, namely, Second Officer Ashford, Jack Stokes, of Flamborough, and Martin Hanhia, of Hull. The three men travelled for four and a half days over ice in the White Sea, undergoing terrible hardships, whilst their comrades, through physical exhaustion, were unable to proceed and were left behind. Eventually the three reached shore, and, after travelling fifteen miles inland, were discovered literally at death's door by a Laplander.

The Sappho left Archangel on Nov 28, and should have reached Hull about Christmas. After leaving Archangel, said Stokes, the vessel became fixed in the ice, and after many days the crew abandoned her on December 24. As the ship commenced to drift Captain Martin decided it was time to clear out. The ice around the ship was 9 ft. thick. On the afternoon of Christmas Day some of the party lay down on the ice and snow, whilst the rest walked about.

At nine p.m. (Stokes added) we started to walk again, and kept on all night, as there was some moon light and the stars were out. At ten o'clock in the morning Capain Martin said, "I cannot go any further" and gave the ship's papers and other documents to the steward, but the steward would not leave him, saying "I can't leave you." Nineteen of us were therefore forced to leave the captain, the steward, and one of the A.B.'s, who absolutely refused to go further as they were beat.

The nineteen of us kept at it all that day with short intervals for rest for the benefit of the older men. One of the firemen fell into the water and he was nearly frozen. His hands were stiff and he could hardly move his legs. We had to leave him behind. The eighteen walked the whole of the second night until four a.m. the next morning, when the younger men forged ahead as the older men were handicapping them. What happened to nine of the others who went on ahead I don't know, but the six of us kept on another day. The party now consisted of Second Officer Ashford, Second Engineer McAndrew Third Engineer Bartlett, the First Mate Mr. Bromby, and Hanhia, and myself. We had to drag the cook for nearly half a mile. He was badly frostbitten, and we cut up some blankets and tied up his limbs. He complained bitterly of the cold. After travelling further we sighted land but broken ice and water barred our way. Mr. Bromby was the next man to give up. On the third day it commenced to snow, and in the evening the chief engineer gave up, saying he could go no further.

There were only five of us now, and Third Engineer Bartlett kept calling for water. His mind began to wander, and he thought he was still on board the Sappho. We left him behind. Second Officer Ashford began to despair of ever reaching land but we struggled on, and eventually came upon an abandoned steamer the Mascara of Glasgow, with paraffin on board. We melted snow for water and made some tea, and ate some biscuits we had with us. After remaining on the ship for twenty-two hours we set off again and reached land. We travelled over snow 3 ft. to 9 feet deep, slid down hills, and waded through water for fifteen hours.

At length a Laplander with his sledge and a reindeer team discovered us about ten miles from Somovets. We were taken to a village where a man cut away the blackened portions of our frozen feet. Second Officer Ashford later underwent an operation.

WHALES CAUSED SCARE

NEW YORK, March.—Five black whales suddenly appearing in the path of the Italian steamship Stampalia while that vessel was skirting the coast of Sardinia on her way from Genoa and Naples to this port, created an alarm of submarines and resulted in a near panic among the passengers, who mistook them for submarines, according to reports of passengers, which arrived here today.

The Stampalia brought 936 passengers, five of which were first-class. The third-class was made up for the most part of married men, reservists called to the colors when war with Austria was declared, but who have since been released from duty to return to their families.

BIG EATERS GET KIDNEY TROUBLE

Take Salts at First Sign of Bladder Irritation or Backache

The American men and women must guard constantly against Kidney trouble, because we eat too much and all our food is rich. Our blood is filled with uric acid which the kidneys strive to filter out, they weaken from overwork, become sluggish; the eliminative tissues clog and the result is kidney trouble, bladder weakness and general decline in health.

When your kidneys feel like lumps of lead; your back hurts or the urine is cloudy, full of sediment, or you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night; if you suffer with sick headache or dizzy, nervous spells, acid stomach, or you have rheumatism when the weather is bad, get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days, and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate clogged kidneys, to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure, makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water beverage, and belongs in every home, because nobody can make a mistake by having a good kidney flushing any time.

SOME OF THE FUNDAMENTALS OF THE CHRISTIAN FAITH

A sermon preached by F. A. Connors, Pastor City Mission, Peterborough, Ontario, Sunday evening, March 26th, 1916:

(Copyright 1916 by Author)

Text, John 1:1-5, 14, "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God, etc., etc.

The divinity of Jesus Christ is the pivot centre of the whole Christian economy. He is the central figure in all history; all history dates to and from His birth, B.C. and A.D. He is affirmed in the Old Testament, and confirmed in the New Testament. His coming into the world was foretold in the Old Testament, and forthtold in the New Testament.

Let us turn to the question of the Virgin Birth of Jesus, for on this is established the Doctrines of the Divinity of Christ and the Trinity of the Godhead. "How read'st thou?" "What saith the Scripture?"

In his book on "Modern Mind" Rev. Geo. Jackson says, "With regard to the Virgin Birth of Christ, it is perhaps too soon to speak with confidence. . . . the belief is in no sense fundamental." I should like to ask Mr. Jackson, what is fundamental?

Let us now turn to the Word where we will find every prediction was fulfilled, and every claim of Christ established.

Gen. 3:15: "And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed, and HER seed," etc This promise had its fulfillment in the Birth of Christ.

1. In Micha, 5:2, we have the place of His birth foretold. "And thou Bethlehem Ephratah, though thou be little among the thousands of Judah, yet out of thee shall He come forth unto Me that is to be the ruler in Israel."

2. In Isaiah, 7:14, we are clearly foretold the manner of His birth "Therefore the Lord Himself, shal give you a sign. Behold a Virgin shall conceive and bear a Son, and shall call His name Immanuel. (God with us).

3. These predictions were literally fulfilled in the coming of Jesus Christ into the world. Matt. 1:23, "Now al this was done that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the Lorc by the Prophet, saying, Behold a Virgin shall be with child, and shall bring forth a Son, and they shall cal His name Immanuel, which being interperted is God with us." Also in Luke, 1:35, "And the Angel answered and said unto her, the Holy Ghos shall come upon thee, and the powe of the Highest shall overshadow thee, therefore that Holy thing which shal be born of thee shall be called the Son of God." Also in Luke, 2:1-14 Turn and read.

Let me now touch on another point before passing on to my subject proper. While the Bible very clearly teaches that there is but one God, it aso teaches that there are three persons in the Godhead, and the recognition of these three persons in one God is theologically called Trinity.

No better definition can be found anywhere, than that given by Webster "The union of three persons, the Father, Son and Holy Ghost in one Godhead, so that all three are one God in subetance, but three persons as to individuality."

The doctrine of the Trinity is one that defies the comprehension of the finite mind, and must be received by faith on a ground of Scriptural authority.

The wisest and best of men have acknowledged, that to explain the Trinity in Unity, and Unity in Trinity, is impossible, because it carries us beyond the sphere of the finite into the infinite, where reason can never reach.

I believe the doctrine of the Trinity, not because I can fully understand or define it, but because God's Word teaches it.

Now let me turn to my subject proper, namely, the Divinity of Christ.

I. Let us look at some of the personal pronouns, applying to deity.

Note the distinction of persons which afford the ground for the respective appelaitons of Father, Son and Holy Ghost, which lay the foundation for the doctrine of the Trinity.

1. The Singular. (1) God the Father. "I am the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob." "I am thy God."

(2) The Son. "Thou art My Beloved Son, his day have I begotten Thee." "Thou art the Son of the living God."

(3) The Holy Ghost. "And He when He is come, will guide you into all truth," etc.

These passages show very clearly the distinction of personality in the Godhead and their relation and office in the Divine economy.

2. The Plural. (1) In the creation of man. "Let us make man in our own image." (2) In the case of the Towel of Babal. "Let Us go down and confound their language," etc. (3) In the call of the Prophet Isaiah. "Whom shall I send, and who will go for Us?"

Here we have established in the clearest possible terms the doctrine of the Trinity, which is the sure foundation for the Divinity of Christ.

II. The Divine names of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

1. The Son of God. This name is given to Christ over forty times in the Bible ;and synonymous terms, such as "My Son," "His Son," etc., are of frequent occurrene in the Word, but we have only time this evening to touch on a few of the many passages dealing with this grand subject.

To establish the fact of this great claim, let us call on the witnesses in order, and then sum up the evidence for our verdict.

III. The Witnesses to the Divinity of Christ.

1. Let us seek the testimony of God the Father.

Matt. 3:16, 17, "And Jesus when He was baptised, went up straightway out of the water, and lo the Heavens were opened unto Him, and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a Dove and lighting upon Him; and lo, a voice from Heaven saying, this is My Beloved Son in whom I am well pleased."

John 12:28-30, "Father glorify Thy name ;then came there a voice from Heaven saying, I have both glorified it, and will glorify it again; the people therefore that stood by and heard it said, that it thundered, others said that an angel spake to Him. Jesus answered and said, This voice came not because of Me, but for your sakes."

Matt. 17:5, "While He yet spake, behold a bright cloud overshadowed them, and behold a voice out of the cloud which said, "This is My Beloved Son in whom I am well pleased, hear ye Him."

2. Let us now turn to the Testimony of Christ.

Matt. 28:18-20, "All power is given unto Me, in Heaven and in earth, go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Ghost," etc.

John 5:22-23, "For the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son, that all men should honour the Son, even as they honour the Father; He that honoureth not the Son, honoureth not the Father which sent Him."

John 14:8-9, "Philip saith unto Him, Lord show us the Father, and it sufficeth us. Jesus said unto him, have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known Me Philip"? He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father, and how then saith thou, show us the Father"?

John 4:25,26, "The woman saith unto Him, I know that Messiah cometh, which is called Christ, when He is come, He will tell us all things; Jesus saith unto her, I that speak unto thee am He."

John 9:35-37, "Jesus heard that they had cast him out, and when He had found him, He said unto him, dost thou believe on the Son of God? He answered and said unto Him, who is he Lord that I might believe on Him? Jesus anawered and said unto him, Thou hast both seen Him, and it is He that talketh with thee."

3. The Testimony of the Angels. (1) At the Birth of Christ. Luke 2:1-11, turn and read.

(2) At the Sepulchre. Matt. 28:5, 6. "And the Angel answered unto them and said, Fear not ye; for I know that ye seek Jesus, which was crucified. He is not here, but is risen as He said; come see the place where the Lord lay."

(3) At His Ascension. Acts 1:10, 11. "And while they looked steadfastly toward Heaven, as He went up, behold two men stood by them in white apparel, which said, Ye men of Gallilee, why stand ye gazing up into Heaven? This same Jesus which is taken up from you into Heaven, shal so come in like manner, as yet have seen Him go into Heaven."

4. The Testimony of Men. (1) John the Baptist. John 3:31-36; turn and read. (2) The Apostles. (a) John. John 1:1-3, "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God, the same was in the beginning with God. All things were made by Him, and without Him was not anything made that was made," etc. (b) Thomas. John 20:28, "Then saith He unto Thomas, reach forth thy finger and behold My hands, and reach hither thy hand and thrust it into My side, and be not faithless, but believing; and Thomas answered, and said unto Him, "My Lord, and My God." (c) Nathaniel. John 1:36, "Nathaniel said unto Him, Thou art the Son of God Thou art the King of Israel." (d) Peter II. Peter 1:17, 18, "For He received from God the Father, honour and glory, when there came a voice to Him from the excellent Glory, "This is My Beloved Son in whom I am well pleased, and this voice which came from Heaven we heard, when we were with Him in the Holy Mount." (Mount of Transfiguration). (e) Paul. Phil. 2:6-8, "Who being in the form of God thought it not robbery to be equal with God, but made Himself of no reputation and took upon Him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men, and being formed and fashioned as a man He humbled Himself and became obedient unto death, even the death of the Cross."

5. The Testimony of Demons.

Matt. 8:28, 29, "And when He was come to the other side, into the country of the Gaderines, there met Him two possessed with devils coming out of the tombs, exceeding fierce, so that no man might pass by that way And behold they cried out saying, what have we to do with Thee, Jesus Thou Son of God? art Thou come to torment us before the time?"

IV. The Testimony of God Against Those Who Deny the Divinity of Christ.

1. John 2:22, 23, "Who is a liar, but he that denieth that Jesus is the Christ? He is Anti-Christ that denieth the Father and the Son. Whosoever denieth the Son, the same hath not the Father, but he that acknowledgeth the Son, hath the Father also."

John 8:24: "I said therefore unto you, that ye shall die in your sins, for if ye believe not that I am He ye shall die in your sins.

Conclusion.

The Divinity of Christ is demonstrated in the many miracles He wrought, and finally in His Resurrection from the Grave as a victory over Death for us. See Matt. 11:2-6; also John 10:36-38. Immortality, could defy, or overcome it. Christ was therefore our Example in Life, Our Substitute in Death, and Our Resurrection unto Life Eternal.

Christ conquered Death for us, and we conquer Death in Him. Christ passed through the Grave for us, and we pass through the Grave in Him. And so we too can say with the Psalmists of old, "Yea though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil; for Thou art with me, Thy Rod and Thy Staff they comfort me," etc., etc., etc.

If we deny the Virgin Birth of Christ, we deny with it the Divinity of Christ, and every fundamental of the Christian faith, and make God a liar, who hath so testified of Him. For if there was no Virgin Birth, there was no Divine Son of God, and if Christ was not Divine, as He claimed, He was the greatest imposter this world has ever seen, and the whole Bible is a lie, and the whole system of Christianity a farse. But thank God His Word is true, and thank God for Christ who is "the Way, the Truth and the Life" unto all who will believe in Him as such.

With this Book I will stand or fall, sink or swim; live or die.

"Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved."

How to Have the Best Cough Remedy and Save $2 by Making It at Home

Cough medicines, as a rule, contain a large quantity of plain syrup. Two cups of granulated sugar with one cup of warm water, stirred for 2 minutes gives you as good syrup as money can buy.

Then get from your druggist 2½ ounces Pinex (50 cents worth), pour into a 16-ounce bottle and fill the bottle with sugar syrup. This gives you, at a cost of only 54 cents, 16 ounces of really better cough syrup than you could buy ready made for $2.50—a clear saving of nearly $2. Full directions with Pinex. It keeps perfectly and tastes good.

It takes hold of the usual cough or chest cold at once and conquers it in 24 hours. Splendid for whooping cough, bronchitis and winter coughs.

It's truly astonishing how quickly it loosens the dry, hoarse or tight cough and heals and soothes the inflamed membranes in the case of a painful cough. It also stops the formation of phlegm in the throat and bronchial tubes, thus ending the persistent loose cough.

Pinex is a highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, combined with guaiacol, and has been used for generations to heal inflamed membranes of the throat and chest.

To avoid disappointment, ask your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex," and don't accept anything else. A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this preparation. The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

CONCERT WAS WELL ATTENDED

A large crowd attended the concert in the Simcoe Street Temple last night in aid of the Salvation Army Band. Among the best numbers were Percy Luther's recitation, Bandsman Loader's concertina selection, the banjo duet by Mr. Parkins and his son, Bugler Parkins, Mr. Naple's accordion palying, and Miss Hill's readings.

J. E. R. Munro, Captain.
Adjutant 93rd Overseas Battalion, C.E.F.

By kind permission of Lt.-Col Johnston the Band of the 93rd Battalion has arranged to give a series of three popular concerts, the first to take place on Saturday evening of this week. Under the able direction of Sergt. Hughes the Band is daily growing in efficiency, and is playing standard numbers with a confidence. The series of concerts will be a treat to the music lovers of the city as they will give the Band an opportunity to show their calibre. At Saturday night's concert the Band will be assisted by Mr. Stratton whose imitations of Harry Lauder numbers are very popular in Peterborough. The programme for Saturday night is of rare excellence, as a glance over the numbers will show. Here is the programme:

March, "March of the Mighty" —Hayes.
Overture, "Raymond"—A. Thomas
Cornet solo, "Sing Me to Sleep"—Green.—Bandsman H. Payton.
Selection, "Lohengrin"—Wagner.
Vocal solo—Selected.
Mr. Stratton.
Descriptive, "Mill in the Forest," Eilenburg.
Waltz, "Eileen Alanna"—Bonheur.

Part II.

Overture, "Crown Diamonds" —Auber.
Selection, "William Tell"—Rossini
Patrol, "Wee McGregor"—Amers.
Vocal solo—Selected.
Mr. T. Stratton.
Gavotte, "Les Cloches de St. Malo" —Rimmer.
March, "True Tone"—Smith.
God Save The King.

The examinations in Part B School of Infantry were concluded yesterday afternoon and the non-commissioned officers who took the course came through the test with flying colours. They were warmly congratulated at the close by Major Ponton, who, in a brief address, remarked that the work of the class in his part of the examinations had been splendid. He warned them that getting their certificates was not everything. No one was perfect and there was always a chance to learn something new about the work. Major Ponton advised them to always conduct themselves whether on or off parade, in a manner that would reflect credit upon the uniform they wore, and that would add to the good name of the 93rd Battalion.

Herbert Stethem a former Peterborough boy who went over with the first Canadian contingent has been missing for many months. A letter received from his sister, Mrs. Harold Reynolds of Winnipeg gives a ray of hope to his friends. She writes: "We are still without any word of Herbert or Billy but I heard news yesterday which revived our hope. A boy in Winnipeg has been traced to a camp in Germany where there are between 400 and 600 prisoners, who have never been heard from. This boy was traced through the Masonic.

Mrs. Reynolds adds some interesting information about the 58rd Battalion, which is commanded by Lt.-Col. R. M. Rennistown formerly of Peterborough. She says "The 58rd Battalion is made up from a scattered area. A good many of them are homesteaders or from small places such as Battleford, Prince Albert, etc. Col. Rennistown is very popular. One woman whose husband is a private told me with tears in her eyes that there wasn't a man in the battalion that wouldn't die for him."

Lectures were the order of the day at the armouries to-day although several platoons did some drilling inside the armouries and another proved the use of mud and slush on the parade ground.

An entertainment will be provided at the Simcoe Street Recreation rooms this evening by a few of the ladies of the congregation of St. John's church.

The following letter has been received by Mrs. J. J. Lynch of the West End Knitting Club:

Belgium, March 3, 1916

Dear Mrs. Lynch:—Just a few lines to let you know I received your gift of socks, and I appreciated them very much.

A fellow doesn't realize how many friends he has, when he is at home having a good time, it is a pleasant surprise when he does.

We have had snow and frost for the first time and Belgium looks now like Canada and home more than ever before.

I am transferred from the artillery to the Engineers, and am now in the same company as Stewart as it makes things quite a lot brighter and more home-like.

I will close now, once more thanking you for your useful gift. Remember me to all your family,

Yours sincerely,
N. LAING.

Mrs. Louis Anthony, 322 Water St., received word yesterday from the Adjutant-General's Department, stating that her son, gunner Henry A. Le Gros, 9th Battalion, first Brigade was confined to number one, Canadian Field Hospital, France, suffering from tuberculosis of the tibia. Gunner Le Gros left Peterborough with the 24th Field Battery, at the opening of hostilities and has been in France since the landing there of the first Canadian contingent. Gunner Le Gros is a brother of Hubert Le Gros, goal keeper of the Electric's hockey team this winter.

It has been learned that Dr. Victor McWilliams was recently recalled to France from Egypt, whither he had been sent for duty only a short time previously. It is conjectured that he may have been called back on account of the Verdun campaign.

The Kingston Standard says: It now looks as though the 146 Battalion of Kingston, the 155th of Belleville, the 156th of Brockville, the 93rd of Peterborough, will be in Barriefield, with the best prospects for the 159th of Perth, the 136th and 159 of Port Hope and Cobourg, and the 109th of Lindsay, being added to the number.

Word has been received of the promotion, in France, of a well-known Peterborough officer, Dr. Blanchard V.S., of Water Street, who has been promoted from Lieutenant to Captain in the British Army Veterinary Corps, to which he has been attached since early in the war. Capt. Blanchard was with the Canadian contingent in South Africa and has two sons in the Canadian Expeditionary force, both going from Peter

KICKED HER SHINS CALLED HER FLIRT

Mrs. Hazel Steinberg Resists Annulment Action and Asks Separation

NEW YORK, March 21.—A common ordinary flirt is what the Rev. Dr. Bernard Steinberg, chief cantor of the Temple Beth-El, called his wife, nineteen years old, she says. And he went further: "He calls me a blackmailer" the young woman says in an affidavit just filed in the Supreme Court, "yet he knows down in the bottom of his black heart of the sufferings I endured while living with him. A beast of the wilderness would have received better treatment than I have received from such a brute as he is."

Mrs. Hazel Steinberg so answered when her husband began a proceeding to annul their marriage, declaring that she had been cold to him almost from the day of their wedding. Mrs. Steinberg filed a counter claim for a separation. She asked Justice Finch for $150 a week in alimony and $1,500 in counsel fees, pending trial of the actions. The Justice read all the affidavits and awarded her $10 a week and $50 in fees.

Dr. and Mrs. Steinberg were married March 23, 1915. She says she began an action for a separation in March, 1915, in Brooklyn, but discontinued it under an agreement with her husband, whereby she was to annul their marriage. She was only eighteen years old at the time she signed the agreement, she says, and did so because she was desirous of ridding herself of Dr. Steinberg. He brought the annulment proceeding on grounds other than those promised, she declares, saying that she did not love him and refused to perform the duties of a wife. Mrs. Steinberg denied the second charge.

The wife says in an affidavit that her husband's salary, combined with fees for weddings and funerals, brings his income up to about $10,000 a year. He has a music studio which, she believes, brings him an additional $10,000 annually. Dr. Steinberg in fifteen years older than his wife.

WAS "INSANELY JEALOUS"

"He has been uniformly brutal and unkind," says the wife in an affidavit. "He is erratic and temperamental and has caused me nothing but unhappiness. I am in constant fear of further abuse and cruelty. He compelled me to accompany him to restaurants at such hours as his business engagements permitted him to think of such an unaesthetic thing as food. From the beginning of our wedded life he has been insanely jealous of me, and when walking with him in public he has compelled me to refrain from glancing at any one but him, or otherwise he would falsely accuse me of flirting with some imaginary persons. He has called me 'good for nothing ignoramus' and 'common ordinary flirt'.

"His conflict has been such that I have been unable to call my soul my own, but have been compelled to get his permission for anything I wanted to do, no matter how trivial.

"It became a daily occurrence for him to lecture me as to his standing in the community as a singer and as to his artistic temperament and to browbeat and maltreat me and tell me how thankful I should be to be the wife of a man so distinguished. He told me that I ought to be so grateful that I would go on my bended knees and ask forgiveness for fancied wrongs.

"When I asked him why he had treated me so cruely, he said it was not his temper but his artistic temperament that controlled his actions.

"My husband kept company with me for nine months before he married me, and knew I couldn't cook, but told me it would be no drawback, because he would provide a cook and a housekeeper. He failed to do so, and I had to do everything as well as I could, and then he maltreated me for my inability to make the delicacies and luxuries his aesthetic temperament required. When he failed to keep his promise to buy me a ring I bought one for $1.25.

"GOOD-FOR-NOTHING LOW DOG"

"As soon as he found out about it he flew into an ungovernable rage and said I was a "good-for-nothing low dog to buy such trash." He kicked me on the shins and shook me about from place to place for an hour and a half, until he was compelled to desist from mere exhaustion. My shins, wrists, arms and body were bruised and blackened."

Answering his wife's charges, Dr. Steinberg said that she never intended to live with him, but "hoped to wring and squeeze money out of me." He said her declarations were a 'mass of falsehoods,' and that his salary is only $2,700 a year and fees about $150. He conducts his studio at a loss, he says, and therefore has run in debt.

"My wife thinks," he says "that because of my position as a clergyman and because my existence will be ruined by the publication of her charges she can compel me to beg, borrow or steal a sum of money to give her. She took no interest in household affairs, and when not going to restaurants and places of amusement she was spending her time looking out of the window or reading trashy novels. I suggested that she ought not to spend her time reading such love stories, but recommended the classic and suggested 'Omar Khayyam.' This constituted one of her allegations of cruelty in the separation suit. My wife's foul accusations and contemptible charges are part of a scheme to blackmail me and extort money from me."

COULDN'T PROVE CHARGE.

Three Ottawa Women Acquitted In Alleged Infanticide Case.

OTTAWA, March 24. — Pauline Brochert, Mildred Brohart and May Bradda, three young women, charged with the murder of Mildred Brohart's infant child here in January, were acquitted after a brief hearing at the assizes yesterday. The defence was not called upon. After ruling out an alleged confession improperly secured by the police, Justice Clute decided that there was not sufficient evidence to send the case to the jury. Public sympathy was strongly in favour of the girls.

Dr. Bashen, who made the autopsy, was unable to state positively that death was due to choloroform. In the alleged confession they admitted administering chloroform to the baby to keep it asleep.

WOMAN INSTIGATED MURDER

Police Now Believe Dr. Waite Carried Out Another Person's Plans.

NEW YORK, March 29.—Amazing revelations that will show the poisoning of millionaire John E. Peck to have been the result of a plot engineered by a woman, are expected by District Attorney Swann within a few hours.

Dr. Arthur Warren Waite, son-in-law of the dead man, is held on the charge of murdering Peck. The "accomplice," as the District Attorney's aides characterize the person for whom they are seeking, they believe to be the actual ringleader in the conspiracy, and Waite only the agent of the plot. Members of Waite's family share this belief.

At his brother's bedside Frank Waite pleaded with Dr. Waite not to withhold any incident in his dual life. He told his drug-weakened brother that that was also their mother's wish. Waite's father is also adding his entreaties to those of the other members of the family. At the same time he is making efforts to prove that there is a taint of insanity in the Waite family.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

FRANK MORAN WANTS ANOTHER CHANCE TO MEET THE CHAMPION

NEW YORK, March 27.—Frank Moran is still unconvinced. Despite the fact that he received a terrific beating in Saturday night's set-to with Jess Willard, the blood Irishman believes in a longer fight he would bring his famous right-hand wallop across. He declared that his greatest desire was to have another opportunity to wrest the heavyweight crown from Willard.

Moran spent the day quietly at his hotel, with his family and a few intimate friends. The punishment he received the previous night failed to dampen the spirits of the Pittsburger, who declared that in six weeks' time he will be ready to fight Willard again if the title-holder will give him the opportunity.

"I am ready to meet anybody," stated the Irishman, "and there will be no exceptions to this rule. This means I am willing to face Dillon or Fred Fulton if they desire a bout. In the event of my fighting Willard again I would prefer that the bout be twenty rounds, or to a finish. I would not care for a shorter fight.

Moran voiced a severe criticism of Charley White when he stated that his defeat was caused by the constant warnings of the referee.

"I was annoyed by White's constant cautioning," said Moran. "Every time I hit Willard in the stomach he would tell me to be careful and not commit a foul. Anybody who was at the ringside and knows the game could see I was hitting fair. I certainly received all the worst of the fight at the hands of White."

Judging from Moran's desire to fight Willard over a route, the challenger evidently does not think much of the stamina of the big Kansan.

"Willard put forth his best effort in the first seven rounds," said the Irishman, "and if it had been a finish fight I would have prevailed in the end. My own knowledge of the injury to his right hand is from the reports in the morning papers.

"After the seventh round he lost all steam, and there was little snap in his punches. I was fighting him to a stand still. I will not say I was defeated, though I will abide by the general verdict.

"Those who have seen me fight know that I have never outpointed a man in my ring career. My only chance to win was to rush Willard and endeavor to bring across a haymaker. If it had been a finish go, my ability to take punishment would have carried me through to victory. I believe that my physical powers of resistance will offset Willard's superior weight and reach in a distance fight.

"For the present I intend to take a six weeks' rest, and then I am ready to accommodate all comers."

SPORTING COMMENT

To-morrow will mark the beginning of old Cy Young's fiftieth annum on earth, for Denton Tecumseh was born on March 29, 1867, in Gilmore, O. The marvel of the baseball world, whose salary wing withstood the stress and strain of twenty-two major league seasons, and whose record of victories constitutes a mark at which all his successors will probably shoot in vain—such was good old Cy.

Christy Mathewson was once looked upon as a possible rival of Denton Tecumseh in the durability record race but that day is past. Big Six has still a long and weary road to travel if he is to come within hailing distance of the Young mark, and it is dollars to doughnuts that he can never do it.

It was in July, 1910, that old Cy hung up his 500th major league victory. At that time he had lost 382 contests making a total of 802 games twirled in the big show. That practically ended his career, for he took part in only seventeen games after that, for his major career is 819 games, with 508 victories.

Christy Mathewson is the only twirler of the present era who has come anyway near that record, and he will have to pitch 250 games and win at least half of them, to set up a new mark. Can he put it over? Not in a thousand years, to all appearances, and yet—

In 1906 old Cy was seemingly all through, played out, done for. That season he won thirteen and lost twenty-one games. The previous year he had lost one more game than he won, being the first time in his history that his balance was on the wrong side of the ledger. At the close of the 1906 season, when it was said that Cy was a goner, a record stood 435 won to 255 lost. Yet for three seasons after this stump old Cy took his regular turn in the box, and won over half of his games, having twenty-one victories to eleven defeats while with the Red Sox in 1908.

The fan who had experimented with a gun and found that it was loaded had just arrived at his eternal and for rid abode, and was being shown around Hades by an old inhabitant.

"I 'spose you don't have any amusements down here, do you?" inquired the newcomer.

"Oh, yes," was the reply, "Big league ball game every day."

"Big league ball every day," chortled the fan. "Say, this ain't hell, is it"

HORINE'S GREAT FEAT.

It will be four years to-morrow since George Horine set up a new record for the high jump. Horine, who recently announced his retirement from athletics to settle down on his California ranch, was then a Stanford student. It was at the dual meet with the university of Southern California that he broke the record made in 1905 by Mike Sweeney of 6 ft. 5 3-8 inches. After all his rivals had dropped out Horine cleared the bar at 6 ft. 2 inches. Trainer Moulton then advised him to have a try at 6 feet 6 inches, and Horine sailed over with apparent ease. His new record was 6 feet 8 1-8 inches, and a little later he made it 6 feet 7 inches at the Coast tryouts for

A CELEBRATED OUTLAW DEAD

Cole Younger Thrilled U. S. With Exploits Until Sent to Prison--Devout Churchman in Later Years

LEE SUMMIT, Mo., March 28. — Cole Younger, celebrated outlaw of border days, but of late years a devout church attendant and peaceful citizen, died at his home here on Tuesday, after a lingering illness. He was seventy-two years old and unmarried.

The death of Cole Younger marks the end of the last of the leaders of the one-time world celebrated outlaws of the West. Frank James still lives, but his brother, Jesse James, was the master mind of the James boys' band in their daring exploits which included the first of the train robberies. The twenty-eight bullet wounds that Cole Younger bore were testimony enough to the fearless daring of the wild outlaws he led more than forty years ago, but a thousand crimes of which they were innocent were charged to the Youngers and to the band of the James brothers because of their almost romantic interests in their exploits. Many of these tales have been denied in later years.

From the end of the civil war until he entered Stillwater Penitentiary, in Minnesota, in 1876, to spend twenty-five years there in prison, Cole Younger with his brothers robbed banks and often associated with the James boys in similar exploits in Kentucky and Kansas.

Fought With Quantrell.

Quantrell, a leader of a band of Indian guerillas, arose in the early stages of the Civil War, and the Younger brothers joined that band. The James brothers, Jesse and Frank were members of it, too, but Quantrell was a victim of his own treachery and was slain by one of his band. The Younger and James boys ranged into Kentucky and elsewhere and began a systematized campaign against banks.

Cole Younger, in an interview in 1909, denied that he or his brothers had taken part in the Missouri bank robberies. He admitted his life of violence and crime during this period. The proceeds of the Russellville bank robbery were $17,000. The James boys were credited with robbing banks in Lexington and Savannah, Mo., in the latter part of 1867. They got $72,000 from the Liberty, Mo., bank in 1866. In their robbery of the Gallatin, Mo., bank in 1868 its cashier was shot dead.

Cole Younger, with his brother Robert, went to Texas in 1868. They bought a farm in Syene, in Dallas county, brought their younger sister down to keep house for them and lived respectable lives for three years.

Going over to Louisiana on business Cole Younger in 1871 got into the hands of sharpers who fleeced him in a horse race. Captain James White, one of these he denounced in this matter, retorted by spreading a tale concerning the young woman whom "Bob" Younger was about to wed. "Bob" had become a deputy sheriff of Dallas County. Cole Younger pursued White. They met and White fell badly wounded.

Meanwhile Frank James had returned from California to Missouri. He had given much thought apparently to the case with which a large fortune might be acquired quickly through attacks by an organized band upon the banks, which were rapidly increasing in numbers and wealth. He proposed the scheme to Jesse and soon they had organized a band of robbers.

Jesse James rode up to the office window of the Kansas City fair, at Kansas City, and in the presence of more than a thousand persons held up the cashier and took $3,000 from him. The James boys and their companions escaped.

Just as this time the Youngers were in disrepute in Texas, and because they were not at their home at the time of the Kansas City fair raid, it was whispered that they had joined the James boys in it. Their environment became insupportable, according to the stories told by Cole Younger in later years, and they left Texas.

The Raid at Northfield.

In their old home in Missouri, they found the lot of the man who had fought in the ranks of the Confederacy worse than ever. Cole Younger decided to leave the country, and with his brother and other lawless characters roved the Middle West, engaged in all sorts of crimes.

The raid on the First National Bank of Northfield, Minn., on September 7, 1876, was the most daring of these exploits.

J. L. Haywood, the cashier, who declined to open the door of the safe, which he had closed on discovery of the robbers' mission, was slain. Cole Younger, badly wounded, led away the remnant of his party, leaving dead and wounded behind as they rode through the streets of the Minnesota town under fire from windows and sidewalks on every side. They were pursued for two weeks and finally cornered and captured. Cole Younger's arm was shattered at the shoulder and his brother Bob's jaw had been smashed by a bullet.

They pleaded guilty when arraigned and were sentenced to life imprisonment. Seven years later these two were released from their cells when a fire occurred in the penitentiary and by their cool and courageous conduct averted a panic. Efforts in their behalf began then, but the attempt to obtain their release on parole were not successful until 1901. James Younger died in prison from tuberculosis in 1899. A year after Robert was paroled he shot and killed himself.

Cole Younger returned to Missouri and bought a cottage in Lee's Summit, his birthplace. He installed his niece as housekeeper and for years was an attraction in shows of various kinds. Later he went on the lecture platform. He professed religion at an evangelistic revival in 1913 and since then he has been preaching from his own life story the warning against evil ways.

Object Lesson To One Hurler

On the roster of the Fort Worth club of the Texas League this year there is a player named A. Rankin Johnson who, in the brief time that he spent in the American League in the season of 1914 gained some fame by his success against the Washington hurler of the same family name. He specialized in beating Walter.

Rankin Johnson was secured from Syracuse by the Boston Red Sox in the Spring of 1914. In midyear he, with Coumbe and Egan, was traded to Cleveland for Vean Gregg. The first two reported, but Johnson jumped to the Federals, going to Chicago first and later being sent to Baltimore. Lannin made good to Cleveland for Johnson, paying a sum of money, and thus retained title to the player, who reverted to him when the Feds gave up.

Now in Texas League.

Now the pitcher is sold to Fort Worth and the fans may be anxious to hear his story, believing that he is being made the agency in a moral lesson for their benefit. They're right, and Rankin will have some good dope to hand them. When he found that he had reverted to Boston the pitcher wrote to President Lannin and asked to be sent to the Cleveland Club.

This looked like a stall to Lamin, who figured that Johnson was trying to pose as a penitent, ready to take any berth in order to get back into baseball. It doesn't soften the heart of the Boston Club owner, who is very bitter against the men who jumped him, or who threatened to do so. He won't have any of them back himself and won't help any of them to get on other clubs.

Lannin never replied to Johnson's letter. Instead of an answer he mailed the pitcher a Boston contract calling for $125 per month. Johnson knew what that meant. There were pitchers in the South Michigan League who drew bigger money than that.

KAUFF WAS STAR IN DETROIT GAME

DALLAS, Tex., March 27. — The Giants were only the Giants, but the Tigers were a team here Saturday. They made up a good team, those Detroit men, one that never stopped fighting, and when the conclusion came to cash in on the opportunities their aggressiveness created, they were not found wanting. They bunched their hits and ran the bases and won by a score of 5 to 2.

Benny Kauff and Eddie Rousch, the stars of the Federal League, were also the stars of the Giants Saturday. Between them they accounted for three-quarters of the hits made by the National League club, and for one-half the runs.

Benny got two hits, clean singles both of them. The wind that howled out of the west robbed him of a home run on the second drive. It was billed for out of the lot, but was held back so that it hit the fence near the top and bounced back almost to the infield. Benny stole a base. Rousch got a single and stole a base also. Hank Ualmero was the only other Giant to get a hit.

WEDDING BELLS

ELLIOTT—FARROW.

The wedding took place in Toronto on Wednesday, March 15th, 1916, of Mary C. Farrow, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. M. Y. Farrow, Chillingwood, to Sergt. Robert H. Elliott, of Tweed, Ontario. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. W. T. B. Brown of Sherbourne street Methodist church.

OBITUARY

MRS. THOS. HOGAN.

The death occurred Saturday evening, at her late residence in Douro, of Mrs. Thos. Hogan, at the advanced age of seventy-two years. The deceased had lived in the township of Douro for many years, and was well-known and highly respected. She leaves to mourn her loss two sons and one daughter.

The funeral took place yesterday morning to St. Joseph's Church, and thence to St. Joseph's Cemetery.

MRS. DENNIS FITZPATRICK.

When the news of the death of the late Mrs. Dennis Fitzpatrick was announced in St. Mary's R. C. Church on Sunday morning, it was heard with a feeling of pronounced regret by her many friends, and the members of the congregation. Rt. Rev. Msgr. Casey, in a few brief words, paid a high tribute to the deceased, who was one of the noble women of the parish.

Mrs. Fitzpatrick was born in the township of Hope, and was a daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Patrick Meehan, pioneer residents of the township of Ops.

It was at the age of thirteen that she with her parents and other members of the family located in the above township. In 1865 she was married to Dennis Fitzpatrick, who survives her, and it was only on the 29th of February, 1916, that she and Mr. Fitzpatrick celebrated their golden wedding, when scores of friends called to congratulate the happy couple on their 50 years of wedded life.

To mourn her loss is left her sorrowing husband, five sons: Hillary, of Ops; Robert, Toronto; Joseph and William, of Arizona, and Dennis V., at home; also four daughters: Mrs. H. M. Shaw, of Perth; Margaret, a graduate nurse, New York; Mary, graduate nurse, Toronto, and Sister St. Joseph, of St. Joseph's Convent, Peterborough. One sister, Mrs. John Fitzpatrick, lives in Toronto. The deceased has been ill for the past four weeks, and was 73 years old six months of age.—Lindsay Warder.

WARNS ALL DRUGGISTS.

A circular letter has been sent out to all the druggists of the Province by Mr. A. J. Johnston of Sarnia president of the Ontario College of Pharmacy, calling their attention to the new temperance legislation announced by Hon. W. J. Hanna, as involving druggists. A conference with the druggists and the Government is to be held but no date has as yet been fixed. It is as yet uncertain whether the druggists will consent to dispense liquor under the new Act, and if they refuse, the Government will be under the necessity of arranging for Government dispensaries.

WOULD BE WITH HUSBAND

But, for Third Time, Mrs. Trimble Faces Deportation.

CLEVELAND, O., March 28. — Charged with having entered the United States in violation of the immigration laws, Mrs. Margaret M. Trimble, wife of Herbert Trimble, star rover of the Cleveland Athletic Club hockey team, was held in jail here yesterday. Mrs. Trimble faced possible deportation for the third time to her home in Bracebridge, Ont. "A woman's place is with her husband," was the only definite statement Mrs. Trimble made. About two years ago Mrs. Trimble filed suit for divorce. Since that time she asserts she effected a reconciliation with her husband.

When the Dunlop Trophy Race went to London, Ont., in 1896 a special train was chartered to take the crowds that wanted to go.

THE BARREL DRESS — A rather startling creation, charming and chic is this Maurer model, imported by Mrs. Whitney of New York, for her fashion show and worn by Miss Pauline Marriam. The model is Jupe tonneau (barrel) dress of beige crepe brocade, with Scotch plaid ribbon and taffeta Eton jacket.

New York Stock Market

NEW YORK, March 28.—Stock market opened with irregular and slight price changes to-day. Traders are still showing uncertainty in the face of the Mexican and International developments. United States steel was off ⅛ of a point at 84⅞, war stocks were practically unchanged.

New York, March 28.—Goodrich advancing from 75¾ to 77 was the most active stock on the floor during the first hour it had lost ½ of a point from high at 11 o'clock. Crucible sold up to 69⅝ then dropped back to 67⅞ sales for the first hour were 169,000.

Decided advances were shown by the leaders in early afternoon trading. Crucible was up 3¼ at 70⅞. American Loco at 79⅝ was 3⅞ above its low for the day. The last quotation on United States Steel was 84⅞.

Live Stock Market.

TORONTO, March 28.—Toronto live stock receipts light, market strong. Hogs fed and watered $10.25; f.o.b. $9.70; 90 weighed $11.35; butcher steers $7.25 to $8.00, choice heavy steers $8.25 to $8.40.

THE GERMANS MAKE LAST EFFORT TO TAKE VERDUN

SUCCESSES OF RUSSIANS CONTINUE ON ALL FRONTS

Writer From Top of Fort at Verdun Gives Impressions of the Terrible Struggle

Enemy Finding Verdun Lines Impregnable, Wreak Vengeance on the City with Incendiary Shells---Five Weeks of Continuous and Successful Resistance.

VERDUN, March 29.—From the top of a fort in this city on which the world's eyes are anxiously turned to-day, writes Dr. Herbert Adams Gibbons to the New York Herald, I can see forts, hamlets and crests of woods whose names have been immortalized by five weeks of continuous and successful resistance against the German hordes.

Except at one spot the defences are unbroken. Even here, where the opening was won at unparalleled cost, the German attempts to pass meet with an annihilating fire. The Germans may be master organizers, but they need long preparation. The French are master improvisers, so the delay through March has proven fatal to the hopes of the Crown Prince. While the heroic defenders of the French outposts sacrificed themselves in holding back for days the frontal attack, the manoeuvre to encircle the city was anticipated by the French, as also was the long range fire to destroy the railway bridges. So to-day there is no fear of encircling it or cutting off its communications.

The French have now established impregnable lines, and, as on the Marne, they have announced to the invaders "Beyond this line you pass not!" Striking proof of the abandonment by the Germans of their hope to capture Verdun is found in the fact that until last Thursday the Germans fired no incendiary shells into the city. They evidently tried in their bombardment to hit places of military value. Rumours of the destruction of the city are untrue, for nine houses out of ten are unharmed.

> But now, for three days, Verdun has been receiving a constant hail of incendiary bombs in the residence and business quarters. This morning I walked through the main business streets and saw the useless destruction that is being wrought systematically by the German long range cannon. Soldiers under the direction of the veteran city fire chief are trying to save the city, but while fighting one fire other shells start new blazes.

No battle, no heroism could stir one's heart more than this spectacle of persistent fire fighting with the odds all against you and a consequent exposure fully equal to the battlefield.

This miserable attempt to destroy the city they cannot capture is one more revelation of the German methods of warfare. Baffled and enraged by the heroic defence, they are wreaking their unholy vengeance on civilian property. But I doubt whether there will be greater success in this changed plan than in the original one, for even by the systematic firing of incendiary shells many weeks of daily bombardment would be necessary before the shameful work was completed. From what I see and hear, but of which the censor does not allow me to speak, there will be other and pressing work for the Germans in the near future.

I had the novel experience of lunching to-day in an underground cellar—the only kind of a room where you are sure to be undisturbed—with the General and his staff. We talked of almost everything but Verdun, for there is no longer apprehension for the city. When the events of the last five weeks were mentioned it was to extol the traditional courage and endurance of the soldiers who flinched not under the heaviest bombardments and the fiercest assaults to which human beings ever have been subjected. I listened to these stories gladly and gratefully—gladly because honour of France is the honour of mankind, gratefully because the safety of France is the safety of mankind. For were not the lives sacrificed before Verdun given for us also?

Off to School, Full of Vim and Pep—Don't cram their little "tummies" with greasy meats, starchy potatoes or other indigestible foods. One or two Shredded Wheat Biscuits with hot milk make a warm, nourishing meal that supplies all the material needed for their growing bodies. The perfect food to study on, to grow on, to play on. The crispness of the shreds encourages thorough chewing, which develops sound teeth and healthy gums. Being ready-cooked, it is so easy to prepare a warm, nourishing meal with Shredded Wheat in a few moments—no kitchen worry or work.

VON DER GOLTZ, SPY, REACHES NEW YORK

Given Life to Tell U. S. of Hun Plots

NEW YORK, March 29.—Herst von der Goltz, alias Bridgman Taylor, who is said to have been sentenced to death in England as a spy, arrived here yesterday on the steamer Finland from Liverpool to give evidence to the Government concerning alleged conspiracies to provide German warships at sea with coal and provisions. He was brought here by two detectives from Scotland Yard, who handed him over to Federal Agents Scully and Adair.

According to the Scotland Yard men, von der Goltz was a prisoner for some time in the Tower of London, awaiting execution, but was promised that his life would be spared if he would come to this country and tell the United States Government what he knew concerning the alleged conspiracies to commit unneutral acts.

After giving his testimony, his custodians said, he is to be returned to England, and from there is to be sent to South America under his promise that he will not attempt again to enter either England, Germany or the United States.

The prisoner is said to be implicated in the Welland Canal and St. Croix River bridge plots.

96 Norwegian Ships Are Sunk

Mines or Torpedoes Have Destroyed Vessels Worth $7,000,000

COPENHAGEN, via London, March 29.—Ninety-six Norwegian ships have been lost, during the war through submarines or mines, according to a newspaper statement published here. It has been established, says the statement, that twenty Norwegian steamships have been destroyed by German submarines, seventy-seven Norwegian subjects thereby losing their lives but Germany has compensated Norway for only four steamships.

The total Norwegian tonnage lost amounts to 125,000, valued at 28,000,000 kroner ($7,000,000), while the cargoes were valued at 80,000,000 kroner ($22,500,000).

Sweden in the same way has lost forty vessels, of a tonnage of 50,000, valued at 10,000,000 kronor ($2,550,000). One hundred and twenty-eight Swedish subjects have lost their lives.

BRIGHTER CHILDREN

Children are probably brighter to-day than a generation ago—but are they stronger? That's a grave question. So many pinched faces, dulled eyes and languid feeling make us wonder if they will ever grow into robust, healthy men and women.

If your children catch colds easily, are tired when rising, lack healthy color, or find studies difficult, give them Scott's Emulsion for one month to enrich their blood and restore the body-forces to healthy action.

Scott's Emulsion is used in private schools. It is not a "patent medicine", simply a highly concentrated oil-food, free from harmful drugs. It cannot harm; it improves blood; it benefits nerves and strengthens the system. Your druggist has it—order one to-day.

Germans Have Launched New Assault at Verdun in a Last Effort To Destroy City

PARIS, March 29.—Germans have launched a new assault at Verdun in a last effort to destroy the unconquerable city.

PETROGRAD, March 29.—Desperate encounters continue on the Russian front with fierce hand-to-hand fighting. Germans were unable to capture lost postions.

OTTAWA, March 29.—There was a sensational session in the Commons last night, when allegations of a "rake-off" of one million and a half were made in connection with munition orders before contracts were given. Some members call for a "lifting of the lid," and the retirement of Hughes.

LONDON, March 29.—Russians beat Turks in Armenia and capture Hizan.

WINNIPEG, March 29.—True bills were returned by inquiry in connection with graft in the construction of the Parliament Buildings.

British Cruiser Sank German Destroyer in North Sea Engagement

LONDON, March 29.—British cruiser Cleopatra rammed and sank a German destroyer Saturday night in an engagement between the British cruiser squadron and German destroyers in the North Sea. The crew of the destroyer was lost.

LONDON, March 29.—All British ships in recent operations in the North Sea have returned, except the destroyer Medusa, lost in the collision. Twenty prisoners were taken from the German trawlers sunk.

WASHINGTON, March 29.—United States yesterday officially asked Germany for details re the sinking of the Channel steamer Sussex and the horse carrier Englishman.

COPENHAGEN, March 29.—It now appears that Zeppelins are fitted with heavy guns, three British aeroplanes being shot down during a recent raid.

STOCKHOLM, March 29.—Queen Victoria of Sweden is very ill, and will leave for Germany in a few days.

PETROGRAD, March 29.—It is announced that Russian troops are having great successes on all fronts.

DISCOVERS EPILEPSY GERM.

Probably Exists In Soil and Enters Blood From Stomach.

ST. JOSEPH, Mo., March 29.—The discovery of a germ which, he asserts, causes epilepsy was announced by Dr. Charles A. L. Reed, of Cincinnati, in an address here. The germ was called the bacillus epileptius and the speaker asserted that, like the germ of lockjaw, it probably exists in the soil and enters the body through the stomach and intestines.

Dr. Reed asserted that clogging of the alimentary canal, always present in epileptic cases, forced the germ from the intestines into the blood.

"When this germ is taken from the blood of epileptics and injected into the veins of rabbits," he said, "it causes them to have epilepsy, generally in fatal form. Rabbits fed on food contaminated with the germ develop epilepsy."

CLEANSES YOUR HAIR MAKES IT BEAUTIFUL, THICK, GLOSSY, WAVY

Try This! All Dandruff Disappears and Hair Stops Coming Out

Surely try a "Danderine Hair Cleanse" if you wish to immediately double the beauty of your hair. Just moisten a cloth with Danderine and draw it carefully through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; this will cleanse the hair of dust, dirt or any excessive oil—in a few minutes you will be amazed. Your hair will be wavy, fluffy and abundant and possess an incomparable softness, lustre and luxuriance.

Besides beautifying the hair, one application of Danderine dissolves every particle of dandruff; invigorates the scalp, stopping itching and falling hair.

Danderine is to the hair what fresh showers of rain and sunshine are to vegetation. It goes right to the roots, invigorates and strengthens them. Its exhilarating, stimulating and life-producing properties cause the hair to grow long, strong and beautiful.

You can surely have pretty, soft, lustrous hair, and lots of it, if you will just get a 25-cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store or toilet counter and try it as directed.

SESSION OVER BY EASTER.

Premier's Expectation — His Own Plans Not Settled.

OTTAWA, March 29.— Sir Robert Borden is hopeful of the session of Parliament ending by Easter or earlier.

"What are your plans for after the session," he was asked.

"I really have none as yet," he said. "It may be that public business will call me to Great Britain but I am not certain."

"Do you propose a tour of Canada?"

"I have made no plans whatever."

For Freckled, Rough or Spotty Complexions

The freckling, discoloring or roughening to which delicate skin are subject after exposure to wind or sun, often appearing in early spring, may readily be gotten rid of. Mercolized wax, spread lightly over the face before retiring and removed in the morning with soap and water, completely peels off the disfigured skin. Get an ounce of the wax at any druggist's. There's no more effective way of banishing freckles or other cutaneous defects. Little skin particles come off each day, as the process doesn't even temporarily mar the complexion, and one soon acquires a brand new, spotless, girlishly beautiful face.

Wrinkles caused by weather, worry or illness are best treated by a simple solution of powdered saxolite, 1 oz. dissolved in ½ pt. witch hazel. Bathing the face in this produces a truly marvelous transformation.

Finds Price of Soap Is Cause of Typhus in Mexico

AUBURN, N.Y., March 29. — The price of a cake of soap in Mexico to-day is 60 cents, and the lack of it among the natives is causing the tremendous epidemic of typhus fever, asserts the Rev. W. E. Vanderbilt, a graduate of Auburn Theological Seminary, who is doing missionary work in the State of Michoacan, in a letter received here.

Mr. Vanderbilt is stationed with his wife at Zitacuraro, and his communication was sent a few days before the American troops entered Mexico. He says there are now 20,000 cases of typhus fever in Mexico City alone, and in his own town, with a population of 8,000, at least ten are dying every day from the disease.

The cost of living in Mexico, Mr. Vanderbilt's letter states, has increased from 50 to 100 per cent. in three weeks. Corn has risen in price from 60 to 90 cents a quart. Some other prices he gives are: Beans, 60 a quart; muslin, 60 a yard; cheap calico, 30 a yard, and shoes from $30 to $150, according to quality.

ALGONQUIN PARK.

This delightful summer district, the "Highway to Health and Happiness," is attracting more and more attention every year from the ever-increasing army of tourist that are looking for new fields to explore, new scenes to enjoy and a place where vacation days may be spent with profit. Algonquin Park is a territory that appeals to the summer vacationist and offers more attractions than any other district in Canada. 2,000 feet above the sea level with an area of 2,000,000 acres of forest lands and rivers, it offers unlimited opportunities for the canoeist, the angler and those who love out-of-door life. The fishing is good and the forests abound in game, which of course can only be shot with the camera, as hunting in the Park is prohibited. The Grand Trunk have created comfortable hotels and log cabin camps in different parts of the Park, which offer first-class accommodation for those who do not desire to rough it. A new publication entitled "Algonquin Provincial Park," telling about it, has just been issued. It is handsomely illustrated, and can be secured free from any Grand Trunk Agent, or on application to C. E. Horning, D.P.A., Toronto, Ont

TO SAVE EYES

In the Object of This Free Prescription—Try It If your Eyes Give You Trouble.

Thousands of people suffer from eye troubles because they do not know what to do. They know some good home remedy for every other minor ailment, but none for their eye trouble. They neglect their eyes, because the trouble is not sufficient to drive them to an eye specialist, who would, anyway, charge them a heavy fee. As a last resort they go to an optician or to the five and ten-cent store, and oftentimes get glasses that they do not need, or which, after being used a few months, do their eyes more injury than good.

Here is a simple prescription that every one should use: 5 grains Bon-Opto dissolved in ¼ glass of water. Use three or four times a day to bathe the eyes. This prescription and the simple Bon-Opto system keeps the eyes clean, sharpens the vision and quickly overcomes inflammation and irritation; weak, watery, overworked, tired eyes and other similar troubles are greatly benefited and oftentimes cured by its use. Many reports show that wearers of glasses have discarded them after a few weeks' use.

It is good for the eyes, and contains no ingredient which would injure the most sensitive eyes of an infant or the aged. Your own druggist can fill this prescription, or the Valmoss Drug Co. of Toronto will fill it for you by mail. Try it, and know for once what real eye comfort is.

A prominent City Physician to whom the above article was shown, said: "Bon-Opto is a very good remedy for ordinary eye troubles and I have used it in my own family with satisfactory results. I can see no objection to its use, and feel sure that many people who suffer from eye troubles will find relief by using it. I shall recommend it to others every chance I get."

RIOTING IS GENERAL OVER ALL GERMANY

Hundreds of Troops Executed For Refusing to Shoot Down Women

LONDON, March 28.—Further details of the unrest existing all over Germany are given by a neutral correspondent from that country to Switzerland. He says in part:

"The political and economic situation in Germany is graver than is represented in the newspapers of the allies.

"In Bavaria the most serious general discontent prevails. Latterly rioting became so serious that the troops were called out, but the soldiers refused to fire on the populace, and a mutiny broke out in certain battalions. Hundreds of soldiers had to be executed to prevent the mutiny from spreading.

"The women in the Kingdom of Wurtemburg also are beginning to take the law into their own hands by storming military trains to prevent Wurtembergers from being sent to the front.

General Mourning.

"Wurtemberg has suffered proportionately greater losses in killed and wounded than any other German province, not excepting Bavaria. There are cases on record where a woman has lost not only five sons but has been widowed. Strikes among the women workers in the newly constructed munition factories at Stuggart, the capital of Wurtemberg, have taken place recently.

"There is hardly a family in Wurtemberg which is not mourning for some victim of the war.

"The Government has issued instructions to the professors of the gymnasia to report all boys of 16 and upward of robust health. As a result thousands of boys under 17 have been torn from their parents by the military authorities. Energetic protests were made to the government by professors of Bonn, Jena, and Heidelberg universities, but with out effect."

OUR SERIAL STORY

"Flower of the Gorse"

BY LOUIS TRACY

Ingersoll threw out a hand in a gesture of sheer hopelessness. "It means this,—if Raymond suspects that the marriage was invalid, and Carmac left his money to his 'wife,' the will can be upset, Mrs. Carmac will be stripped of every penny except her personal belongings, and Rupert Foedyke and his sisters will inherit the estate. Naturally I know nothing of the exact position of affairs beyond the hints I pick up from Yvonne.

"She, poor girl, hasn't the remotest notion of the tragedy that I see looming darkly above the horizon—because it is the very essence of tragedy that a woman who sold her happiness for gold should be despoiled in the hour when the bribe might be regarded as most surely within her grasp. Lorry, I pity her! She is well aware that she is clinging to the edge of a precipice.

"Raymond's inquiries concerning Yvonne and myself, which you overheard, and which were confirmed by Peridot, warned me of her danger. When you carried that maimed scoundrel into the cabin of the Hirondelle he retained his senses sufficiently to understand the tremendous significance of Mrs. Carmac's ravings. To the ordinary ear they would sound like the gabble of dementia; to Raymond, already disliked by his mistress, and retained only as a useful slave by his master, they conveyed immense potentialities. But at first he must have felt like a traveler in the desert tantalised by a mirage. Investigation in Pont Aven might strengthen his suspicions; but he could never obtain proof. He dared not appeal to me. Rogues of his class have a tolerably clear notion of the sort of man they must not meddle with; probably he summed up the father through the daughter. Now, perhaps, you see where this Parisian inquiry agent comes in?"

"No, I'm dashed if I do!"

"There isn't much guile in your composition, Lorry," and Ingersoll smiled forlornly. "I gather from Yvonne's story that during the talk on board the cutter her mother spoke of having deserted her in Paris. Unhappily she thereby supplied Raymond with the most important clue. The very next day he had the impudence to remind Mrs. Carmac that she had claimed her 'niece' as a daughter. He drew in his horns when checked; but not about unveiling her early life without delay. Paris is a city of records. It was a simple matter for anyone to discover the date of my marriage, which took place nearly four years before the American ceremony between Carmac and his wife.

"Good God, Man! that poor woman is in a damnable position. Not only can she be robbed of the wealth given her by Carmac, but in England she is likely to be prosecuted on a charge of bigamy! And I shall be responsible! My pride and futile anger deprived her of the only means whereby she could have married Carmac without fear of consequences. I left her no alternative. Oh, Lorry, Lorry, if only I could have foreseen something, however shadowy, of the evils that were impending when we brought those people on board! Had I even known the name of the yacht, I might have been vouchsafed some glimpse of the peril. One glance at Stella herself, or at Carmac, would have revealed an abyss from which I should have recoiled with horror. I might have contrived some subterfuge, some wild scheme, to keep Yvonne and her mother apart. But it is too late! The mischief is done. I am bound hand and foot,—a man delivered over to the tortures!"

Ingersoll's voice trailed off into silence. He sank into a chair, threw aside the pipe which he had filled automatically but not lighted, and buried his face in his hands.

But Tollemache sat bold upright, his shoulders squared, his strong features frowning in thought. Thus had he looked when swinging precariously above the precipice at Le Faouet, and thus when the Hirondelle was backing into the hell's broth of the reef.

"Tell me what' old sport, we must act, and quickly at that," he said at last, springing to his feet as though some valiant deed was called for straight away.

"But what can I do?" came the despairing answer, and Ingersoll, the leader, the master, the kindly cynic, lifted woebegone eyes to the lithe and stalwart figure towering above him.

"Lots!" cried Tollemache. "First, let's get down to bedrock—then we can talk plainly. I've never said a word to you, Ingersoll, and mighty little to your daughter; but I love Yvonne, and if she will marry me, our wedding day will be the proudest day of my life. I'm not a poor man. I've a heap more money than ever I've owned up to, because I like the life here, and I like you, and I worship the ground Yvonne walks on, and I was afraid that if you knew I was fairly well fixed in a financial sense you'd regard me as a poseur, and cut me out. Why, I've saved nearly ten thousand dollars a year since I came to Pont Aven! I can lay my hands tomorrow on a hundred thousand, and still have enough left to keep Yvonne in pretty good shape.

"Now I'm not making any bargain with you. That isn't our way. But if I am given a free hand with Raymond I'll settle his hash in double quick time. Swine of his variety are always blackmailers. Very well! I'll pay his price. He must clear out, bag and baggage, giving me the promise of his silence, over and above an acknowledgment that he obtained the money by threatening to expose Mrs. Carmac. Don't imagine he won't go! I'll make him! It's rather rotten even to talk of using violence to a fellow with a broken arm; but he must be got rid of, and I'll frighten him to a deal—see if I don't."

Ingersoll rose, and caught the young man's hand in an impulsive grip. "Lorry," he said, "if it pleases Providence to ordain that Yvonne shall marry you, I'll offer thanks on my knees. You are honest as the sun, and transparent as the Aven beneath the tops of the Bois d'Amour in summer. I have known your story for years. I had hardly learned your name before a man told me of the quarrel with your father because you refused to fall in with some marriage-brokerage arranged between him and the father of a girl whose business interests marched with his. I knew two years that you bought ten of my pictures during the first six months of our acquaintance. I didn't interfere with your well meaning subterfuge. You have lost nothing on that speculation, at any rate, because you acquired my work at its best period, and your investment would yield two hundred per cent. of you sold now.

"But let that pass. Do you believe I would ever have encouraged you to waste your time in pursuing the fickle goddess of art but for the knowledge that you were happy, and content, and far removed from the temptations that beset youngsters of means but of no occupation? No, you know well that I should have driven you forth with hard words. Yet I have never deceived you. How often have I said that Art is a cruel mistress, a wanton who refuses her favors to some most adept wooers, yet flings them with prodigal hands at others who, though worthy of her utmost passion, despise it? But you have a quality that ranks you far above the painter who, while fitted to see divine things, swallows in the mud of mediocrity. You are a loyal friend and good comrade, a man of clean soul and single thought.

"Would to Heaven I might leave you now to deal with this prying hound, Raymond! But the plan you suggest is useless. He would laugh at you, disregard your threats, and taunt you with personal designs on Mrs. Carmac's millions. You have forgotten, Lorry, that Yvonne is her daughter. I know my wife's nature to the depths. She has drunk to nausea of the nectar of wealth. What has it given her? Happiness? Good health? A contented mind? No; she is scourged with scorpions, torn by a thousand regrets. She would give all her money now if some magician would wipe out from her life the record of the last eighteen years.

Very gladly, very humbly, would she dwell in this cottage, provided that no cloud existed between her and Yvonne. But that cannot be. As offering a middle way, I have agreed that Yvonne shall visit her at intervals, and even that small concession has delighted her beyond measure. And what will be the outcome? No matter what I may say, she will try to capture my girl's heart with a shower of gold.

HAVE DARK HAIR AND LOOK YOUNG

Grandmother kept her hair beautifully darkened, glossy and attractive with a brew of Sage Tea and Sulphur. Whenever her hair took on that dull, faded or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied with wonderful effect. By asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this old-time recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients, all ready to use, for about 50 cents. This simple mixture can be depended upon to restore natural colour and beauty to the hair.

A well-known down-town druggist says everybody uses Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound now because it darkens so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied—it's so easy to use, too. You simply dampen a comb or soft brush and draw it through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; after another application or two, it is restored to its natural colour and looks glossy, soft and beautiful. This preparation is a delightful toilet requisite. It is not intended for the cure mitigation or prevention of disease.

GERMAN ARMY LACKS FOOD?

GENEVA, March 27.—A message from Gumbinnen, on the East Prussian frontier, dated March 18, says dreadful misery prevails among the Germans along the whole length of the Russian front, where they are quite unable to provision themselves adequately.

Moreover serious epidemics have recently broken out in the German Army on this front and are working havoc among the soldiers, who already were undermined in health by the winter.

Afflicted with Lame Back

THREE YEARS AGO

COULD NOT SWEEP THE FLOOR.

Women are coming to understand that weak, lame and aching backs from which they suffer so much excruciating pain and agony are due to wrong action of the kidneys.

The kidneys are overtaxed—given more work than they can do, and when the back aches and pains it is hard for a woman to look after her household duties, for no woman can be strong and well when the kidneys are out of order.

On the first sign of any weakness in the back Doan's Kidney Pills should be taken. They go right to the seat of the trouble, cure the weak, aching back, and prevent any serious kidney trouble liable to follow.

Mrs. L. Gendzow, 622 Manning Ave., Toronto, Ont., writes: "I take great pleasure in writing you, stating the benefit I have received by using Doan's Kidney Pills. About three years ago I was terribly afflicted with lame back, and was so bad I could not even sweep the floor. I was advised to use Doan's Kidney Pills, and before I had used one box there was a great improvement, and my back was completely cured. I highly recommend 'Doan's' for lame back."

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50c per box, 3 boxes for $1.25; at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

BILLY THE BORE.

He Was Very Different From the Poet and the Halfback.

By TEMPLE BAILEY.

There was no denying that Billy was not deeply intellectual. He was tall and blond, with broad shoulders and a smile that was like sunshine on a gloomy day. But among the girls of the college these qualities counted for little, for they worshiped at the shrine of the poet and of the halfback. The poet had long hair, and so had the halfback, but otherwise they had nothing in common except that they both loved Dulcie Drayton.

Billy loved Dulcie too. But he hadn't half a chance, for the poet wrote sonnets to Dulcie's eyebrows, and the halfback let her shine in his reflected football glory.

Now and then she consented to make Billy happy. "Yes, I will walk with you," she told him graciously one October day, "only we mustn't go very far, for I have an engagement with the halfback."

The halfback was raging when they finally reached Dulcie's home. "We have missed the game," he said. "Of course if I had been playing I couldn't have waited; but, as it is, I have hung around"—

"I should think he would bore you to death," the halfback said when Billy had left them. "How can you stand that fellow?"

"He's not bad," Dulcie defended. "Of course he hasn't such an awful lot of brains, and he hasn't done such wonderful things as you have, but he's got an awfully good disposition."

And the halfback, remembering his own grumbling and growling, said "Oh, well," uncomfortably and wondered if Dulcie was hitting at him.

A few days later the poet took Dulcie to task about Billy. "You danced with him four times last night," he said, "and I wanted you to sit out those last two in the conservatory with me. I had a new poem to read to you. It was about young October's golden eyes, and it is dedicated to you."

"Read it to me now," said Dulcie. "I'd love to hear it."

"The atmosphere isn't right," the poet fretted, "not here on the campus, but last night there was a little moon, and there were red roses on the lattice."

"Billy is an awfully good dancer," Dulcie redected, which, as the poet generally got tangled up even in a two-step, was not tactful.

For several days after that, however, the rivalry between the poet and the halfback was so intense that Billy was left completely in the background.

The poet sat up half the night writing verses, and the theme was "love, love, love," and he claimed every spare moment of Dulcie's time to read them to her.

"He writes about my hair," she told Billy, "and calls it 'soft amn silk shimmering in the sunshine.'"

"I don't see the use of wringing out a lot of shimmering sunshine sentences when your hair is too beautiful to be described," said Billy bluntly.

Dulcie smiled up at him. "After all, I like the way you put it, Billy," she said, "and I'm glad you like the color of my hair."

"I love it," Billy stated, "and I love you, Dulcie."

"Oh, oh, you mustn't!" Dulcie protested.

"Well, not now, if you don't want me to, but I shall tell you again, Dulcie," Billy answered.

"And he will," Dulcie told her most intimate friend that night. "He will ask me over and over again."

"Well, of course you couldn't marry him," said the intimate friend calmly, "not such a bore."

"I am not sure that Billy deserves that nickname," said Dulcie. "He doesn't talk moonshine like the poet or brag of himself like the halfback, but he does say some nice, sensible, good hearted things, and he has a lovely smile."

The intimate friend sat up and looked at her. "Well, of all things," she said; "I believe you are half in love with him. How you can think of him when you have the choice of two such men as the poet and the halfback is more than I can understand."

"But are they really in love with me?" Dulcie demanded.

"They have asked you to marry them, haven't they?" Marion asked.

"Yes. But somehow it seems to me that they are always thinking of themselves. But Billy thinks of me."

"Oh," Marion said softly, "I know what you mean. If you married the poet or the halfback you would have to worship at their shrines, while Billy would worship at yours."

"Yes," said Dulcie, "that's it, and a man who loves you that way can't exactly bore you, can he?"

"No, he can't," said Marion, "but of course you can never tell how long it will last."

"Sometimes I have thought I should like to put them to a test, as ladies did with the knights of old," Dulcie meditated.

"But what test," Marion demanded, "could you have in modern days?"

"In the old times it was a test of strength and skill," Dulcie stated, "but today there is one god, Marion—money. You know I have a lot in my own right. And the boys know it, all of them, the poet and the halfback and Billy. Perhaps that is what makes me the most popular girl in school—my money, not just me myself."

"Yes, I do," Dulcie agreed. And they then and there constructed a plot.

The next night the poet, lingering in the shadow of the elms, was met by Marion. When they had talked for a moment she said, "Isn't it sad about Dulcie Drayton."

"Sad?" the poet echoed.

"Oh, didn't she tell you?" Marion hesitated. "Then I ought not to."

But the poet urged her.

"Well, she has lost all of her money," Marion said. "I am her roommate, and I saw the letter. But please don't speak of it."

"Of course not," said the poet.

But that night he wrote many verses, and in all of them was a note of renunciation, and the next day he gave them to Dulcie. "They are very sad," he explained, "but I have come to believe that a genius should not marry. Only in the sadness of solitude can talent be developed. I must give you up, my Dulcie."

"I am not your Dulcie," the girl started, with a little flame in her cheeks.

She did not reproach him. What was the use of reproaching such a feeble thing as the poet? But when Marion had told the halfback the same tale and he had without compunction broken an engagement with Dulcie, giving as an excuse "I am going to cut out dances for awhile—sang gigis," she allowed herself the luxury of a retort.

"Then you won't miss me when I go away," she said pointedly.

"Go away?" he questioned.

"Yes. You see, I am eighteen tomorrow, and my money will be my own to use as I please, and I have so many plans"—

"But," the halfback gasped, "I thought you had lost your money!" He stopped, red to the ears.

"So did the poet," said Dulcie. "Marion told both of you some kind of tale, and both of you believed it."

"That wasn't the reason," the halfback excused.

Dulcie stopped him sternly. "Yes, it was. That was why you gave up girls—that was why you gave up me!" And she left him abruptly.

"I am half afraid to have you tell Billy," she told Marion that night. "If he should fail me"—

But Billy when he heard the news came straight to her.

"Marion has told me," he said simply. "I haven't much, Dulcie, but I love you, and I want you to marry me at once if you will."

Dulcie laid her hand on his arm. "Billy," she said, "I am not poor. I put you and the poet and the halfback to a test, and only you stood it. You are the knight of the true heart, and I love you."

After Billy had kissed her rapturously he asked, "Are you sure I won't bore you, Dulcie?"

"If you knew how I hated the poet's poems and the halfback's boasting you wouldn't ask such a silly question, Billy," she replied.

Unsightly Pimples
Covered His Face.

All diseases and blemishes of the skin are caused by the blood being in an impure condition.'

You cannot make a good complexion from the outside; you must get to the root of the trouble. You must make the blood pure and rich by taking a medicine that will drive out all the impurities and poisons from the blood; one that drives out everything from the system that is the cause of these unsightly skin eruptions.

The best blood cleansing medicine on the market to-day is Burdock Blood Bitters; a medicine that has been used with the greatest success for the past forty years; a medicine you don't experiment with when you buy it.

Mr. Lemor D. Cooke, Indian Path, N.S., writes: "I am writing you a few lines to tell you what Burdock Blood Bitters has done for me. Last winter my face was covered with pimples. I tried different kinds of medicine, and all seemed to fail. I was one day to a friend's house, and there they advised me to use B.B.B., so I purchased two bottles, and before I had them taken I found I was getting better. I got two more, and when they were finished I was completely cured. I find it is a great blood purifier, and I recommend it to all."

"I HAD ALMOST GIVEN UP."

Sarnia, Ont.—"About 27 years ago I was taken very bad, my blood, too, was in bad shape. I got so I had to go to bed and I was there for over three months. I could not eat and suffered untold agony. I had three of the best doctors I could get but it just seemed nothing was going to help me. I had almost given up. I thought I would never be any better and was willing to give up and die rather than suffer as I was. A neighbor of mine told me of Dr. Pierce's wonderful remedies and I decided to use them. My husband bought me six bottles of 'Favorite Prescription.' I had not taken it long until I felt better. In less than six weeks I was out of bed, and in less than six months I was cured and have been well ever since. Do all my own work. I have raised three daughters, two are married and have children. They have used it and they are healthy, so are their children. I am sure it was all on account of my having them use the medicine.

"I keep all of Dr. Pierce's medicines in the house. Have 'Favorite Prescription,' 'Golden Medical Discovery' and 'Smart-Weed'—anything prepared by Dr. Pierce is good. I also have a copy of the People's Common Sense Medical Adviser, which I have had 26 years; it has been very valuable to me."—Mrs. J. Way, 262 Ontario St., Sarnia, Ont.

If you are a sufferer, if your daughter, mother, sister need help, get Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription in liquid or tablet form from any medicine dealer to-day. Then address Dr. Pierce, Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., and get confidential medical advice entirely free.

A most valuable book in any home is Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser. A splendid 1008-page volume, with engravings and colored plates. A copy will be sent to anyone sending fifty cents in stamps, to pay the cost of wrapping and mailing only, to Dr. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

WED AT 13, KEPT SECRET 2 YEARS

NEW YORK, March 29.—Their friends on the upper west side were greatly surprised yesterday when they learned that about two years ago Miss Ruth Searle, fifteen years old the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Maurice P. Searle, of No. 280 Claremont Avenue, had been secretly married to Modisto A. Ortiz, of No. 257 West 111th Street, a student at New York University, and a member of a prominent Puerto Rican family.

The young woman, after continued disapproval from her parents against the attentions of Mr. Ortiz, yesterday confessed to her mother that she had been married to "Jack," as she calls him, in the summer of 1914, at the home of a friend of the bridegroom in Newark, N.J. After the marriage was verified parental forgiveness was offered the young couple.

At the time of her marriage Miss Searle was thirteen years old and was attending Public School No. 157. She had known Mr. Ortiz, who is now twenty-two, for about a year. Because of the youth of their daughter Mr. and Mrs. Searle were adverse to his attentions.

"You see, the only reason why 'Jack' wanted to marry me so quickly," explained Mrs. Ortiz, "was that he'd be sure of me when I was older. Of course it was a lot of fun to me. We were very good friends, but because I was so young mother didn't favour 'Jack'. Then one day after school we went over to Newark and were married. We came right back to New York and I went right home, as did he.

"I kept the secret and went on going to school. 'Jack' continued to call on me as before. Despite the protestations of my parents everything went on smoothly until about two months ago. Then mother said our meetings would have to stop, as I was so young. At that time I had finished school and was staying at home. Finally mother threatened to have my husband arrested. It was not until then that I confessed we were married.

"It all seems very strange to me now. Yesterday it was Good morning, Miss Searle,' while to-day it is 'How are you, Mrs. Orita?' Everything is all straightened out now, however, and mother is arranging a big home wedding.

"Mr. Orita will be graduated in June and then we can start housekeeping. No, I am not sorry a bit, but feel glad that mother knows all about it."

SOLDIERS REVIVE MACE.

Weapon Popular With Warriors of Old Not Out of Date.

English newspapers mention the fact that the mace, so popular with warriors in the days of knighthood, is not out of date in the present struggle. Both the German and the Allied trench warriors are armed with a weapon which can be called nothing but a mace. It is a short, heavy club covered with spikes. The bludgeons are supplied to parties which creep up on the enemy's trench under cover of darkness.

When an attacking party, small in number, enters an enemy's trench the success of their venture depends on their ability to avoid discovery by others in the same trench or an adjoining one. For this reason it is necessary to kill their opponents silently. The mace or spiked bludgeon makes this possible. By killing silently the few watchers in the trench attacked the enemy can gain a foothold for a larger attacking force.

Girls Should Be Taught How To Run Their Homes Before They're Engaged

Girls who are brought up in complete ignorance of the domestic arts are often in the depths of dire perplexity when they marry and must keep house for themselves.

It is a pity that more mothers do not bring their girls up to know how to run a house, for they must realise that in time their daughters will take charge of homes of their own.

Most women do not want to burden their young daughters with the cares of housekeeping, and on their part most girls are too busy with one thing or another, social gayeties, or, perhaps, business engagements, to take any interest in the system which lies back of every well-run house.

Yet for the girl's own sake every mother should insist upon it that she undertakes a certain part of the responsibilities of the home management. This does not mean that if the girl has a business position she should be expected to run the house as well. Certainly not, but the girls who are not tied down to offices should be given at least half of the duties of the housewife.

It is almost ridiculous to consider learning the domestic sciences in the way most girls try to learn them. The average girl never bothers her head with the mechanics of housekeeping until one fine day the right man comes along and puts ideas of matrimony into her head. Then with the thought of marrying and having a home of her own comes the desire to manage it.

Sometimes the engagement is of six or eight months, sometimes of a year's duration, and in that time the girl expects to learn all there is to know about housekeeping. Imagine it! Think of trying to learn in six months or a year what it takes half a lifetime to acquire. It is simply impossible. There is too much in good housekeeping to learn in a year or even three.

The perfect housewife has learned perfection in her art through much experience. She has had to find good solutions to the hundred and one little vexing problems which arise to trouble every housekeeper. She has found out by many experiments just why this way is not as satisfactory as that in doing some particular thing. She has gradually discovered the best way through attempts at improvement.

Then how can any girl expect to learn in one year all the detail work of running a home? No matter how anxious and eager she may be, it is an impossibility to master even one branch of the domestic sciences in that time. One can become with daily practice a fairly good cook in a year, but to master even the culinary art demands a great deal more time than that.

It is the duty of every mother to begin training her daughter in the business of the home while she is still in school. The girl can learn to cook, to sew, to make beds, to sweep and dust properly while she is growing up. Of course, when she has school work to do she should not be made to feel the housework a burden. She can learn one branch at a time, first cooking, afterward sewing, and so on, so that she will not feel bothered and so lose interest. If the mother tries to teach her daughter all the details of housework at once, in addition to her school work, she will feel overburdened and will not do her best.

Another Test Case of Quebec Marriage Law Settled Otherwise.

MONTREAL, March 24.—Justice Lafontaine has handed down judgment in the Superior Court annulling the marriage that took place at Trinity Church, Montreal, on Aug. 3, 1910, between Frank Paulin and Lucean Leduc.

Paulin submitted three seasons why his petition should be granted, two of which promised material for a fight on questions of law in this province. They are: (1) That Lucean Leduc was in reality Marie P. Renneville, and (2) that the marriage tok place before a Protestant minister, whereas, the parties being Roman Catholics, it ought to have taken place before a priest.

Justice Lafontaine ruled that all controversy was rendered unnecessary by the fact that the third reason submitted was the potent one. It was that the woman had been married on a previous occasion, in Wisconsin, that this marriage had not been annulled, and her legal husband was living.

Brown, Board of Trade secretary, has received a number of complaints from manufacturers, and Monday afternoon asked the publicity committee of the recruiting league to urge the Government to take effective methods at the frontier to prevent these men leaving the country.

A 10 Days Flesh Building Test For Thin Men and Women Who want to Increase Weight

Report Gains at rate of Three to Five Pounds a week in Many Instances. Full Directions Given.

Most thin, run-down men and women would probably be glad to increase their weight with ten to twenty-five pounds of good, firm, solid, healthy, stay-there flesh and fat if they believed it possible to accomplish such result by merely making the flesh making materials in their daily meals do a little more work than they are doing now.

This is said to be the chief reason why most thin people do stay underweight. They are so constituted that they fail to fully assimilate the nourishment of their food, a great deal of which passes from the body as waste. Increase assimilation so normal and normal weight follows as a matter of course.

If you are ten pounds or more underweight and believe this can't be done in your case, here is a simple inexpensive, and really harmless test that is well worth trying.

First weigh yourself. Then with each meal for ten days and each night as you go to bed take a single Sargol tablet. Then weigh yourself again and let the scales tell the story.

Sargol may not increase your weight as much as a pound a day but with whatever increase in your weight may be shown you can decide what its continued use for a few weeks further may be able to do for you. Sargol does not of itself make fat but consisting of a splendidly balanced combination of assimilative aids and flesh building agents it mixes with your meals for the purpose of making it easier for your blood to accept their strength, flesh and fat-making nourishment and turn it into strength, flesh and fat upon your body.

A great many people have gladly told that it succeeds. There are many reports like the following: "I have increased 12 pounds in less than a month," wrote a man from Colorado. Another man, who said that he had been losing over a pound a week and was under 155 pounds, gained two pounds the first week taking Sargol and "been gaining ever since." Last report over 170 pounds. Better than 15 pound gain. A lady from St. Louis wrote, "Have gained 15 pounds and am still gaining." Sargol as a rule should be taken 30 days or more where results like above are desired.

The tablets are small, easily swallowed, produce no disagreeable effect, contain no habit drugs, are harmless and not at all expensive as compared with results said to be obtained.

NOTE—Sargol, referred to above, is well known as a flesh builder to many of the leading local druggists who furthermore sell it on the positive guarantee, as found in each large package, of satisfactory weight increase or money back. In view of this liberal offer and the harmless nature of the remedy, it would seem that all who desire increased weight should be glad to give this method a trial.

If you find a druggist who is unable to supply you send $1.00 money order or registered letter to the National Laboratories, 74 St. Antoine St., Montreal and a complete ten days treatment will be sent you postpaid, in plain package.

A Great National Public Utility

That concerns all merchants and all people

THE original Cash Register rang a bell, indicated and recorded the amount of the purchase. It benefited the merchant only.

In a third of a century this old model has developed into a Cash Register that directly benefits every man, woman, and child who spends money in a store.

This new Cash Register equally concerns every merchant and clerk, every banker and wholesaler in this land.

It prints on this the amount paid or charged.

On this is also printed the date of the sale and who made it.

It prevents disputes over charges and bills paid.

It saves shoppers' time.

It gives the merchant all his profits. It gives him more money for his family.

It promotes more and quicker sales.

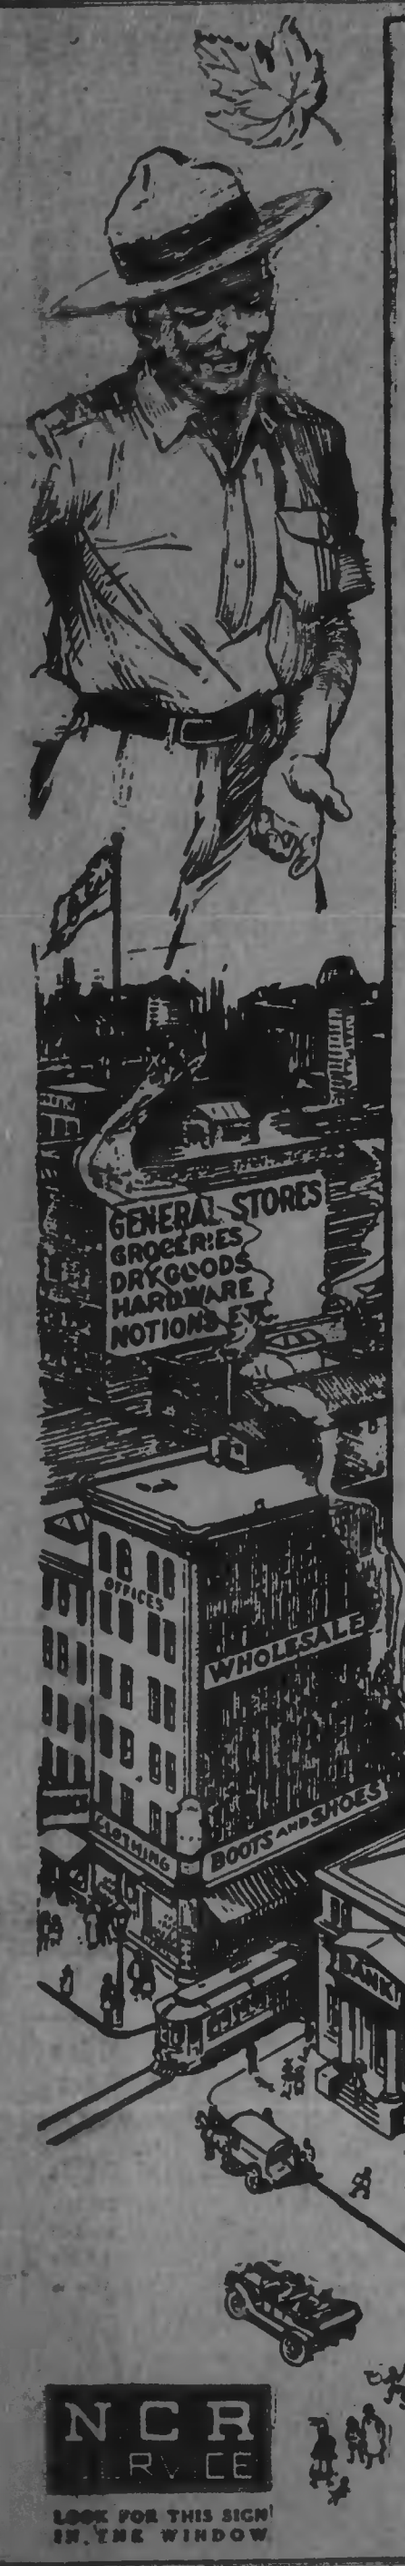
It rewards the diligent clerk by telling his employer which one makes the largest number of sales and which one gets the greatest amount of business.

It assures the banker additional security for the money he loans the merchant.

It gives the wholesaler additional assurance that the merchant will have money to pay his bills.

It furnishes the banker and the wholesaler mechanical evidence that the merchant's statement of his business is correct.

It is a business necessity.



Merchants!

We have new 1916 models that give this perfect service.

Write us to-day or see our agent in your city and learn how you can secure one of these public service machines.

Liberal allowances will be made for old National Cash Registers that were good in their day, but do not so completely protect you or give the valuable service our 1916 models do.

ADOPTS OTHER GIRL'S BABY

Chicago Woman Says That She is Proud Of It.

CHICAGO, March 24.—"I have forgiven my husband, and I pity the girl who bore him the child. My heart still aches for her whose loving mistake brought her such bitter experience."

So Mrs. Charles W. Stockwell, of this city, spoke yesterday in announcing that she had adopted her husband's illegitimate child.

Mrs. Stockwell is not a mother. Before the baby in the case was born she heard the circumstances and sanctioned Miss Gertrude Rhodes, who came with her mother. The wife was impressed with the girl.

"I knew Gertrude was a good girl and I told her I wanted my husband's baby. When the child was born I was as proud as if I were the mother," she said.

SAVES EARS FROM SHOCK.

New Device Provided the British Artillerymen.

NEW YORK, March 25.—A new device to protect the ear drums of artillerymen during engagements on the western front has recently been distributed by the British army, according to William Frey of Boston, recently a member of a British artillery corps, who arrived here yesterday. The device fits into the ears and is so constructed that the shock resulting from the discharge of big guns is absorbed by wire coils before it reaches the ear drums. Ordinary conversation, however, can be easily heard, the device interrupting only heavy atmospheric shocks.

Frey said he had secured his discharge on learning that the United States was likely to become involved in the Mexican troubles.

ECZEMA AND SORE EYES

"My boy, Frank, seemed weak sighted and took a very severe cold," writes Mrs. D. Stevens, Hines, Man. "The many medicines used did not seem to benefit him until we tried Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine, and found it to be exactly what was wanted to cure him." No treatment is so thorough and effective as a cure for croup and bronchitis.

OLD TIES FOR TRENCHES.

British Would Buy Half Million From American Railroads.

An offer of 5 cents a piece for 100,000 cast-off railroad ties was received a few weeks ago by the Boston and Maine Railroad from the British Government. Formerly the railroad burned all its old ties, but orders were sent throughout the system, directing that they be saved. It is understood that the British Government is negotiating with other railroads with the hope of obtaining a half million ties for use in constructing trenches in France.

Soldiers Are Enjoying Rest At Alexandria

Members "Living Like Millionaires" in Egyptian City, Says Correspondent

Alexandria, Egypt, March 27. — Every minute of the day is being taken up with seeing the sights of Alexandria and the surrounding country by the boys of No. 3 Canadian Stationary Hospital during their vacation here. When the unit is moved away there will not be a place of interest that has not been explored and its history learned, and the boys want to see everything going as those who leave this time will not return unless brought back while still in the army. The unit was brought here for a rest after six months of service on Lemnos and they are getting it, but it is only a mental rest and not a physical one as they spend more time sight-seeing here than they spent on duty in the hospital.

There are hundreds of things to see, some of them being real and others for the convenience of guides, who reap a rich harvest from strangers in the city. If one asks for some certain place of interest and it doesn't happen to be in this locality the guides are most obliging, for a dollar or so, and they will take the sight-seer to a place and claim it to be the identical spot asked for. The difference in language makes arguing useless and the Egyptian is most insistent in his claims.

Many Strange Scenes.

To watch the people themselves is a sight worth seeing. With a mixed population such as Alexandria has there are so many different manners and habits that there is always something strange going on. The city is made up of Egyptians, Greeks, French, Italians and English speaking races. Each has its own district, and notwithstanding the fact that the city is in Egypt the Italians and French seem to have control of the commercial centres. Most of the big stores are owned by French and Italians and to the visitor it seems that the native people are greatly in the minority.

While the entire city is governed by one council, each section has its own police court and policemen. If a Greek is arrested by Egyptian or Italian police he is turned over to the Greek authorities and the same applies the other way. The military authorities take over all the soldiers and have their own piquets and police and courts.

After being practically isolated from the rest of the world for six months the boys naturally wanted some amusement the first night in the city and they visited the theatres. Movies are the chief feature of the shows, with a little grand opera in all languages and a few acrobatic stunts. There is no thought given to musical comedy or popular airs. The boys were treated to "Silver Bells," a popular piece in Canada about six or eight years ago. Here it went well this week.

The theatres are on the style of the American roof gardens. The audience is seated at small tables and drinks are served, or light lunches. There are only two theatres in the city where the seating arrangements are the same as in Canada. As all the pictures and others items on the programme are in French or Egyptian, the English-speaking people can only use their imagination and interest in the pictures lags to a certain extent.

Egyptian Money Strange.

When the unit landed in Egypt they had to learn to count money all over again, changing from the pence, shilling and pound to the peastres. At first the money seemed impossible with the Egyptian stamp and figure but some one solved the difficulty by informing the boys that a peastre was the equivalent to five cents in Canadian money. The pieces are about the same size as the five-cent piece and two the size of ten-cent pieces. The coins range in value from one peastre to 20 peastres in silver and the bills are of 50 and 100 peastres in value. The money is more simple than the English system.

The liveliest industry in the city is the souvenir selling game. Every street is inhabited, or better, infested, by a bunch of Arabs selling everything from a pack of playing cards to five turkeys. The vendors are most insistent and follow their would-be quarry for a block, each few yards bringing a reduction in price. By the end of the block the price has been reduced by half.

Within a hundred yards of the camp the Mediterranean Sea affords excellent surf bathing. There is no swimming owing to the big swells that roll in but it is great sport along the shore. The military authorities will not allow soldiers to go into the water unless there are at least four. This is to afford safety and prevent accidents. In case one man should be overcome these is always assistance handy.

The Nursing Sisters are billeted in a large hotel on the outskirts of the city while the unit is resting and the young ladies are seeing everything that is going and making up for their long stay on the island.

With cafes and restaurants handy and the prices reasonable the boys are none too keen on government rations and every night the boys eat like millionaires, patronizing the big eating places of the city and the amount they stow away at one sitting would surprise even their own people. After sticking to roast beef or stew for the long stay on Lemnos fish, game and other suppers are their speed and the boys have no limit. They don't know where they are going next and they are filling up in anticipation of a sojourn back to rations.

All the boys are in the best of health and show no ill effects of Lemnos. There is not a case of sickness in the camp.

A good way to prevent wear under the arms of corset covers is to reinforce them, when made, with a shield-shaped piece.

RECTOR'S RACING DEBTS.

Had "Great Luck and Very Good Information.

The betting debts of a rector who was said to have had 'great luck and very good information' were the subject of an action in the King's Bench Division in London recently.

Mr. Rowland Harker, who appeared for Mr. Aston, explained that for many years his client and the rector had betting transactions together. The rector met with good fortune and received large sums of money, but now he pleaded the Gaming Act.

"Was it horse racing?" asked the judge.

"Yes, and on an extensive scale," said counsel.

"A dreadful thing," Mr. Justice Ridley commented, but Mr. Harker added: "He seems to have had great luckk and very good information for many years."

"CASCARETS" BEST IF HEADACHY, BILIOUS, SICK, CONSTIPATED

Best For Liver And Bowels, Bad Breath Bad Colds, Sour Stomach

Get a 10-cent box.

Sick headache, biliousness, coated tongue, head and nose clogged up with a cold—always trace this to torpid liver; delayed, fermenting food in the bowels or sour, gassy stomach.

Poisonous matter clogged in the intestines, instead of being cast out of the system is re-absorbed into the blood. When this poison reaches the delicate brain tissue it causes congestion and that dull, throbbing, sickening headache.

Cascarets immediately cleanse the stomach, remove the sour, undigested food and foul gases, take the excess bile from the liver and carry out all the constipated waste matter and poisons in the bowels.

A Cascaret to-night will surely straighten you out by morning. They work while you sleep—a 10-cent box from your druggist means your head clear, stomach sweet and your liver and bowels regular for months.

French Make Successful Counter Attacks

GERMAN PLOTS AGAINST CANADA DISCLOSED

French Troops Carry Part of German Avoncourt Positions

General Joffre's Men Make Successful Attack on Works Where Germans Attacked Yesterday---German Assault on Malancourt Was Made With New Division Which Was Thrown Back With Heavy Losses.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

PARIS, March 29.—The French troops made an attack last night on Avocourt wood, west of the Meuse, where the German assault was made yesterday. The official statement to-day says the French carried part of the works which the Germans constructed. The Germans made a fierce counter-attack, but were driven back with heavy losses. They made no other effort to recover the lost ground. The recent German attack upon Malancourt was made with a fresh division, which was thrown back with large losses.

In the Argonne there was heavy artillery firing around Haute, Chevauchee and south of Cheppy wood. The French made some progress in this fighting, notably in German communicating trenches, north of Avocourt.

Twenty Killed in Air Raid in Greece

Special to The Examiner:

PARIS, March 29.—Twenty persons were killed, between 30 and 40 were wounded, and two German aeroplanes were destroyed, in an aerial raid over Saloniks on Monday, according to an official statement.

Austrian Aviators Make Raid on Venice

Special to The Examiner.

VIENNA, March 29.—Austrian aviators have attacked Venice for the seventh time since the beginning of the war, the War Office announced today.

DUTCH STEAMER DUIVELAND HAS BEEN SUNK

Examiner Special:

LONDON, March 29.—The 1,297-ton Dutch steamer Duiveland has been sunk. All aboard her were saved.
The Russian steamer Ottoma has also been sunk. The crew was saved.

French Front Broken is the German Claim

Special to The Examiner:

BERLIN, March 29.—German troops have broken the French front for more than 2,000 yards, capturing several lines of trenches in the fighting north of Malancourt, ten miles, northwest of Verdun, the War Office announced this afternoon. The Germans captured 493 prisoners and five guns.

Druggists Are Opposed To More Liquor Business

Local Association Unlamously Adopts Resolution Adverse to Retailing Liquor That Now Flows Over the Bar—Will Forward It to Government.

That the local druggists are entirely out of sympathy with the prospect of becoming dispensers of liquor when the hotel bars are closed was clearly shown this morning when the following resolution was unanimously passed at a meeting attended by all the members of the Peterborough Retail Druggists' Association:

"That at a meeting of the Retail Druggists of Peterborough, called for the purpose of discussing the proposed prohibitory legislation, or that part thereof referring to the sale of liquors by druggists, it was unanimously agreed that the profession viewed with grave concern the proposition as outlined, and respectfully suggest that the sale of liquors should not be placed in the hands of the retail drug stores."

It is understood that a copy of this resolution by all the members will be forwarded to the Provincial authorities. Apparently the druggists do not re-echo the senstiment of the couplet:

"Little drug store don't you cry,
You'll be a grog shop bye-and-bye."

OBITUARY

MRS. PATRICK GEREGHTY.

The death occurred at twelve-thirty this morning at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. Jas. Collins, 220 Princess street, of Mrs. Patrick Gereghty. The deceased was born in Ireland, but had lived in Peterborough a number of years. Her husband predeceased her a number of years ago. Four sons and four daughters are left to mourn her loss. The daughters are: Mrs. E. Paquette and Mrs. James Collins, city; Mrs. M. Brennahan, Boston, and Mrs. Gallagher, Hazelton, Pa. The sons are. Messrs. Wm. this city; James, Parry Sound; Thos., Fort William, and John, of Boston.

The funeral will take place on Thursday at 9 o'clock from the above residence, to the Church of the Sacred Heart to St. Peter's cemetery.

Mr. Wm. Nickle M.P. To Be Present at Friday's Meeting

Mr. Wm. Nickle, M.P., one of the best speakers in Canada, will be present at the meeting in the Market Hall on Friday night and will present to the Cabinet Ministers and the delegates who are to be here, what Central and Eastern Ontario needs and wants. It is likely an association will be formed, looking to the future development of power. Citizens should turn one in large numbers, and learn something of the future of this district.

GERMAN PLOTS AGAINST CANADA ARE DISCLOSED

Von Papen and His Agents Expected to Prevent Canadian Troops From Leaving For Overseas by Trying to Start a Revolution Here

BLOW UP BRIDGES

Special to The Examiner.

NEW YORK, March 29.—Capt. Horst Von Der Goltz, secret agent of the German Government, who has confessed that he acted as the go-between of Capt. Von Papen and the men who were engaged to dynamite the Canadian railroad bridges, and who afterward escaped to Europe, arrived here yesterday from Liverpool in charge of Scotland yard detectives. Just before the European war started he became implicated at Washington with Von Papen where, according to information which the Government has, a series of plots concerning Canada was arranged. It was decided to start a revolution in Canada under the cry of annexation to the United States. Arms were to be sent across the frontier, and, by dynamiting the bridges, it was thought that the Canadian expeditionary troops would be prevented from leaving for England. The Canadian plot miscarried through the delay of one of the agents, said to be a lawyer in Buffalo, who waited until it was too late. The nucleus of the revolution was started successfully, but as there was no further move in the matter by the German agents, it fell through, and the Canadian troops sailed for England.

A Store of Fashionable Interest to Ladies

A Natty Opening—Exclusive Ready-to-Wear—Clever Window and Interior Dressing

The rehabilitation of the Reid Ladies' Store, No. 393 George street, has added increased interest to these fashionable ladies' furnishing parlours. The stock and fixtures have been entirely re-arranged and the new show cases and floor cases contribute to the style and attractive appearance of the swell interior.

The regular spring opening this week has been attended by many of the best dressed ladies of the city, and the individuality of the displays has received favourable criticism.

The dominant notes in the Reid Store collection are the attractive designs of suits, coats, dresses, skirts and blouses for spring wear. Models of unusual distinction characterize the display. Daintily feminine are the new frocks, blouses and skirts. Extreme, eccentric or fictitious styles do not appeal to the Reid Co., yet their lines follow the dictates of the best of the leading authorities.

The window trims in the Reid Store are quite clever—the effect being gay and spring like, with panelling in French grey and old rose, and garlands of pretty apple blossom.

Help Yourself To The Treat of The Season

If you are Scotch—hear Mr. Stratton's imitations of Harry Lauder, and hear the 39rd Band play "Wee McGregor."
If you are Irish—You will enjoy "Eileen Alanna," as played and sung by the 93rd Band.
If you love operatic music — hear "Lohengrin" and "William Tell."
If you want to give yourself a treat and the band a boost, don't miss the popular concert in Victoria Hall on Saturday night—Admission 10 and 15c.

ANOTHER ADDRESS FROM CAPT. WILLIAMS ON SATURDAY MORNING

Speaker Whose Magnetic Speech on Sunday Created Such a Powerful Impression to Pay Another Visit to Peterborough---More Canadian Troops Arrive Safely--To-day's Orders and General Military News.

It will be welcome news to those who heard Capt. Williams, Chaplain of the 109th Battalion, speak at the Armouries on Sunday night, that Capt. Williams is returning to Peterborough at the end of the week, and will give an address at the Market on Saturday morning. Capt. Williams is a magnetic speaker and his speech on Sunday was one of the best that has been delivered here.

The announcement that the 93rd Battalion Band is to give a popular concert in Victoria Hall on Saturday evening has caused much pleasure among music lovers of the city, and Bandmaster Hughes' aggregation should be greeted by a large audience. The people of Peterborough are immensely proud of their crack overseas band and they have an opportunity now of showing their appreciation by attending Saturday's big concert. The admission is only 15 and 10 cents. The band will be assisted by Mr. T. Stratton, Peterborough's Harry Lauder.

The 93rd Battalion is now aiming at the 1,000 mark. The energetic work of the recruiting committee is bearing fruit and it is hoped that when the 93rd leaves for camp in the middle of May the Battalion will be full strength.

With a little help from some parts of Peterborough County that have so far done little, the 93rd Battalion would be very close to strength now Recruiting figures show that the city of Peterborough after raising seventy-five per cent. of the earlier platoons of the battalion, is still contributing 50 per cent. of the men coming into the Battalion.

Pte. G. Hawke of No. 1 platoon, 93rd Battalion, has been transferred to the 50th Battalion, C.E.F., and left this afternoon. Pte. Hawke was formerly a member of C Company, 75th Regiment, and is a good marksman. He will be missed by the men of No 1 platoon.

The 93rd Battalion took full advantage of the good weather to-day by marching out morning and afternoon. The parades attracted a lot of attention.

Entertainment.

A very pleasant entertainment was given at the Recreation rooms on Simcoe street last evening by some of the ladies of the congregation of St. John's church. Some two hundred were present. Fuller particulars of this appear in another column.

Last September the Wine Clerks and Brewery Workers of Peterborough sent a big parcel of tobacco to the Peterborough soldiers overseas. The shipment has evidently been delayed en route as Secretary John Jayes has just received the following appreciative letter from Major A. G. Carruthers, of the 39th Battalion, formerly of the 57th Regiment:

West Sandling Camp.
Shorncliffe, Kent,
England.
March 10, 1916

My Dear Friend,—You will recognize the enclosed slip taken from a parcel I received from you only a short time ago. The date is Sept. 28, which made it a very long time on the road. With the assistance of Sergt. Wes. Edwards, my pioneer sergeant, we have distributed your cigarettes, tobacco and paper to those Peterborough boys who are still with us in this camp and battalion. Needless to say the kindness of your association at home in thinking so kindly of the men here is much appreciated by us all. With tobacco in England just double the price which it is at home, your generous gift was more than welcome. Please convey to the members of the Wine Clerks' and Brewery Workers of which so many are amongst our best friends, our gratitude and thanks. We are here trying in a measure to uphold the honour of the city which we claim as our good home, and if spared, hope to return some day, giving a good account of ourselves. We are all well, sitting up and taking nourishment, when it is to be, got.

Good luck to you all.

Yours sincerely,
A. G. CARRUTHERS,
Major 39th Battalion.

OTTAWA, March 28.—It is officially announced through the chief press censor's office that the troopship Metagama, which sailed from Canada on March 11, and the troopship Lapland, which sailed on March 13, have arrived safely in England.

The Metagama had on board the following troops:

Three divisional signalling companies, five officers, 198 men.
Third Divisional Ammunition Column, 14 officers, 544 men.
Reinforcements engineers, 43 officers, 103 men.
Signallers, 10 officers.
Medical, three officers, 90 men.
Civilian medical practitioners for army, nine.
Details, three officers, five men.
Total, 105 officers and 1,625 men.

The Lapland had on board the following troops:

33rd Battalion, 40 officers, 946 men.
45th Battalion, 38 officers, 1,119 men.
Draft Royal Canadian Dragoons, three officers, 75 men.
Draft 1st Canadian Pioneer Battalion, three officers, 100 men.
Officer for R.A.M.C., one.
Total, 85 officers and 2,240 men.
Total troops aboard both vessels, 4,955.

Recruiting Notes.

From the 22nd of March to the 28th day of March inclusive, 37 men have been taken on the strength of the 93rd Battalion, making an average of over six men a day. Of this number seventeen have enlisted from the City of Peterborough, and the remainder from the County.

Street signs electrically lighted have been placed at the corner of George and Hunter, George and Simcoe, and George and Charlotte streets, while others are being made.

This afternoon ten platoons will be used for recruiting purposes. Each platoon will have assigned to it a definite number of places to visit inorder to obtain information as well as to interview certain individuals. The great difficulty the recruiters are having at present is finding the eligible men at home as many of them are away in the day time, but this is being met by performing more of the work at night.

The military census of the City which has just been completed is being used every day, and the same is proving to be of much help, but necessarily there must be some parts of the City where the canvas has not been as thorough as others, and if any names of eligble young men are known it would be of great assistance if such information was given to the Headquarters on Simcoe street.

TO-DAY'S ORDERS.

Following are the Battalion Orders by Lieut.-Col. T. J. Johnston, Officer commanding 93rd Overseas Battalion, C.E.F., Headquarters Peterborough. Number 78, March 28th, 1916.

MANY WERE KILLED IN A BIG RAILWAY COLLISION

20th Century Limited Smashed into Two Wrecked Lake Shore Trains at Amherst Ohio Early To day.

TWO SCORE INJURED

CLEVELAND, O., March 29.—The Twentieth Century Limited, westbound, and two other Lake Shore trains, east bound, collided early today, at Amherst, Ohio, 37 miles west of Cleveland. Unofficial reports said sixteen bodies had been taken from the wreckage, and that the injured numbered two scores. The wreck occurred in a thick fog. The rear section of Train No. 34, eastbound, ran into the first section. A few minutes later the Twentieth Century Limited, going west, ploughed through the two wrecked trains. Three cars were totally demolished, and all cars were thrown from the track. One engine which stayed on the track, managed to clear with one car bearing the dead and injured who were taken to Elyria, five miles away. The Twentieth Century was derailed, but nobody on it was injured.

CLEVELAND, March 29.—Last statement issued by the New York Central reported twenty-one dead and thirty injured, the toll number of victims of Twentieth Century Limited wreck near Amherst. D. Finch-man and Miss Dora Rossbury of Toronto are among the victims.

FLOOD FORCED RESIDENTS OUT OF THEIR HOMES

Spring Freshets Brought About Bad Flood in Ashburnham Yesterday--Streets in Some Parts Were Impassable as a Result

CELLARS FILLED TO FLOORS

The sudden breaking away of a choked up culvert running under the canal, through the Curtis brickyard, and down through Ashburnham, was the cause of many cellars being flooded in the East Ward yesterday, forcing some residents to vacate their places last night. The water began to rise about eleven o'clock yesterday morning and continued doing so with great rapidity, until last evening at six o'clock, Hunter, Mark, and Rogers streets were impassable at many points. Pedestrians returning home accustomed to go by way of Hunter street were obliged to go around by Burnham street and Driscoll Terrace in order to reach their destination. The water was flowing over Hunter street at a considerable depth

At an early hour this morning the water had greatly subsided, and those whose places had been flooded were able to return; to their homes, although some water still remained in their cellars. Such an occurrence has not taken place in Ashburnham for years, the creek having been diverted to empty into the river at a point above the dam, usually carrying the surplus water in the spring. However this new channel was not sufficient to carry away the great flow of water yesterday. Consequently it went down through the old creek.

About ten years ago, it will be remembered, the canal broke open near the Curtis brickyard and many homes in the East Ward were badly flooded

The Damage Done.

The chief complaint following yesterday's deluge was flooded cellars, resulting in furnaces being put out of commission and otherwise causing great inconvenience. Mrs Gasking and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Simpson and family, Mr. and Mrs. John Primeau, Jr. and family, were obliged to leave their homes last night. Also Mr. and Mrs. Fred Morris and daughter, Mark street, were obliged to take quarters elsewhere, their house being directly in the path of the flood. A number of chickens belonging to Mrs. S. Gaskins were drowned. An idea of the depth of the watr in som places ih shown in the fact that the water rose about half way up the waiting room at the Mark street rink.

Wm. Kelly Will Leave the City

Well Known Police Court Character Was Given Ten Minutes in Which to Perform the Feat—Fines Imposed

Ten minutes in which to get out of the city was all that William Kelly asked of Police Magistrate Dumble in this morning's Police Court. As Kelly looked a likely prospect for some farmer in need of help he was allowed to go.

Fined Two Dollars.

For allowing a horse to stand at the corner of Hunter and Aylmer streets, unattended and without being properly secured, Nelson Simmons paid a fine of two dollars.

Exceeded Speed Limit.

Both Patrol Sergeant Kidd and P. C. Dickson swore that William Irwin exceeded the speed limit of ten miles an hour while travelling up George street on Friday evening last. Irwin said he couldn't do it because he had a load of hockey players together with their baggage, and besides the roads were very bad. The evidence of the police prevailed and Irwin was fined five dollars. He was given one week in which to furnish a reason why he was not in possession of a license, which is required of all those who drive an automobile for hire or gain.

TAX RATE BEFORE COUNCIL TO-NIGHT

Recommendation of the Committee of the Whole Is Due for Adoption

A meeting of the Council has been called to-night for the purpose of confirming the 1916 tax rate as adopted at a recent meeting of the Committee of the Whole. While it is likely that the members will stand by their former decision anything is possible in the form of a departure from the position already taken. The fact that some members have previously shown their opposition to the reduction of civic salaries may be regarded as an earnest of their renewed activities against the measure to-night. At the same time there are other members who feel that they have struck a rate that pleases the great majority of property owners and it will be their desire to maintain the 27 mills.

OIL FOR THE CITY'S STREETS

Board of Works Committee Will Recommend That a Supply Be Secured at Ten Cents a Gallon

At a meeting of the Board of Works held last evening it was decided to recommend that the offer of the British-American Oil Company respecting a good grade of road oil at ten cents a gallon, be accepted with the understanding that the city shall have the advantage of any drop in price. Last year oil of a similar quality was supplied at six and a half cents a gallon.

City Engineer Parsons reported that the cost of a wagon road over the old Dickson dam approaches would be in the neighbourhood of $6,679. The matter was left over.

Will Erecet Poles.

Permission was granted to the Bell Telephone Company to erect poles on Perry and Maple streets.

Ex-Ald. G. W. Green addressed a letter to the Board, stating his willingness to deed to the city the property owned by him across Bonacord street and which formerly comprised a part of the creek. The Board decided to accept Mr. Green's offer.

"Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unsurpassed."

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 29, 1916

WITH A STRING TO IT."

Comment founded upon a subject founded upon a misleading despatch is not satisfactory. A despatch under date, Ottawa, March 28, to the Mail and Empire, stated:

The Government has passed an order-in-council prohibiting the export of nickel to any but British countries. The order applies to nickel ore and nickel matte.

This is misleading; and it is a pity that so satisfactory an action should have "a string to it." The action of the Government has taken a prohibitory nature, only to a very limited extent. It is not true that, as stated, the "order-in-council, prohibits the export of nickel" in any important or effective sense. The prohibition applies to only one small exporting company, and even in that case it is not prohibitory, but permissive. Sir Robert Borden said in explanation:

"It is proposed not to prohibit the export of nickel, but to continue it under license."

This permissive "prohibition of export" is subject, Sir Robert added, to the exporting company, entering into such arrangements "as those made with the International Nickel Company of New Jersey." All this is not what a sound Canadian policy of Canada for the Canadians demands. It is true that the Government is trying to induce the International Nickel Company to erect a plant in Canada for the treatment of nickel ores in Canada; but this has the objectionable feature of perpetuating the practical monopoly of our nickel resources of which the International Company has been allowed to establish. We can't easily deprive the company of its vested interests in our mines. But the establishment of a Government refinery would permit the Government to impose the terms upon which refinement would be made, and thus break the force of, if not destroy, the monopoly. As pointed out by the Globe, the present Government proposal "seems to contemplate the perpetuation of the monopoly now enjoyed by the Nickel Trust of the refining of nickel on this side of the Atlantic." The Government does not seem to be able to rise to the height of a real national policy in relation to our nickel—one that would assure that not only Canadian nickel should not find its way to our enemy to be used against us, but that Canada, at home, should have the fullest benefit in the way of labour and industrial operation of the refinement of our own nickel ores—eighty-five per cent. of what the world contains. With our possession of the chief bulk of the nickel deposits in the world, and with the tremendous demands the wide use of nickel makes, there seems to be no perceivable limit to the advantage Canada would gain from the adoption of a big national policy of home treatment and home control of nickel; and the same policy applied to the most important of our raw resources would give correspondingly greater advantages. To get rich by production, instead of by taxation, is the true national policy.

MORE "GRAFT" CHARGES.

The astonishing charges of "graft" or excessive and unearned profits, in connection with munitions contracts, made in the House yesterday, must challenge attention. The Liberal Opposition in Parliament have voted readily and willingly for all appropriations and expenditures needed to enable Canada to successfully finance her big share in this war. The Government, in a sense, demanded this action from the Opposition, and the demand was loyally met. Now the Opposition demands of the government investigation of charges that involve question of the sums — or large portions of them—voted unanimously, being worse than wasted. It is difficult to see how the government can consistently deny investigation of so serious charges so specifically and circumstantially made. There be little in the charges made, but they are specific and authoritatively submitted—on the responsibility of responsible members of parliament; and Canada will be well satisfied with the result of investigation that will reveal their baselessness. If the charges are well founded, Canada, which has her good name, as well as her liberties to protect, has a right to the truth.

COLOSSAL IMPUDENCE.

Mr. H. C. Hocken, ex-Mayor of Toronto, and further described as editor of the Orange Sentinel, and a high official in that wing of the Conservative party, publishes an open letter to Sir Wilfrid Laurier, appealing to him to use his influence to put a stop to the bilingual agitation This open letter, for sheer impudence, is in a class by itself. After somewhat laboured toadyism in assertion of, Sir Wilfrid being the only man in Canada with sufficient influence to persuade the French Canadians to lie down and be good—take their medicine and keep quiet—Mr Hocken ventures to lecture Sir Wilfrid in this style:

Do you realize that you have surrendered the leadership of the French race in Canada to the editor of Le Devoir?

This is the crowning touch of impudence. Henri Bourassa is the editor of Le Devoir, the organ and mouthpiece of the Nationalists, who are effectively the protagonists of the bilingual agitation. If Sir Wilfrid has lost his place as leader of the French Canadian people—as he has not done — he owes it to the good offices of Mr. Hocken, the Order he represents, the Society he heads, and the party with which it is affiliated Nationalism owes its existence, if not its origin, to the Conservative party When it first raised its puny and disloyal head and took first form in a candidate against the Laurier candidate in the Arthabaska bye-election in Quebec, this was the real beginning. The Conservatives failed to put a candidate in the field in order to give the Nationalist candidate a good chance. With Conservative sympathy, if not help, the Nationalist candidate was elected, amidst official Conservative rejoicing and congratulations. That victory put Nationalism on its feet—gave it concrete existence. It has since been nurtured fostered, adopted and exalted to official dignity by the same party. In 1911, Mr. Hocken and the Orange Sentinel, and the Order he leads, joined hands with the Conservative party in wielding the club to "smash Laurier." Bourassa, the head and front of Nationalism—in turn the head and front of bilingualism—was brought into Ontario to teach from Conservative platforms the loyal "Orangistes" of Ontario how to vote Nationalist candidates in Quebec were financed by Conservative party funds, with the result that a considerable representation of the faction was elected as supporters of the Conservative party, on the condition that Mr. Borden was to kill the Laurier Naval Bill and do nothing for the naval defence of Canada that would lead to good Nationalist mothers having their "sons disemboweled in fighting British battles." By Nationalist help Laurier was defeated but he didn't "surrender the leadership to Bourassa," and if he was temporarily deposed from the position of national leader he owes it to Mr. Bourassa and his pals.—Mr Hocken, the Orange Order, and the party with which it is affiliated. If Mr. Hocken is sincere, he should have addressed his open letter to Sir Robert Borden, who has in his cabinet, and has had since he took office, two or three Nationalist ministers, and counts about twenty Nationalists in his parliamentary following. Sir Robert should have great influence with the Nationalist element, which he leads, unless, as indeed, seems to be the case, it controls him. Nationalism, whose declared disloyalty serves to tone down and keep within the limits of reasonable exuberance the loyalty of the party with which it is associated and allied, is to be regarded as the main stay and soul of bilingualism which is simply an answer to, and a natural result of, the bigotted campaign of abuse by Ontario extremists against French Canadians and the French language.

"John Barleycorn" Rapidly Losing All His Friends

We are to do with less paper and wood and fruit and other necessary things because the "Brewer's Dray Blocks the Way"—a topsy-turvy view of life worthy of the produce of the Brewer's Dray.

Much of the stuff which fills the Brewer's Dray comes across the sea in ships, and these ships are wanted for more important goods, but instead of cutting down the brewers' supplies other more important things are to be kept out of the country.

One of the most striking protests against this monstrous inversion of things is that made by one who should know—Sir Alfred Booth, the chairman of the Cunard Steamship Company. The Spectator, which publishes this speech, adds:

"The transport problem demands prohibition till the war is over. All roads seem to lead to that conclusion.

A Shipowner's Protest.

Sir Alfred Booth said:

"Every single thing you eat, drink, or use in any way entaails services of many kinds before it can be brought to your doors. You know very well that the great bulk of the raw materials we use comes from abroad. The service which is absorbed is therefore, the service of bringing the raw material over in our ships to this country from America, Australia, or wherever else it may be produced. Then come the cartage and railway haulage to the place of manufacture, the labour which is put into the raw material to turn it into the finished article — bread, clothes, furniture, or whatever it may be; and, again, the railway haulage and cartage required to deliver it first to the retailer and then very likely to your own homes. Now each one of these services is strictly limited on account of the war.

"During the first twelve months of the war about one-fifth of all our ocean-going steamers were taken up by the Government for naval or military purposes. With the remainder we were able, but only just able, to bring in from abroad all the products which we wanted here. At the present moment the Government is employing for naval and military purposes one-fourth of these ships of ours instead of one-fifth. At the same time, the shipments of munitions of war from America will be much greater during the coming months than they have been in the past. It therefore stands to reason, that we cannot go on importing foodstuffs and other commodities at the same rate as a year ago.

"It is exactly the same story with regard to inland transport—cartage and railway haulage. An enormous proportion of the total available supply is absorbed in Government work. Even if more trucks and engines could be obtained, there is very definite limit to the amount of traffic which can be passed through the terminals and over the rails in a given time. You may take it from me that this limit has already been reached and that we have scarcely yet touched the edge of the new demands which will be made by the increased output of shells.

"On all these services—sea transport, labour, land transport — the Government must have the first call if we mean to win the war.

"The most glaring example of a form of consumption which we could perfectly well dispense with is the drink traffic. I am not thinking now of the temperance side of this question. Important though that it is, we have got far beyond that now. I am thinking of the demand which this trade makes upon the services of our ships, our railways and carts, and of our labour.

30,000 Tons a Week.

"Thirty thousand tons a week of barley, and other produce are brought into this country for the brewing and distilling trades. Think of the demands this means on the depleted resources of our mercantile marine. Then all this stuff, together with the larger quantity which is grown at home, has to be carted and hauled by rail to the brewery or distillery. Then it all has to be brought back again and distributed to the consumer. In addition to this six thousand miners are kept permanently employed getting coal, and thirty-six thousand tons of coal have to be sent every week to these breweries and distilleries. Taken in the aggregate, the services absorbed by this trade are on a gigantic scale, and the net result of it all is a decrease in national efficiency. I say in all seriousness that, if we are to maintain our armies in the field, we shall before very long have to choose between bread and beer.

"But don't let it come to that," said Sir Alfred Booth, "choose your own course now as free men or women. If you are not abstainers already, take the King's pledge and abstain from wine, beer and spirits for the duration of the war."— The Spectator.

Nickel Export Embargo Has a Big String To It

OTTAWA, March 28.—According to an explanation given to Parliament to-day by the Prime Minister, the order in Council passed on Saturday in regard to the "prohibition" of the export of nickel and nickel matte from Canada is not really a prohibitory measure. It is merely designed to get after one company which has been exporting a small quantity of nickel to the United States, with which company the Government has no arrangement, and consequently could not be sure that the exported nickel did not eventually find its way into German hands. There is no intention of prohibiting the "International Nickel Company" from continuing to get its supply of nickel ore from Canada as in the past.

At the opening of the House Sir Wilfrid Laurier asked as to the published report about the new order in Council, and suggested that the Premier table the prohibitory order, as well as all correspondence relating to the matter.

Sir Robert did not think that there was any particular correspondence except a report made by Mr. Graham Bell, who had conducted an investigation on behalf of the Government. The order in Council had been passed because the Government found that certain nickel, not a very large quantity, was being sent to the United States by one company which had no arrangement with the Government. Neither the Canadian nor the British Government, said the Premeir, could trace the destination of that nickel. "Therefore," he added, "it is proposed not to prohibit the export of nickel, but to continue it under license from time to time, thus making it necessary for any person or corporation exporting nickel from Canada to the United States to enter into arrangements as satisfactory as those which were consummated in the early months of the war with the International Nickel Company. The order prohibits the exportation except to British possessions. Export will be carried on under license wherever the British and Canadian Governments are satisfied as to the ultimate destination of the article so exported."

TILL THE FIELDS AND FIGHT

Irish Bishops Refer to War in Lenten Pastoral Letters.

DUBLIN, March 29.—(Correspondence)—The Irish Roman Catholic Bishops, in their Lenten pastoral letters, direct attention to the necessity for thrift and for raising as much foodstuffs as possible on the farms. There are frequent allusions to the war in the pastorals, the most emphatic exhortation to recruiting appearing in the letter of the Bishop of Tuam, Dr. Healy, who hopes that while the people will till their fields they will also be ready to fight for them against all-comers, especially against the Germans. "Irishmen are able to fight," he writes, "as they have well proved on every battle-front in Europe. They do not want their fertile acres seized by the foe. What is to save them but the strong arms and courageous hearts of the Irish people and their allies?" He hopes that they will rally to the flag, "not by compulsion or coercion, but from a sense of duty as becomes free men."

U. S. WOOLLEN EMPLOYEES MAY COME TO CANADA

WATERLOO, N.Y., March 28. — This village faces the possibility of losing the entire working force of 500 men and women of the Waterloo Manufacturing Company's plant now out on strike. The plant has been idle for the first time in years as a cause of the strike. Emigration of the strikers to Canada, where they have been promised work in worsted and woollen mills, has aroused much concern. County Judge George F. Bodine has offered his services as an arbitrator and other efforts looking to an amicable settlement are developing.

Fitzsimmons Says Fight Was Willard's From Very First

NEW YORK, March 27.—This is a verbatim interview at the ringside of the Willard-Moran bout Saturday night given by Bob Fitzsimmons. He held the heavyweight championship from 1897 to 1899, and few men are better qualified to express an opinion.

Jess Willard is a real champion. He proved that beyond any question Saturday night. I think he'll be the king of them all for a long time to come. It will take a man a whole lot bigger than Frank Moran and with a whole lot harder punch to put that powerful fellow away.

Every minute of every one of the ten rounds was Jess'. His cleverness enabled him to block most of the vicious swings that the yellow-haired Irishman shot at him, and when one of them did land Willard's strength enabled him to take it with a laugh.

Moran never had a chance with him. It was really a slaughter. I thought for a minute or two in the seventh round when Jess was hanging him all over the ring—jab, jab, jab, and then uppercut, uppercut, uppercut—that Charley White, the referee, wouldn't have made any mistake if he stopped it, as he had a right to do when one man was entirely outclassed.

Out classed is the only word for it. Frank never had a right to be in the same ring with the champion. The only way he could possibly have figured to win, before the fight, was by landing one of those wild swings of his. He did land a few of them, but they didn't even annoy Jess. The champion proved that he could take a good punching without it bothering him even a little bit.

Willard is a big, clever fellow. He knows the tricks of the trade much better than I thought he did. I won't admit that he's as clever as Jim Jeffries or Jim Corbett, but he makes the best showing of anybody outside of these two that I've seen in the ring in many a year.

As a fight, this ten-round bout at Madison Square Garden last night didn't amount to much. It was so one-sided that it was ridiculous. Willard just jabbed and cut Moran as he pleased, and won from the very first minute they were in action.

SPORTING COMMENT

George Davis, the Harvard strong man and spitballer of the Braves, will pass his twenty-sixth milestone to-day. He was born on March 29, 1890, in the village of Lancaster, N.Y. ten miles east of Buffalo. Davis is a graduate of William College and of late has been a law student at Harvard. He has brain and brawn and a wicked and baffling spitter that ought to make him one of the star hurlers of the Toner circuit. If the young college pitcher lives up to past promise, he should be a valuable factor in the somewhat problematical pitching strength of the Stallings outfit.

Davis' legal shingle will bear the name of George A. Davis, Jr., as he is the son of a former State Senator of that name. From his youth he had two great passions—books and baseball. It was a happy combination for his fondness for reading and study might have made him a physical mollycoddle except that the lure of the diamond attracted him to the open and enabled him to realize the ideal of a sound mind in a sound body. At Williams College Davis was something of a "grind" but he struck a happy medium between books and baseball and developed into a fine athlete. It was his sensational work as a twirler at Williams that first attracted the attention of the magnates of the professional game.

While still a student at Williams Davis received several major league offers, and in 1912 he signed with the New York Yankees. He didn't see the baseball world on fire, for his record stood three lost to one game one. The Pastimer, after a manner of speaking, leader of the Highlanders turned the rah-rah twirler over to Jersey City soon after the team returned from the Bermudah training trip in 1913, Davis having in the meantime taken to himself a wife. He didn't stay long with the Skeeters, but was transferred to Rochester, and late in 1913 Stallings purchased his release.

Davis was used as a relief pitcher by Stallings until early in September, 1914. The veterans of the staff were then on the ragged edge from too much toil, and it was probably with some misgivings that the miracle man dispatched the young collegian to the box in a game against the hard-hitting Phillies.

Seldom in baseball history has a young and comparatively inexperienced hurler acquitted himself so well. That game ranks among the game's classics, for Davis triumphed over all the heavy artillerists of the Quaker City team, and gained a place in the hall of fame by twirling a no-hit game. He passed five men, and two others got to the initial bag on errors, but not a man scored, and the final count was seven to nothing. After that success Davis was used oftener, with a good measure of success.

Last season Davis's count stood three and three in the record of games won and lost—not a remarkable performance, in sooth, for a no-hit hero. But this is another year, and the Boston fans are hoping that Davis will develop into a star before the season ends. Yet there seems to be something in the Boston atmosphere unfavorable to the continued success of pitchers, as proved by the slumps of Bill James, Vean Cregg, "Smoky Joe" and other twirling stars who have succumbed to the Boston jinx.

Anti-Saloon League Will Begin Campaign in New York After Easter.

WASHINGTON, D.C., March 29.—The Anti-Saloon League of America announced Sunday that a campaign force, seeking national prohibition, would begin immediately after Easter a series of one thousand meetings in New York State. One hundred meetings will be held in New York city, a dozen meetings each in Buffalo and Rochester and from three to five meetings each in Albany, Troy, Binghamton, Elmira, Schenectady, Syracuse, Utica and Yonkers. Speakers also will be heard in smaller communities.

"The New York campaign," said Milo G. Kelser, in charge of the speakers' bureau, "will be different from all its predecessors. The pastors of the State are up in arms."

JUSTIFIED IN WHIPPING 'MASHER,' COURT RULES

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., March 25.—That a woman is justified in inflicting corporal punishment upon a male flirt who annoys her the State Supreme Court ruled in affirming the $250 damages which a lower court had awarded Mrs. Nettie Trussell, a school teacher, against the Memphis & Dallas & Gulf Railroad.

According to testimony, a male passenger on a train of the defendant railroad stood in the centre of the car in which Mrs. Trussell was riding and winked and threw kisses at her. When he approached her Mrs. Trussell broke her umbrella over his head. The Supreme Court in its opinion ruled that not only was Mrs. Trussell justified in her action, but she was also entitled to recover damages for the annoyance and humiliation to which she was subjected.

Says She Ate a War Extra In Pie and Read All Night

Fighting in Europe Trivial Compared With Her Slumbering Warfare Woman Declares in $10,000 Action for Alleged Misplacing of Public Print

NEW YORK, March 29.—A jury in the Supreme Court soon will be called upon to decide whether it's bad taste to cook a new paper in a pie, and also whether Mrs. Bessie G. Black, of East 149th street, the Bronx, is entitled to $10,000 for mental and physical pain. Mrs. Black, according to the complaint and her attorney, David Broderick, of No. 51 Chambers street, one eventful evening about a year ago decided that she wanted a pie before retiring. Since then pies have not appealed to her as food before slumber.

However, Mrs. Black went to a delicatessen store and purchased a pie. She did not wish to awaken other persons in her apartment, and therefore did not turn on the light when she, having cut the pastry, began to appease her hunger. Her daughter, awakened at the smell of pie, felt hungry and took a mouthful.

There was something wrong about the pie. There seemed in the dark to be a layer of foreign matter. Wake or no wake the others, Mrs. Black and her daughter decided to investigate.

Sure enough, so they say, there was part of the front page of a war extra. They read of soldiers slain by the thousands, of the capitulation of a fort, of an elopement of a college girl and a little yarn about the arrest of German spies.

No more pie that night did Mrs. Black or her daughter eat. As they retired they commented upon the idea of serving evening newspapers sandwiched between the pie crusts, and the more they thought of it the less it appealed to them as a good idea.

That night Mrs. Black was on the battle field between the Teuton and Allied armies. Shells were whizzing by her ears and she heard also above all the screams of women and children battling to get pieces of pie to read—you understand.

Then she saw a green gray coated soldier catch a young college girl by the waist just as the fort was doomed and dart over standing dead bodies asking the girl to be his bride. The marriage was performed by a clergyman it seems, who was arrested with the couple at the last instant by United States Secret Service agents because it was alleged that they had been working for the German bomb plotters. At least, it is said by Mrs. Black's friends, this is something of the many experiences she had through the pie.

She awoke frightened, suffered from nervous prostration and went to see Mr. Broderick. The pie company's manager asserted that he did not believe it was one of the pies of his concern. They never have newspapers in their pies. It isn't necessary, for their pies, so it was said, are made to eat.

"But if you want the story," said the pie manager, "come to court when the case comes up."

Assistant Adjutant for Adjutant 93rd Overseas Battalion, C.E.F.

Mrs. C. Bell has received the following letter from her husband, Pte. C. Bell, who left Peterborough with the 8th C.M.R.:

"Dear Wife and Children,—Just a few lines to let you know I am quite well at present, hoping you are all the same. I am up in the firing line with the Machine Gun Company, somewhere in Belgium. We had a lot of shells falling around us last night. We hear and see the big guns going all the time. I thought you had forgotten me, but when we came up there were seven of your letters waiting for me. We are in an old farmhouse, and quite comfortable. We are having snow to-day. This is the place to keep awake. At first I did not like it, but now as we hear the shells all the time it's quite a treat, while the stars the Germans send up are a show. When are T. and P. coming over? Why not P. join up? They are all wanted over here. God only knows what would happen if we all stayed at home."

The little fracas that was enacted on the street last evening was caused by a member of an outside battalion and not of the 93rd.

WEDS GIRL HE HUNTED WITH PHOTO AS CLUE

HUDSONVILLE, Mich., March 28.—After George N. Howard, an Alabama planter, armed with a photograph with the original of which he had fallen in love, had visited three states and a half dozen cities seeking her, his search ended when she and Miss Nettie Tebuna were married at the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. Z. E. Stanley of this city.

Miss Tebuna lost the photo in her purse at the Panama-Pacific Exposition last September and Howard found it. The picture had the word "Wisconsin" on its back. Howard visited hotels in most of the principal cities in Wisconsin and finally learned in Oshkosh that the young woman lived there. He followed her to Champion, Ill., then to Michigan. Howard is said to be wealthy.

At the last survey there were 447 ocean cables in the world, representing 288,492 miles.

Wife Slain, Find Her Husband Dead

MIDDLETOWN, N.Y. March 29.—Mrs. Maud Brasington Newkirk was found murdered on a lonely road near Summitville, ten miles north of here, at seven o'clock Monday, her throat being cut. Half an hour later the body of her husband, Harry Newkirk, owner of a paint and hardware business at Howells, near here, was found on the railroad track half a mile away. A train had run over and killed him. It is believed from facts that developed during the day that Newkirk, who was jealous of his wife, followed her when he believed she was to meet some one, killed her and then ended his own life by lying in front of a train.

Mrs. Newkirk, who was only twenty-three, and her husband belonged to prominent families in this section. They were married about a year ago and most of the time since then he had been jealous, and unjustly so according to her friends.

She left Howells early this afternoon telling her husband she was coming to this city to make household purchases. Without her knowledge Newkirk followed her to Middletown and encountered her on the street. The police said she was with another man when she ran into the police station here and demanded protection from her husband, saying he had threatened to kill her.

Newkirk disappeared then, but at half-past six o'clock this evening he and his wife were seen getting on a northbound train together, and it was supposed they were reconciled.

They had not been in Summitville long when her body was found in a road leading out of the village. She had several relatives there, but did not have time to call on them. By her side was a razor.

Newkirk apparently had walked down the railroad in the direction of this city until a train overtook him.

SCOTCH HIGHBALLS AFLOAT.

Loaded with Scotch whiskey for various hotel bars the British steamer Roanoke arrived at New York from Leith a few days ago.

Six hours after she sailed, and while passing through the Pentland Firth, a British torpedo boat held her up and a lieutenant boarded her. He ordered her into Kirkwall, but Capt. Williams protested that the British authorities had given him clearance papers and that he had a sure enough Scotch cargo that was going down American throats.

The lieutenant finally agreed with him after sampling the cargo, and wishing the Roanoke a healthy and safe voyage he allowed her to proceed.

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

GERMAN SOCIALISTS AND THEIR VIEWS ON WAR

Early this year Dr. Karl Liebknecht long one of the ablest leaders of the German Social Democracy, was expelled from the Socialist party "for continuous gross infractions of party discipline." According to American socialists who have correspondents in Switzerland and Holland, however, this action did not have the unqualified approval of the rank and file. It is said that hundreds of thousands of German Socialists are inclined to uphold Dr. Liebknecht in his bold stand. However this may be, it seems certain that one of the results of the war has been to cause a breach in the German Social Democracy which may never be bridged. It would seem that Dr. Liebknecht's crime, for which he was read out of the party by those now in power, consisted in being a socialist. At no time has he faltered in his allegiance to those principles which were accepted by all Socialists prior to the great conflict, but which have seemingly lost their hold on the majority. When Dr. Liebknecht exposed the alleged Krupp plot to foment war scares, only a few years ago, he was hailed as a hero by his comrades. In protesting against the imposition of contributions upon the Belgians, and denouncing the massacre and looting of the Armenians by the Turks, Dr. Liebknecht brought down upon himself the wrath of his fellows, and he is now listed on the Reichstag rolls as a man without a party.

In his repeated attacks upon the war party and his opposition to the voting of further credits for military purposes, Dr. Liebknecht has demonstrated that he has inherited the bold and revolutionary blood of his father. Wilhelm Liebknecht, whose name occupies a notable niche in the Socialistic hall of fame. This is the ninetieth anniversary of the birth of the elder Liebknicht, who was born at Giesse non March 29, 1826, and died at Charlottenburg in 1900. Wilhelm Liebknecht received an excellent education, and was a student when the revolutionary uprisings of 1848 enlisted his sympathies. He took a prominent part in the insurrection and was condemned to death by the Prussian authorities. He fled to Switzerland and then to England, where he lived for some years and carried on his revolutinary propaganda. Venturing to return to Germany, he was imprisoned but upon his release he was elected to the Reichstag. In company with Herr Bebel, he was again imprisoned and spent two years in the fortress of Hubertsburg. He was later chosen to represent Berlin in the Reichstag, and was made the editor of Vorwarts, the principal Socialist newspaper of the empire. As journalist, parliamentarian and writer he stood on an equality with Marx, Engels, Lassalle, Bebel and other German democrats, and from his student days until his death, in 1900 he was the uncompromising foe of the Hohenzollern dynasty and, it would now seem, much of his dogged determination.

That Dr. Liebknicht's bold stand has not been without its influence is shown by recent votes in the Reichstag. In the first parliamentary test Dr. Liebknecht stood absolutely alone in voting against the war credits. Last December twenty-one Socialists voted against the credit, while twenty others abstained from voting. Thus it has come about that of the 110 Socialists in the Reichstag, only fifty-nine gave support to the government by a grant of supplies.

NEW YORK, March 29.—A trained army of Russians, composed mostly of young men, is ready at Petrograd to go into action at a moment's notice.

This information was brought here by George Fry of Bronxville, a civil engineer who reached New York recently aboard the steamship Bergenafjord, of the Norwegian-American line.

Mr. Fry has just returned from Russia, whither he had gone on business.

"I was amazed at the sight of the enormous armies of young men, the very existence of which apparently is known to but few persons outside of the highest officials," said Mr Fry. "They are being held in reserve For what purpose it was, of course, impossible for me to learn.

"Russia is inexhaustible in men, and at present she is in excellent condition as far as arms and ammunition are concerned. The only respect in which there appears to be any disadvantage, is facilities for transportation. There is a shortage of railroad facilities."

Other passengers on board the Bergenafjord were Captain Lorentz Harbos Jensen, a Norwegian ship owner, who resides in the United States, and Henry P. Runkel of Chicago, who is said to have been decorated by Kaiser Wilhelm for his activity in German-American-Hungarian relief work.

The Bergenafjord was held up only one day in Kirkwall this voyage, owing to the agreement of the Norwegian-American line to send all its ships voluntarily into that port without the necessity of being taken in by British cruisers. The Bergenafjord was the first of the line to have occasion to take advantage of this agreement. The result has been a gain of time by the ship, as on her previous voyages she had been detained for five days and more. This time, also, no passengers were distributed by the British authorities nor was any mail taken off.

BLOOD THE SEAT OF DISEASE

An eminent authority on nervous diseases has announced that the blood is the seat of all disease. How important, therefore, that it be kept in a pure, healthy condition. For this purpose our local druggists, McDermid & Jury and E. L. Can you imagine anything better?

Oblong collars, which suggest the sailor, are being shown on the new spring garments.

Fitted at the waist and buttoned straight down the front is the fashion of new bodices.

SEVERE ACTION PROMISED.

License Board Notes Certain Carelessness as Prohibition Approaches.

Chairman Flavelle of the Ontario License Board is determined that license holders shall live up to the law for the balance of their term, even though prohibition is coming into force before the end of the year.

A Woodstock hotelkeeper has been notified that the License Board is considering not extending his license after May 1st, owing to repeated complaints, but that he may come at the commissioners if he wants to enter a defence. Chairman Flavelle says the inspectors note a growing carelessness among hotelkeepers recently, which is presumed to arise from the prospect of prohibition. The board will deal with such cases severely.

Astonishing Allegations of Astounding Profiteering in Connection With Fuse Orders Given to Mushroom Companies, Through the Elusive Col. J. Wesley Allison.

OTTAWA, March 29.—What was to have been the closing day of the debate on the aurier resolution demanding an investigation into the operations of Gen. Sir Sam. Hughes' "baby," the Shell Committee, provided the greatest sensation so far sprung, and the most damning evidence of profiteering, high finance, secret commissions, intrigue and other phases of "get-rich-quick Wallingford" methods yet disclosed. In the face of the arguments for an investigation advanced to-day, and in the face of the documentary evidence submitted by Mr. Geo. W. Kyte of Richmond to-night, even the Government forces are wavering in their determination to sit tight on the lid.

The trail of munitions profiteering as disclosed by Mr. Kyte and as backed up by circumstantial detail of partnership agreements as to division of profits led straight to Hon. Col. J. Wesley Allison, the man whom General Sam Hughes declared was "the soul of honour," his "guide, counsellor and adviser," who "refused to take any commission or recompense for his services so far," and who "has saved Canada upwards of $50,000,000."

Mr. Kyte showed that Col. Allison, in combination with a well-known United States contractor of high finance methods named Benjamin Yoakum, had arranged for profits on fuse orders secured from the Shell Committee and for other war orders amounting to at least $1,000,000.

A Blood-stained Graft.

The fuse contracts, aggregating some $22,000,000, were let last June to two mushroom companies in the United States, organized just before the contracts were let, with a subscribed capital of only $4,000, and without plant, machinery or building. The contract price for the fuses was $4.50 and $4 each, although these same fuses are to-day being made in Canada for $3.50 each, with a prospect of a further big cut in price. To these two mushroom companies advances were made by the Shell Committee totalling more than $3,000,000, and for more than seven months after the contracts were let not a single fuse had been delivered, although the men at the front were dying for the lack of shells. It was a blood-stained graft. After the contracts entered into were ratified "on behalf of his Britannic Majesty" by Major-General Sir Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia and Defence for Canada.

One Partner Fell Out.

Part of the story came out apparently through the falling out of one of Allison's earlier partners, to wit, a man named Eugene Lignanti, formerly leader of the orchestra at the Ritz-Carlton hotel in Montreal. For some unexplained reason the had been taken into the combination, but later became dissatisfied, with the division of the commissions to the middlemen.

All Kinds of Munitions.

It was shown further from these partnership agreements that Col. Allison and his partners were involved in the supplying of an immense quatity of all kinds of munitions to the Shell Committee. And instead of doing all this from pure patriotism there was a very specific agreement for a good large commission in every case.

Government Forces in Panic.

The charges were so serious and so circumstantial, following as they did the long array of serious and unrefuted charges made by Mr. Carvell and Hon. Dr. Pugsley, that the Government forces were obviously thrown into a panic. The faces of the Premier and his colleagues were serious, and the talk in the corridors among some of the Conservative members was frankly that the Government dare not longer refuse an investigation.

Pardee's Able Arraignment.

Even without the added charges of Mr. Kyte to-night, the case made out by Mr. Fred Pardee this afternoon in an able and vigorous speech was in itself sufficient to have compelled the Government to yield to an investigation if there was any regard for logic, precedent, or for the interest of the public treasury.

Sir Wilfrid's Charge.

And in addition to that there remained still the plea of Sir Wilfrid Laurier that after all the worst feature of the whole case was not the waste of millions of public money to profiteers and middlemen, but the irreparable loss of time in the delivery of the completed shells so sorely needed at the front.

Piccolo Players' $50,000!

Mr. Kyte's arraignment was full of sensations from start to finish of his four hours' speech. And when he wound up with his specific quotation as to the division of profits among Allison, Yoakum and Lignanti the House almost gasped when it realized the extent of the profiteering, and learned that an Italian flute and piccolo player from the Ritz-Carlton Hotel had got away with a profit of more than $50,000 at the expense of the British and Canadian taxpayers.

It was nearly midnight when Sir Thomas White took the floor to reply to Mr. Kyte. He was unable, of course, to answer the specific charges made in regard to the fuse contracts, and contented himself for the most part with repeating the arguments already advanced from the Government side as to why there should be no investigation. He still maintained that there were no specific charges directly implicating the Government or any member or official of it.

Adjournment Unexpectedly Moved.

A dramatic situation in the corridors preceded the unexpected adjournment. Several Conservative members were threatened insurgents. They demanded an adjournment and a caucus before the Government further adhered to its expressed determination to prevent an investigation—and several were very emphatic concerning this. While Sir Thomas White was still speaking, certain of the Conservative members put on their overcoats and departed for home, despite the fact that a division had been stipulated by the Government. Two ministers were called out of the chamber and informed that their supporters demanded an adjournment and a caucus.

At 12.30 Sir Thomas White moved for an adjournment, a denouement which he, himself, had evidently not previously expected.

Sir Wilfrid Consents.

Sir Wilfrid aurier stated that at the Government's demand a division had been agreed upon before the House adjourned. He understood, however, the situation which must confront the Government, and had no desire to insist upon the carrying out of the agreement.

"The Minister had two excellent reasons for asking an adjournment at this stage," commented Sir Wilfrid. "He is no doubt tired, and he has a pretty heavy and severe task ahead of him."

Sir Thomas White protested that he was not tired.

"'Stunned,' perhaps, would be the better word," suggested Sir Wilfrid.

Premier Borden then moved the adjournment of the House.

Not to go on To-day.

Sir Wilfrid asked if the Government proposed to proceed with the debate to-morrow. "No," was the Premier's reply amid ironical Liberal "hear, hears." The Premier stated that he would inform Sir Wilfrid as to when the Government would be in a position to conclude the debate.

Meanwhile the adjournment was taken in order to give the Government forces time to consider the new situation which has arisen, and to take stock of the obvious feeling among many of their followers that it would now be politically more dangerous to refuse an investigation than to grant one.

HOME

What did the doctor say, nurse? What did the doctor say?
Why did you stand there whisperin'? Why did you turn away?
Don't be afraid to tell me: I'm minus a leg and arm,
And me that was one of the huskiest that ever tilled a farm.

Sure, but the Germans got me, they copped me for fair at last;
And here I'm lyin' helpless, but me thoughts have been movin' fast.
I've been back in the land of sunshine, where the maple courts pine:
O Canada, O Canada, that dear homeland of mine!

So the doctor said I was dyin', I knew it, nurse, I knew;
I didn't need your anxious face to give me final cue:
But I ain't afraid to go, nurse; downhearted? NO, not I!
I'm the proudest chap in the ward to-night, for Canada to die!

You little English nursie, you bravest and the best,
Just lift my head a little—there—so I can see the west:
For in the west is Canada, where I was born and bred,
My Canada, my Canada, with the sun-crown on her head!

The night's are gettin' colder, it's time the lamps were lit.
I've been a-hummin' all the day that song of all who roam—
"Be it ever so humble, there's no place like home
"Home—Home—Sweet, sweet home
"There's no place like home
"There's—no———place———".

AN ADDRESS AT THE TABERNACLE

Evangelist Sharpe Gave an Impressive Address—A Song Service

In his address at the Tabernacle last night, Evangelist Sharpe gave a most impressive word picture of the "awful condition of an unsaved man." He said, in Luke, we read of a great gulf that is fixed between the saved and the lost, and I believe that right here in this life there is a great gulf between the saved and the unsaved. There are but two classes of people living in this world and these are the saved and the lost.

"An Unsaved Man."

An unsaved man is in an awful condition because of his relation to God. In John 3:36, we read that "he that believeth not is condemned already." We thus see that unbelief condemns men. An unsaved man is God's enemy. Rom. 8:7. The carnal mind is enmity against God. No man is in a position to do anything to please God until he is saved; for without faith it is impossible to please God.

The Spirit.

The spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience of which we read in Eph. 2:2 is the spirit of the god of this world, and that god is the devil, for the devil is the god of this world.

The evangelist also stated that it was an awful thing to be unsaved, because of what this life held for the sinner. My unsaved brother, I've got you beat twice; I get the best out of this life and I expect to get the best out of that which is to come. No man or woman in this world has peace to-night unless they find it in Jesus Christ.

Ah, my dear, unsaved friends, do you have trouble? What do you do when the crepe is hanging on the door? If you only had Jesus as your Saviour you would have a comforter in time of trouble. An unsaved man is in an awful condition because of the fact that he has got to die. It is truly an awful thing to die if you are unsaved. I believe I've got the courage to-night to place my head on a block and have it severed for Jesus Christ, but I confess I wouldn't have the courage to die and face God unsaved. It is an awful thing to be unsaved, because of the judgment, and because of eternity.

The "Billly" Sunday hymn books have arrived and were used in the service last night. These hymns are the most famous gospel hymns now being used on the continent. They were greatly enjoyed by the audience last night.

Mr. Sharpe is to speak to-night on "What a Glorious Thing it is to be saved."

Come early and enjoy the lively song service, beginning at 8 o'clock. All are welcome.

Arts and Crafts Column

In this column, conducted by Mr. Hughens Johnstone, painter and decorator, 130 College Street, will be answered on Wednesdays—questions of the kind given below, for the benefit of those who, in this period of stringency and enforced and suggested economy, might like doing their own work. Questions relating to painting, sign-writing, paperhanging, furniture polishing, and decorating, may be sent to The Examiner, and will receive attention in due course.

Regular Reader, Peterborough, Ont:—Please tell me through the medium of your "Arts and Crafts" column what will remove lime stains from an oak floor? A plasterer set a pail on the floor and some lime dropped off leaving a dark spot.

Ans:—Dissolve a little oxalic acid in warm rain water and apply to the spot, allowing it to stand a while. If the spot has not entirely disappeared after one application try a second and third if necessary. When the spot has disappeared wash clean, and allow the spot to dry.

Ignorant, Peterborough, Ont:—Is it true that turpentine is not a good thinner for oxide of iron paint?

Ans:—Personally, I don't know. But I have heard or read somewhere, sometime, that neither raw oil nor turpentine should be used with oxide of iron, why I cannot say. I dare say there is some technical or theoretical reason. I am doubtful if there is any practical objection.

Disgusted, Peterborough, Ont:—Just last week I bought some paper for my wall at ———and he recommended———as a good paperhanger, and now some red spots are showing through, which one is to blame? the one who sold the paper, or the one he recommended?

Ans:—I would imagine from past experience that neither one is to blame. The red spots were likely caused by the old paper being left on the wall. Some of the coloring matter no doubt being an aniline, bled through the new paper, and caused red spots. You should have had the old paper all scraped off.

Ans:—One very good way is to wash the frame with soap and water, (of course you will remove the picfingers, now secure a piece of plush to scrub it with ,dry it thoroughly. Then apply a coat of bronze liquid, made as follows: Good varnish and turpentine equal parts to half that amount of Japan gold size, allow this to remain until it is nearly dry i.e.; tacking feels a little sticky to the finegrs, no wsecure a piece of plush or chamois skin, dip it in the dry bronze powder and dust it on, be liberal with the bronze powder. Let it stand for 12 hours, then brush off the surplus bronze or better, shake it off on to a paper and save it to use again Bronzing in this way produces a metallic lustre not obtained when used like a paint.

R. B. H., City:—As a reader of your "Arts and Craft" column weekly, I would like you to enlighten me as to what "Fresco Painting" is and how is it done? Are there any "Fresco" artists in Canada also is it expensive work?

Ans:—The story is too long, this column too short, and my knowledge too limited, to enlighten you very much on the subject of "Fresco Painting", which is considered by many celebrated artists and well-known writers, to be the only way in which the highest efforts in art can be embodied.

Real "Fresco Painting" is rarely done to-day (at least in this country). The way it was done by the Monks and some of the Italian artists of Rome and Florence was to grind up colors in pure water and paint on wet plaster, as much only as could be painted in one day was spread on immediately ahead of the painter, what was not painted on was scraped off. The next day the plaster is carefully joined and another portion spread, and so on. Of course colors were used composed mostly of earths and minerals as few others would stand the action of the lime. "Fresco Painting" to-day, (in America) consists chiefly of distemper painting. So when one speaks of "Frescoing" they simply mean decorating in distemper. Yes there are lots of "Fresco" artists in Canada, and it is not immoderately expensive when done a la Canada.

It is a nice idea to have a guest chest in the guest room. It should contain a nightgown, a bathrobe, slippers and even a toothbrush.

Pneumonia Finds Its Victims Weakened By Colds and Grip

This Letter Tells How to Gain Strength After Colds by Using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food—Pneumonia Is Prevented.

Epidemics of colds and grip are almost invariably followed by much loss of life from pneumonia. When the body is worn down by colds and the lungs weakened from coughing, pneumonia finds an easy victim.

Careful inquiry into many thousands of cases of pneumonia shows that this disease usually attacks the person who is tired and worn out, and who is therefore lacking in resisting power.

In this letter is described a case in which the patient was in the greatest danger of contracting pneumonia or some similar disease, but fortunately she sought the aid of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and was soon restored to health and strength.

Miss E. J. Buswell, Centralia, Ont., writes: "Last winter my mother contracted a bad cold. She was bothered with shortness of breath, wheezing, fevered and too sore to cough. Our doctor prescribed treatment, which brought relief from these symptoms, but when she got up she was tired, always tired and weak. I got her three boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and she soon improved. Her eyes became clear and bright, the ashen hue left the face and she began once more to take up the reins and look after the household duties."

It is always wise to keep the vitality of the body at high-water mark in order that the attack of disease may be resisted. Rich, red blood is the greatest of germicides, and because Dr. Chase's Nerve Food forms rich, red blood it is a most effective means of preventing germ disease such as grip, pneumonia and consumption.

Every day we are learning more and more the value of preventive treatment. That is one reason why the sales of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food are increasing so enormously. People are coming to realize how much wiser it is to keep well than to try to obtain cure after some serious disease has gained a foothold. 50 cents a box, 6 for $2.50, all dealers, or Edmanson Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

ENTERTAINMENT TO THE MEN OF THE 93rd BATT.

Some of St. John's Church Ladies Gave an Enjoyable Entertainment at the Military Club Rooms Last Night

The Club and Recreation rooms of the 93rd Battalion on Simcoe street, were, last evening, the scene of great merriment and happiness. The occasion of the festivities was an entertainment to the men of the Battalion, given by some of the ladies belonging to the congregation of St. John's Anglican church, a number of whom foregathered with the express intention of giving two or three hours' enjoyment to those who are preparing to fight, and, if needs be, die for their King and country.

Among the married ladies acting as patronesses or chaperones, were Mesdames Scadding (the promoter), Morphet, Davidson, Widdess, Morris, Cameron, Mulholland, etc., etc.; while about a dozen of the young single ladies, the flower and youth and beauty of the church, came to assist their seniors, and right well they did it too!

Dancing was the great event of the evening. It began at half past seven and continued, with but few intervals, until it was time to get back, on the double, to barracks. And here a big word of thanks and praise must be onered to Miss Florence Gladman, that young lady with her customary good nature and kindness of heart, presided at the piano, playing the music for dance after dance, until one feared her fingers must fall off, from sheer fatigue.

The ladies, as may be naturally supposed, were at a great premium, and consequently were in great demand For such of the men as preferred cards to dancing, card rooms upstairs were provided, much credit being due to Lieut. Stock for the arrangements made by him for the comfort of those using them. The chaplain, Major J. C. Davidson, was quite the life of the party, and there can be little doubt that the two hundred present thoroughly enjoyed themselves. During an interval the ladies handed round elegant refreshments which were much appreciated by "the boys."

One of the features of the evening was a speech by Sergeant Major Dodds. The chaplain calling the men to attention said that Sergt.-Major Dodds was one of the splendid band of non-com. officers of the old 57th Regiment who had served with such conspicuous skill and effect, and had given splendid support to him as chaplain. Sergt. Maj. Dodds had just arrived from England, and would make some remarks which would not fail to be interesting.

Sergt.-Major Dodds then made a speech abounding with sparkling humour and interest, in regard to his work in England, and in respect to the Peterborough officers he had met there. He spoke of pleasure of his association with the 57th, of which the chaplain had been a most highly valued officer. The military work in which he had taken part in England was of the most strenuous character, preparing men to take the places of the streams of wounded men returning from the front. Every detail of the soldiers' work in active service was attended to. He referred to the Zeppelin raids, about which he was really allowed to say very little, remarking that the English aviators had as much courage and endurance and daring as the German aggressors. He had met a number of Peterborough officers and men, including Col. Clegg, Capt. Carruthers, Lieut. Huyck, and many others whom he named, and all these were doing excellent work. He closed by picturesquely describing his voyage home, which, owing to tempestuous storms, was of a very rough character. His address was greeted with three hearty cheers.

Towards the close of the entertainment Major Davidson, calling attention, proposed a vote of thanks to the ladies who had so kindly contributed to the pleasure of the men this evening. The ladies present had come forward, at the eleventh hour, to help; as those on whom he had counted, failed him. No lady had shown more interest in the comfort of the men and the welfare of the club than Mrs. Scadding; and he called on the men for a hearty vote of thanks to Mrs. Scadding and the band of married and single ladies who had so large heartedly and ably supported her. It is needless to say that a vote of thanks went by acclamation.

Mrs. Scadding made a few trite remarks, saying what pleasure it had given them to render some happiness to the men who were ready to give up their lives for us. She remarked that the chaplain had put her in a rather awkward position, in calling on her for a speech. However, she made a very humorous speech, well to the point, and which was loudly applauded.

The National Anthem was then sung by all present, followed by hearty cheers for the King, for the chaplain, for Mrs. Scadding, for the ladies generally, and for Lieut. Stock, the men expressing themselves as delighted with the evening's rational amusement and enjoyment afforded them by some of the ladies of the congregation of St. John's church.

Appeal For Hydro Radials Fell On Deaf Ears at Ottawa

Mackenzie & Mann Interests Get Time Extension From the Railway Committee—"Death Blow"—Sir Adam

OTTAWA, March 28.—Backed by the influence of Hon. Dr. Reid, Acting Minister of Railways, the Mackenzie and Mann interests triumphed in the Railway Committee to-day when the Niagara, St. Catharines and Toronto, and the Toronto, Niagara and Western Bills were passed. The fight was on the first one and on division it carried by a vote of 40 to 19.

What makes the vote significant is that Sir Adam Beck declared in the most convincing way that to pass the bill would be to deal a death blow to the Hydro. The appeal was unavailing. The lobby had done its work, members from outside of Ontario were there in large numbers and, with several from Ontario, continued to push through the bill.

The only consolation to the Hydro people was that before the work is done the plans must be approved by the Minister of Railways, and all sides would get a hearing. An arrangement, it was suggested, might be made for running rights for the other road by whichever line was built first.

Dr. Reid's Argument.

"In 1914," Dr. Reid continued, "the Parliament passed an act guaranteeing forty-five millions of the bonds of the Canadian Northern. Enumerated on the list is this Niagara and St. Catharines road. It does not appear to me to be hardly fair, after Parliament placing this company in the list of guarantees, to refuse it a charter. As to the Toronto Niagara and Western road the company had suggested to strike out the grant between Toronto and Hamilton and Niagara Falls and St. Catharines. Personally, I would not agree to that part, as in case at any future time the Government took over the whole road, these lines would not then be a part of it. If the committee pass the bill the company will make this a part of the agreement of 1914. The C. N. R. is taking it for granted that the main objection is to the line from Port Colborne to Fort Erie, and are willing to eliminate that if it is objected to, but they feel it necessary to have a line to Niagara in order to secure an American outlet."

Verdun, World's Greatest Battlefield, Looks Peaceful, Not a Soldier Visible

Mighty Conflict Began February 21 Definitely Won by the French, a British Observer Says—Rival Hosts in Hiding Keep Vigilant Watch

With the French Army Beyond Verdun, March 28.— A glorious spring holiday—such was the very deceptive appearance of things at noon to-day when I reached a certain vantage point from which the battlefield was unrolled in a crescent of many coloured hills before me. Throughout the vast amphitheatre, twenty miles wide and ten miles deep, not a single human being was visible aside from the little group of officers around me.

Over there to the northwest lies the broad dark bank of Malancourt woods, which we know to be a busy hive of Bavarian and Wurttenberg grenadiers, sharpshooters, flamesquirters and gunners. Beyond them on the horizon the queer cone of Montfaucon, long the Crown Prince's headquarters, is plainly visible. Passing eastward the two French bulwarks of Hill 304 and Dead Man's Hill block the view northward. Then across the wide and still flooded valley of the Meuse we scan a higher and more deeply indented plateau directly north of Verdun.

Through fieldglasses we can follow every rise and fall of these forever famous slopes—the long shoulder of Talou in the bend of the river and behind in the Caures woods where the first avalanche fell, the Poivre-Louvemont block which runs back northeastward, and then to our right the Haudromont woods, Douaumont Plateau, and Vaux woods of bloody memories, and in the whole panorama there is not visible a single human being. In the hollow behind us lies the ancient city of Verdun under a cloud of purple smoke that tells the old tale of Teutonic vengeance.

Not far away we are permitted to inspect one of the old forts of the Verdun circuit, not very old in years, but in a military sense nearly everything is old that antedated the present war. Outside the portcullis the archstone carries the motto, "S'en sevelir dans les ruines plutot que de se rendre," (Let us bury ourselves in the ruins rather than surrender.) Brave old words! But the soldiers of France have not waited for any Boche professor to teach them. They have evolved for themselves a better kind of resistance and it is upon that that the victory of Verdun is based. We walk up the glacis, around the grassy parapets and through the interior court yards. Not a gun is visible.

Overhead several aeroplanes are soaring and westward I can count five of the anchored observation balloons called sausages. Before us a network of communication trenches climbs up the open slopes, and although invisible we know it continues through coppices and forest patches toward the summits where geyser-like eruptions of earth mark the main stress of the artillery duel. The crest of Douaumont, in particular, is continually shattered into a crown of cloud and around it the succession of gunflashes might be mistaken for heliograph signals were it not for the accompanying muffled roar of explosions.

It is what they call a calm day on the front; that is to say, the daily toll of death and wounds and the daily strain of anticipation of these ills are limited to a few points where the pressure is seldom and little relaxed. There has been no infantry action since Wednesday, when the enemy made a slight advance from Malancourt Woods on to the hillock of Haucort. But the sunshine deceives us when it gilds this scene into a semblance of peace. Before and around and behind us, hidden away underground and in less elaborate cover half a million men armed with every deadly device modern science can suggest lie in wait, each host watching for any sign of weakness on the part of the other. The preparations for a to-morrow, wrapped in mystery save to a few chiefs themselves, never for a moment cease.

Under its empty and smiling surface the bastion of Verdun is a vast human anthill seething with multifarious labour. The war has gone underground again in this sector, and that is the mark that the French victory is definitive. It has gone underground as though it could not bear the light of day, and if it emerge afresh it will be for a new and different battle, not the one that was declared on Feb. 21. Here or elsewhere it will certainly emerge, but I think more likely it will be elsewhere, further west. Meanwhile there is a pause of relative calm.

Lest we should suppose it to be more the German gunners read our party a little lesson which I may be forgiven for mentioning, trivial as it was. We had visited Verdun and after a motor journey among the hills had inspected an anti-aircraft gunpit. The officer had explained the modus operandi, including calculation of distances and angles, putting the men through the various movements, though without actual firing. We had just left the place when to our great surprise these very guns began firing in earnest.

Looking up, we watched bubbles of shrapnel smoke forming and dispersing, but could not see the enemy raider who was being aimed at. It became immediately evident, however, that if we could not see him he could see us and, having seen, had signalled his batteries, by wireless no doubt, supposing us to be more distinguished persons. Half a dozen shells came singing over our heads and burst in the wood 300 yards away. A seventh shell smashed up the ground within thirty yards and sent us scuttling to cover like so many rabbits.

The only calm hereabouts that is completely unbroken is the calm of the French soldier, now generally a war-worn veteran and the best fellow on earth.

A WEAK CHESTED BOY.

"My daughter suffered from inflamed eyelids and eczema on her head," writes Mr. H. W. Lear, Port Plasford, Nfld. "The child was in a bad state and suffer ed greatly. The doctor failed to help her and on recommendation of a friend I used Dr. Chase's Ointment, which made a complete cure. With a grateful heart I write you this letter."

TIME FOR SIR SAM TO GET OUT

Ottawa Citizen Says Militia Minister is "Irresponsible and Impossible"—Wants Government to Remove Him.

OTTAWA, March 28.—The Ottawa Citizen, which, since the war started has not been unfriendly to the Minister of Militia personally, though criticizing the Shell Committee, has reached the conclusion that General Hughes has outlived his official usefulness. It now characterises him as "irresponsible and impossible."

In an editorial on the failure of the government, the Citizen says in part: "Since the outbreak of war the outpouring of the national treasure has been mainly through the Department of Militia, virtually putting the heaviest strain of government on its weakest link. Whatever the experience or prowess of Sir Sam Hughes may be as a soldier, or even as a Minister directing a policy, he has demonstrated himself as an administrator, irresponsible and impossible. The Federal Government should have no more hesitation in getting rid of Sir Sam Hughes than the Russian Government had in placing its War Minister, General Soukhomlinoff, on the retired list."

The Adanac Quartette

Altogether delightful was the concert given in St. Paul's Church last night by the famous Adanac Quartette of Toronto, assisted by the choir of St. Paul's church. Miss Dorothy Allan soprano and Mr. John Allan accompanist. The enjoyment of the large audience present was indicated in no uncertain manner and so many encores were demanded that the programme grew to almost twice its original length. No more pleasing a concert has been heard in a long time and the music-lovers of Peterborough owe a vote of gratitude to the promoters of the event

Both individually and as a quartette the Adanac scored heavily. The organization which consists of Messrs. Redferne, Hollinshead and George Dixon, tenors, Mr. Arthur Blight, baritone, and Mr. Ruthven Macdonald, bass were heard in a varied programme and each number seemed better than its predecessors. They opened with a spirited rendition of Pierson's "Ye Mariners of England" which was a splendid introduction to the good things that followed. "The Bells of Shandon" was sung with a full appreciation of its beauty while Tosti's beautiful song "Good-bye" was admirably presented by the quartette. Their final number aroused great enthusiasm of "Rule Britannia" and was sung with a power of feeling that made it unresistible.

"Ye Mariners of England" ..Pierson
Adanac Quartette

Solo—"Mavis" .....Craxton
Mr. Arthur Blight

Anthem, "Grant Us Thy Peace"..Henrich

Solo Parts by Miss Allan, Messrs. Chandler and Milton.

"The Bells of Shandon" .....
Adanac Quartette

Solo, "The Pipes of Gordon's Men"—Hammond
Mr. George Dixon

Reading (With Musical Accompaniment
Mr. Ruthven McDonald

Solo, "Spring's Awakening" .....Sanderson
Miss Dorothy Allan

Duet, "The Fishermen" ....Gabussi
Messrs. Hollinshead and Blight

"Good-bye" ..... Tosti
Adanac Quartette

Solo, "The Bedouin Love Song" ..
Mr. Ruthven McDonald

Chorus, "By Babylon's Wave" ...
(Unaccompanied) Gounod

Solo,, "Lolita" (Spanish Serenade"
Bunsy Faccia
Mr. Redferne Hollinshead

"Rule Brittannia" .....
Adanac Quartette
God Save the King

Among the encore numbers given by the quartette were several negro lullabies that were most daintily sung. Too much cannot be said of the singing of the quartette. The four magnificent voices blended into a perfect whole with wonderful effect, the audience giving the singers the best possible tribute by maintaining a breathless silence during the numbers. The quartette had magnificent volume in some phrases, while in the pianissimo passages their voices died away to a faint whisper in which each voice could be distinctly heard. It was a revelation in quartette singing.

Individually the visitors won more laurels. Mr. Arthur Blight's fine baritone was admirably displayed in an effective offering of Craxton's fine song, "Mavis" and the audience demanded an encore.. A dramatic rendition of Hammond's stirring song, "The Pipes of Gordon's Men" was magnificently given by Mr. George Dixon, who made the most of the effective possibilities of the number. He too, was recalled.

Mr. Ruthven Macdonald offered a reading, "An Old Song," with musical accompaniment by Mr. Allan that was a gem of elocutionary art. In response to the applause he gave with equally striking effect, "The Soliquoy of An Old Piano." Later on Mr. Macdonald scored again in a splendid rendition of the beautiful "Bedouin Love Song," in which the rich resonant qualities of his bass voice were delightfully displayed.

Mr. Hollinshead chose as his solo number, Buzzi Peccia's lilting Spanish serenade "Lolida," a number that gave Mr. Hollinshead every opportunity to demonstrate the sweetness and power of his tenor voice.

Messrs. Blight and Hollinshead in their duet, Gabussi's descriptive song, "The Fishermen," scored another success and had to respond to an encore.

Miss Dorothy Allan has rarely been heard to better advantage than in her singing of Sanderson's "Spring's Awakening." The solo was of an exacting nature and displayed her splendid voice admirably.

The choir of St. Paul's church contributed two numbers in a manner that demonstrated their own ability and the careful training of Mr. Allan. The beautiful anthem, "Grant Us Thy Peace," was most effectively sung while the solo parts were taken by Miss Allan and Messrs. Chandler and Milton. Later on the choir sang in splendid style, Gounod's impressive "By Babylon's Wave," a most effective number.

Mr. John Allan was the accompanist throughout and performed brilliantly both at the organ and at the piano.

"Great Britain Within Her Rights" Letter Written By An American

The following letter was written by Mr. J. H. Henderson of Rochester, N.Y. who is a brother of Mrs. Brodigan, Brock street, and appeared in the Rochester Post-Express. Mr. Henderson has been a naturalized American for the past thirty-five years. It will be read with interest by Canadian people.

The attitude from the Southern states appear to have a grudge against Great Britain for interference in their trade with neutral nations. It is because they are unable to get fabulous prices for cotton, by sending it to Germany through the adjacent countries. They are now receiving a satisfactory price for cotton, eleven cents per pound which makes them good money.

The South is prospering, too, together with all other parts of the United States. It is their greed for gold which causes them to forget the right of nations struggling for their very existence. If Great Britain allowed cotton to be shipped to Germany through Denmark and Holland, the blockade would be a farce. Cotton is a contraband of war, and Great Britain is within her rights in preventing it reaching the enemy.

If these senators would study history more, and their selfish interests less, they would have a better view of their own inconsistency.

In the War of the Rebellion, we blockaded the Southern ports. The Lancashire mills were closed and there was great inconvenience caused in England through the order of our government. Furthermore we prevented shipment through the neutral ports of Mexico, if we were assured the ultimate destination was for the South ern Confederacy. The Palmerston government was a rock-ribbed Tory administration, is full sympathy with the Southern states, and yet Great Britain made no protest, knowing the Federal Government was acting within its rights. In view of this important fact, how ridiculous these senators would make our government appear to call the world. Do these senators forget so soon our war with Spain, and the relative actions of Great Britain and Germany in that war? Consult with Dewey in the battle of Manila bay, how the German admiralty annoyed him insanny ways, in decided contrast to the British admiral, who showed Admiral Dewey every possible courtesy, consistent with their neutrality.

Have these senators forgotten in the same Spanish war, Germany wanted to form a coalition of the principal European governments against the United States, as the famous reply of Lord Salisbury, the Prime Minister of Great Britain. His reply to Germany was that England would enter into no such combination, but if they persisted in that line of action, he would place the British fleet at the disposal of President McKinley. That settled it.

Again, should they not think of the fact that England in history was the great leader for parliamentary government in Europe. With all her faults, and they are many, she was for long periods of time the one nation of importance, having a free parliament. She forced this great charter from King John. Gradually the power of the people grew. King Charles lost his life because of his interference with the rights of parliament. King James was sent about his business for the same reason. George the Third tried to usurp the rights of parliament, but was prevented from so doing, by such great men as Pitt and Fox. He was a German, a stubborn, self-willed, narrow-minded man, determined to have his own way, constitution or no constitution. He exercised his prerogative to the limit.

The backing he had in the war with America, came from the landed aristocracy, who represented what was known as the pocket boroughs. Subsequently through the efforts of Lord McCauley the system was changed, and the cities had their proper representation.

If such a system had existed in 1776 there would have been no trouble with the colonies. Those great statesmen, Pitt and Fox, were opposed to the policy of George the Third, and Pitt made his last speech in the Commons in defence of the American people.

In the wars of the first Napoleon, Great Britain was determined to spend her last dollar and sacrifice her last man to prevent the great dictator destroying the liberties of Europe. Napoleon met his Waterloo, though the war lasted twelve years. History is repeating itself.

The self-appointed, divinely anointed Emperor William, would-be dictator of this planet and ruler of the worlds beyond, may yet meet his Waterloo. Time will tell. If the Allies win, the future historians will give full credit to Great Britain for the splendid part she played in the attainment of that end.

England for several centuries was the city of refuge for political refugees from the continent, being the only safe asylum in Europe. She also grants free speech to all her people. In the parks in London, any one can talk as long and as loud as he likes on any subject, politics, science, religion or any other subject in which he is interested. There is no such thing as lese majesty, the orators having the privilege to denounce royalty if they feel that way.

In Germany any man who dares to criticise the divine Emperor is liable to be sent to prison, and many of the leading men in Germany have suffered imprisonment for their temerity in talking about the doings of his royal nibs.

Give England credit for being in history the liberal nation of Europe, the leader in the contest for the rights of parliament, and the nation who taught our fathers the priceless value of political liberty. These senators should remember that England stands by us in the Monroe Doctrine, while Germany has always opposed it.

It is this England who to-day is fighting for her national existence, whether she shall continue to be free, or be a vassal to the German monarch. In view of these historical facts, these senators who are thinking more of gold for their fancied needs than they are of the priceless liberties of a nation, which in recent years has proven to be our friend, only bring dishonor and shame on our great republic and should be repudiated by the liberty loving citizens of the United States.

THE HOME CIRCLE COLUMN

In the home life, never forget that the children have social rights, and the chief among these is the right to laugh when they are happy, to cry when they are unhappy and to make a noise.

• • •

The great event in every young man's life is his awakening. There comes a time when he's aroused from the dreamy carelessness of boyhood by the opening possibilities of life. It he then drops into indifference and begins life in an easy, shiftless way; he frittera away his chances. If he comes to a deep, earnest purpose to be at his best and do his best, he arrives early at the highest rank among equals in business, profession, or trade.

• • •

The mother who radiates peace, radiates strength also. The restlessness, the noise, the rush of the life of to-day, make it all the more necessary to maintain within the home an atmosphere of serenity and sweetness, so that the threshold once crossed, the outside noise and clatter and strife are left securely behind. This is, perhaps, an old-fashioned conception of home.

• • •

Encouragement is something we naturally look for. A little praise, a word of hope, or a cheerful smile—something for the hungry soul to grasp and the weary mind to rest upon as we climb the toilsome mountain of life. How many poor hearts have sunken into despondency, when a little encouragement has reassured them. The soldier looks for it on the field of battle. It is the cheering voice of his leader that urges him on through the danger of death and crowns the day with victory.

• • •

It is just as possible to keep a calm house as a clean one, a cheerful house as a warm one, if the heads set themselves to do so. Where is the difficulty of consulting each other's weaknesses as well as each other's wants; each other's tempers as well a each other's health; each other's comfort as well as each other's character. Peace rules the day when reason rules the mind. Oh! it is by leaving the peace at home to chance, instead of pursuing it by system that so many houses are unhappy. It deserves notice, also, that almost anyone can be courteous and forbearing and patient in a neighbour's house. If anything goes wrong or is out of tune, or disagreeable there, it is made the best of, not the worst; even efforts are made to excuse it, if is attributed to accident, not design; and this is not only easy, but natural, in the house of a friend.

• • •

Let us take time to get acquainted with our families. The wealth you are accumulating may be a doubtful blessing to the son who is a stranger to you. Your beautifully kept house, busy mother, can never be a home to the daughter whom you have no time to caress.

• • •

You may preach sermons and advocate reforms and denounce wickedness, and yet your children will be captivated by the glittering saloon of sin unless you can make your home a brighter place than any other place on earth to them.

• • •

The home influence is either a blessing or a curse, either for good or for evil. It cannot be neutral. In either case it is mighty, commencing with our birth; going with us through life, clinging to us in death, and reaching into the eternal world. The specific influences of husband and wife, of parent and child, of brother and sister, of teacher and pupil united and harmoniously blended, constitute the home influence. Like the calm, deep stream, it moves on in silent but overwhelming power. It strikes its roots deep into the human heart, and spreads its branches wide over our whole being. Like the lily that braves the tempest and the Alpine flower that leans its cheek on the bosom of eternal snow, it is exerted amid the wildest storms of life and breathes a softening spell in our bosom even when a heartless world is freezing up the fountains of sympathy and love.

• • •

A cheerful atmosphere is important to a happy home life. It is hard for children to be good when they are exposed to an incessant hail storm of fault-finding from their parents. It is very difficult for a wife to maintain a calm and charmingly sweet demeanour when her husband is critical or sullen, and takes all her tender efforts with difficult appreciation.

• • •

MACKENSEN SEES SULTAN.

Tells Germans at Constantinople God Leads the Fatherland.

BERLIN, March 28. — The Tageblatt's Constantinople correspondent wiring under date of March 20 says:

"This afternoon Field Marshal von Mackensen was received by the Sultan in the Mefassin Kiosk for the purpose of delivering the marshal's baton and personal letter sent by the Kaiser. The court carriages in which the Field Marshal rode to the Yildiz Seraglio were escorted by the Sultan's own bodyguard, and there was a joyous ovation by great crowds all along the line. After an audience which lasted half an hour and at which the War Minister, Enver Pasha, also was present, the Sultan personally conferred the Osmanieh Order in brilliants on Field Marshal von Mackensen.

Later the Field Marshal went to tea at the Deutsches Haus Teutonia, where most of the German colony in Constantinople were on hand to meet him. In answer to an address of thanks for having opened up a direct road to Constantinople von Mackensen, who was deeply moved, replied:

"God was with us, and everything else for which credit is given to me my soldiers did. My share in comparison with the devotion of my soldiers is infinitely small. Fortune has been faithful to me, and I hope she will continue to be faithful, but the greatest thanks are due to God for His leadership.

"Yesterday in Adrianople and again here to-day in the midst of ovations I asked myself why these joyous demonstrations should be particularly concentrated upon my person. It can only be explained by the fact that the people were in reality cheering for Germany as personified by me, and the cause of enthusiasm is that the Balkan peoples believe in the loyalty of the Germans."

During the tea the band of the battleship Jawus Sultan Selim, formerly the Goeben, played, and a famous German operatic tenor in the uniform of a Turkish artillery officer sang martial ballads.

CANADA, MY MOTHER

C is for the "care" she's always taken;
A means "unseen arms" so big and strong;
N is for the "nerve" that's never shaken;
A means "always" glad to right a wrong.
D means "dear" to England when in trouble,
A means "all round"—a country free.
Put them all together, they spell "Canada"
A word that means the world to me.

WHY HAIR FALLS OUT

Dandruff causes a feverish irritation of the scalp, the hair roots shrink, loosen and then the hair comes out fast. To stop falling hair at once and rid the scalp of every particle of dandruff, get a 25-cent bottle of Danderine at any drug store, pour a little in your hand and rub well into the scalp. After a few application all dandruff disappears and the hair stops coming out.

THE BRITISH OFFENSIVE LIKELY TO SOON COMMENCE

FOUR GERMAN AIRSHIPS ARE DESTROYED AT SALONIKA

British Forces Now Hold One-Fourth of Western Front, Ready For Offensive

Which Will Soon Begin---Germany, it is Stated, Has Launched a New Submarine Warfare, to Sink Everything in Sight Without Warning

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, March 30.—Rome despatch says Mackensen has been relieved of the Macedonian command and will reorganize the Turkish army in an endeavour to end the possibility of the Turks seeking a separate peace.

LONDON, March 30.—British forces now hold one-fourth of the entire length of the western front, ready for the great offensive soon to begin.

ATHENS, March 30.—Monday's air raid on Salonika in which four German airships were destroyed, has caused a general demand for war against Germany.

OTTAWA, March 30.—Sir Sam Hughes has been cabled for a statement in reply to the Kyte charges. It is reported the Government has ordered him to return at once.

LONDON, March 30.—Ten thousand dock workers at Liverpool are on strike. Higher wages are demanded.

LONDON, March 30.—It is stated that Germany has launched a new submarine warfare with the intention of sinking everything in sight without warning.

TAKE VERDUN AND THEN PEACE

Special to The Examiner.

NEW YORK, March 30.—Among financial and business men in England, according to a passenger who arrived here Tuesday from London, there is a strong feeling that Germany hopes to capture Verdun and then notify the neutral nations that she is ready to consider terms of peace, says The New York Times. Some optimistic persons believe the war will have ended by October, but military officials think it is certain to last into 1917, and preparations are being made for another winter campaign.

Some officials at the Admiralty are of the opinion that the German fleet will come out into the North Sea, but advices from Berlin seem to indicate that the Kaiser's policy is to wait for developments favourable to Germany before trying this.

With regard to the Far Eastern prospects, this opinion was expressed recently by a London editor, who has access to valuable sources of information:

"I believe that the only reason that Roumania has not yet definitely joined the Allies is the hesitation of Sir Edwadr Grey to make concessions to the Roumanian demands with regard to Bulgaria. Sir Edward is, rightly or wrongly, considered to have Bulgarian sympathies, while Roumania not unnaturally insists that the provisions of the treaty of Bucharest shall be upheld by Great Britain.

"It is considered almost certain that Greece will follow the course pursued by Roumania, and, with these two countries on the side of the Allies, a forward move to roll up the Austrian flank would immediately become possible."

Self Help
For Nervous Persons

Can often be achieved by a simple change of food and drink.

Much nervousness is caused by tea and coffee drinking—eminent medical authorities having demonstrated that the drug, caffeine, in these beverages is a definite nerve poison to many persons.

Tea and coffee have no food value whatever, and are deceitful friends. Under their use the nerves first become irritated; then so sensative and "on edge" that a slight variation from general health often appears most serious to the victim.

However, Nature responds quickly to common-sense treatment, and right living frequently does more than medicine. So, if you value peace and comfort, try this easy experiment.

Stop both tea and coffee entirely and in their place use hot, well-made

POSTUM

This pure food-drink made from prime wheat and a little wholesome molasses has a delicious, snappy flavour and contains the genuine nourishing elements of the grain, but is absolutely free from the drug, caffeine, in tea or coffee, or any other harmful ingredient.

Postum comes in two forms: The original Postum Cereal must be well boiled; 15c and 25c packages. Instant Postum is a soluble powder. A teaspoonful dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water and, with cream and sugar makes a very palatable beverage instantly; 30c and 50c tins. Both forms are equally delicious and the cost per cup is about the same.

Thousands have been wonderfully benefitted by using Postum instead of tea and coffee—

WORST HURRICANE AND BLIZZARD IN ITS RECOLLECTION

Sweeps Over England—Hail and Snow in London

LONDON, March 30.—Great Britain during the past 48 hours has experienced the worst hurricane and blizzard in the recollection of the present generation.

Details of devastation and disaster are coming into London from various sources, but communication is too disorganized for any complete summary of the damage done by the elements.

Rivers are at flood and railway trains have been held up for hours in the drifted snow; houses have been unroofed and trees and telegraph poles blown down; this is the oft-repeated story from many corners of the country, particularly the northern counties and Wales.

Summer to Winter.

The most remarkable feature of the weather in London was the rapidity of its changes—brilliant sunshine bitter cold winds from various quarters and blizards of hail and snow which were followed almost immediately by a pelting rain. London this morning is covered with the worst slush in many years.

Train service is entirely demoralized. Trains from the north and west have been frequently twenty hours late in reaching London. Many trains have been entirely cancelled.

Many parts of England and Wales are isolated. In some places in the Midlands the snow drifted to a depth of twenty feet. Work in the Wales coal fields has been largely suspended, and an important meeting of coal miners at Cardiff, which was to have decided on the question of whether or not the men should strike, was cancelled as the delegates were unable to reach the city.

Field Marshal Viscount French, commander-in-chief of the armies in the United Kingdom, on his way to review the troops at Doncaster became snowbound and had to stop at a country village for a day.

Shopping in the business districts in the West End of London was badly impeded yesterday by the violence of the storm. Both the stores and the theatres were virtually deserted throughout the evening.

Liverpool and Birmingham experienced even more severe weather than London. Birmingham was cut off from communication with fifty nearby towns.

The casualties reported thus far have been remarkably few, consisting only of two deaths and about a score of persons seriously injured.

PURE BRED HOLSTEIN GOES TO MIDDLESEX

On Tuesday, March 29th three well known Holstein breeders of Middlesex county, Ont., visited the High-lawn Holstein farm owned by Joseph O'Kelly, R. R. No. 9 Peterborough and purchased at a large price, a son of Canada's new champion cow "Tensile of Riverside" (12264) who produced 241-20 lbs. of milk and 1056¾ lbs. of butter in one year. This young sire is a beautiful individual and will be placed at the head of the three herds of pure bred Holsteins.

TIRED OUT KIDNEYS

Kidney troubles are so frightfully common because the kidneys are so easily upset by overwork or exposure to cold and dampness. Cure is effected not by whipping them on to renewed effort but by overcoming the cause of the trouble. In the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. This cures the disease and makes them well. Backaches and urinary disorders then disappear.

Ten Allied Warships Block the North-Western Coast of the Island of Crete

Despite Strenuous Protests on the Part of the Greeks ---Landing Party Discovers a German Submarine Base---Other Despatches

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, March 30.—Ten Allied warships blocked the northwestern coast of the Island of Crete, despite Greek protests.

LONDON, March 30.—A submarine fired two torpedoes at a British destroyer, picking up the survivors of the Sussex disaster, but both shots missed.

TORONTO, March 30.—Theatre tax of one cent on five and ten-cent tickets, and ten cents' tax on higher-priced tickets, will be effective May 15th. A revenue estimated at six hundred thousand dollars will be realised.

TORONTO, March 30.—Provincial Secretary amended the Marriage Act in the House yesterday afternoon raising the marriage fee to $5, anticipating a revenue of fifty thousand dollars yearly.

LONDON, March 30.—Ten thousand dock workers on the Mersey went on strike yesterday pending the decision of arbitrators regarding overtime work.

VIENNA, March 30.—Russians are attacking Austrian positions along the Strya River with great violence, and are violently shelling positions near the Bessarabian front.

QUEBEC, March 30.—Private S. A. Mills, of Peterborough, invalided home, arrived yesterday from St. John, where they landed from the Empress of Britain.

ALLIES SEND NOTICE TO HUNS

PARIS, March 30.—The conference of the Entente Allies, which ended yesterday, adopted the following resolutions:

"The representatives of the Allied Governments, in conference at Paris March 27 and 28, 1916, affirm the complete community of views and solidarity of the Allies. They confirm all the measures taken to realise unity of action and unity of front.

"They understand by that, at the same time, unity of military action, assured by the Entente concluded between the general staffs, unity of economic action, the organization of which the present conference has regulated, and unity of diplomatic action, which is guaranteed by their unshaken will to continue the struggle to victory for the common cause.

"The Allied Governments decided to put into practice in the economic domain their solidarity of views and interests. They charge the economic conference, which is to be held shortly at Paris, to propose for them appropriate measures for the realisation of this solidarity.

"With a view to strengthen, coordinate and unify the diplomatic action to be exercised to prevent the revictualing of the enemy, the conference has decided to establish at Paris a permanent committee in which all the Allies will be represented.

The conference has decided: First, to continue the organization, already begun, at London of an international central bureau of freights; second, to proceed in common and with the briefest delay, to seek practical means to apportion equitably between the allied nations the charges of maritime transportation and check the rise in freight rates."

Young Girl Admits She Fired Building

Suicidal Attempt Cost Two Deaths in Cleveland.

Cleveland, Ohio, March 29.— That she set fire to her room in an effort to commit suicide, the flames enveloped an apartment building in Prospect Avenue, and causing the death of two persons and the serious injury of a score of others, was the substance of a confession which chief of detectives Rabshaw says Miss Bessie Reimers, an occupant of the house, made to him to-day.

Miss Reimers was severely injured and a guard was maintained at her bedside in a hospital until this afternoon, when she was removed to police headquarters. Miss Reimers told a story of a man wearing a mask entering her room and applying fire brands to the place. She declared she suspected a waiter and this man was being sought by the police at the time. Chief Rabshaw said Miss Reimers weakened and admitted she caused the conflagration, by accident, she insists.

ONCE PROSECUTOR, TO PRISON

Clarence A. Drew, Formerly Assistant District Attorney in Queen's is Sentenced.

NEW YORK, March 29.—Clarence A. Drew, formery Assistant District Attorney of Queen's County, and at one time a justice of the peace of the old town of Flushing before consolidation, pleaded guilty to an indictment charging grand larceny before Judge Humphrey in the Queen's County Court yesterday. He was sentenced to the New York Penitentiary, where the term of sentence is regulated by the prison authorities.

Drew is sixty-two years old, is married and has a family. For many years he was one of the best known lawyers in Queen's, and was considered one of the scholarly members of the Queen's Bar.

He was appointed Referee by the Supreme court in 1912 in a partition action to sell the estate of Mrs. Catharine Cahlstin, and it is alleged in the indictment that he misappropriated $800.

8,000,000 Acres Less Farmed in France

Paris, March 29.—The mobilization of farmers has caused a decrease in cultivation in France of 3,384,000 hectares (8,286,960 acres), according to a statement made by Jules Melite, Minister of Agriculture, in the Chamber of Deputies to-day.

This deficit must be remedied, said the Minister, in speaking on behalf of the Government bill providing for the tillage of abandoned soil and the organization of farm labourers during the war. The number of soldiers placed at the disposition of farmers, the Minister added, had increased from 15,600 in 1915 to 80,000 in 1916, but the great military operations had caused the authorities to change their decision to use these men for agriculture.

Gin Pills FOR THE KIDNEYS

What They Cured

Here's the remarkable experience of a Nova Scotian:—

"I was once a terrible sufferer with kidney and bladder troubles, and at times I would lose the use of my legs, and could not go away from home without some one with me. I was treated by different doctors for 5 years, and only got temporary relief. My son advised me to take Gin Pills, and after taking the first 2 or 3 doses I got relief. I continued to take them until I got completely cured. I owe my life to Gin Pills.

Yours very truly,
P. M. EMMERTON,
Port Medway, N. S."

GIN PILLS are 50c. a box or 6 boxes for $2.50 at all druggists. Sample treatment free if requested.

OUR SERIAL STORY

"Flower of the Gorse"

BY LOUIS TRACY

"No; I don't believe for one moment that she will ever estrange Yvonne from me. I do not even commit the injustice of attributing any such design to her. But that Yvonne will inherit Carmac's millions if they are left undisturbed in her mother's possession is almost as certain as death,—the one certainty life holds for us poor mortals. And, above all, don't hug the delusion that the man who has discovered my wife's pitiful secret is not alive to this phase of a problem which is in my mind night and day to the exclusion of all else. He will exact a price which you cannot pay. Each hour his ambitions mount higher. That unhappy woman is as powerless as a fawn caught in the coils of a python."

"One can free the fawn by dislocating the python's vertebrae. Is there any harm in my trying.

"You may kill the man. If you tackle him openly, you admit the very contention that he may never be able to establish in a court of law; because, although he may have ferreted out the prior marriage, he cannot yet be sure that there the divorce may not hold good. Even I myself am doubtful in that respect. It is a difficult legal point. Obviously Stella fears something. The fact that she has retained Raymond when she meant to dismiss him seems to indicate a weak spot in her armor. No, Lorry, I've looked at this thing from every point of view, and I see no loophole of escape. She is trapped, and Raymond alone can set her free. We must await his pleasure, act when he acts, and strive to assist her when the crisis arrives. Meanwhile, for her sake, we must endeavor to tolerate him."

Tollemache sat down again. "I feel like my namesake, Saint Lawrence the Martyr," he said gloomily. "You remember that when he was put on a gridiron, and done to a crisp golden brown on one side, he suggested that by way of a change his executioners should grill him a little on the other. Gee whizz! That reminds me, Socrates—if Sainte Barbe can't arrange matters better for pilgrims to her shrine, she ought to go out of the business. Here are Madeleine, Yvonne, you and myself mixed up in fifty-seven varieties of trouble! And I suppose Mere Pitou and little Barbe will receive attention in turn. If ever I meet Sainte Barbe in Kingdom Come, I'll tell her her real name. It strikes me that whoever invented the pin-dropping scheme knew what he was doing."

Ingersoll needed no explanation of his friend's outburst against the gentle lady whose love story has descended through the centuries. It was a confession of sheer impotence. He was forcing himself to admit that he could no more stay the course of events than stem the next tide rushing in from the Atlantic.

Feeling that he wanted to bite something, Tollemache lit his pipe and clenched the stem viciously between his strong teeth. Aroused by the striking of the match, Ingersoll began to smoke too. The attitude of the two bespoke their sense of utter helplessness. Thus might men imprisoned on some volcanic island sit and await in dumb misery the next upheaval of the trembling earth.

At last Tollemache, whose lively and strenuous temperament rebelled against indecision, even in circumstances such as these, where one false move might precipitate the very crisis he wished to avoid, put a question which Ingersoll had been expecting, and fearing, since their talk began.

"I take it you haven't told Yvonne what you have told me?" he said. "I can't recall your exact words, but you implied that she is ignorant of the true nature of the dilemma her mother is in?"

"Yes, that's the worst of it," muttered Ingersoll. "It comes hard, Lorry, to parade the wretchedness of forgotten years before one's own daughter,—a girl like Yvonne, whose mind is an unblemished mirror. Before this blight fell on our lives I don't believe she really understood why sin and wrongdoing should exist. We dwelt apart. We moved and breathed in a gracious world of our own contriving. She read of evil in books and newspapers; but it passed her by, leaving her unruffled as our earth when astronomers report some clash of suns in the outer universe. Now, although her mother's callousness is patent to her, and this mad escapade of Madeleine's has stabbed her as with a dagger, she is wholly unaware of the chief offense, my neglect to facilitate the divorce proceedings."

"For the first time in our acquaintance, Socrates, I've got to say that you're talking nonsense," blurted out Tollemache excitedly. "It's bad enough that Mrs. Carmac—I suppose I'd better stick to that name for her—should be in such a hole, and we be unable at present to pull her out. But it's absolute rot that you should blame yourself for her mismanagement of her own affairs. Dash it all! Where is the man or woman who can act to-morrow in face of such an experience as yours as they might, twenty years hence, wish they had acted? That's no way to look at things, Tell Yvonne, I say. Tell her to-night. Then she can discuss the situation fairly and squarely with her mother. Don't you see, heaps of things may have occurred which, if you knew of them, might modify your judgment? This American divorce may be bad law in England, but good law in France. That lawyer fellow, Mr. Bennett, struck me as a wise old codger. He, or someone like him, might put Mrs. Carmac up to all sorts of dodges to do Raymond in the eye. And, in any event, don't start accusing yourself to Yvonne. If you do, d'ye know what the upshot will be? She'll take your side against her mother, and where will Mrs. Carmac be then?"

"Probably you are right, Lorry. I have learned to distrust my own thoughts. Yes, I'll tell Yvonne the whole truth."

Ingersoll spoke in the accents of stoic despair; but Tollemache was in fighting mood, and eager to close with the enemy.

"It's sound policy to defend by attacking," he went on, with an air of profundity that, at any other time, the older man would have found intensely amusing. "That's what we wer taught in college football, and it's true of every other kind of rough and tumble. Why shouldn't Mrs. Carmac blow Raymond and his blackmailing schemes sky high by making a deal with Fosdyke and the other relatives? The cake is big enough you say, that each should get a good slice and be satisfied. As for legal proceedings in England, who's going to prosecute? Not you. And who else can act? The more I look at this affair the more I'm convinced it's a bogy that will fall to bits at the first straight punch."

Certainly the enthusiastic advocate of strong measures seemed to have hit on a project that, though difficult, was not wholly impracticable. If Fosdyke had only kept clear of that stupid intrigue with Madeleine Demoret, a settlement by consent might come well within the bounds of reason.

For the first time in many days Ingersoll saw a gleam of light in a choking fog. He brightened perceptibly, and talked with some of his wonted animation.

Neither man noticed how the time was slipping by until Mere Pitou summoned them to supper. Yvonne had not arrived; so they assumed that she had remained with Mrs. Carmac. About ten o'clock Ingersoll—probably in a state of subdued nervousness as to the outcome of the projected disclosure—asked Tollemache to convey a message to

MY TERRIBLE HACKING AND SPLITTING COUGH WAS ENTIRELY CURED BY DR. WOOD'S NORWAY PINE SYRUP.

Mrs. Clara Jackson, Huntsville, Ont., writes us under date of January 12th, 1916. "I take great pleasure in writing you concerning Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. Last winter I contracted a very bad cough which troubled me all through this summer. This winter I started to take Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup, and after taking three bottles I can truthfully say that I fell like another woman. The terrible hacking and splitting cough, and the dry sensation in my throat is entirely cured. I would certainly recommend it to anyone troubled with bronchitis or lung trouble. I have not words too grateful to give you."

All obstinate coughs and colds yield quickly to the action of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup, combining as it does all the lung healing virtues of the Norway pine tree, and the soothing, healing and expectorant properties of other excellent herbs, roots and barks.

"Dr. Wood's" has been on the market for the past twenty-five years, and we claim that it is the best cure for a cough or cold that you can possibly procure. The thousands of testimonials we have received prove that our claim is right.

All we ask you is to see that you get "Dr. Wood's" when you ask for it, and don't accept some no-account substitute.

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup is put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees the trade mark; price, 25c and 50c. Manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

YOU'VE GOT TO TAKE A CHANCE

If you go across the ocean, your ship is liable to be sunk by a submarine.

True enough, but if you travel on land your train is liable to be wrecked.

If you just jimmy around the home-town your automobile is liable to blow up or throw off a tire and precipitate you quickly into a ravine on your elbows and shoulder blades.

If you go buggy riding your horse is apt to shy at a piece of paper in the road and kick you into the middle of the following week.

If you go out walking an automobile is liable to scramble you up or a foot-pad is liable to tap you suddenly yet firmly, upon the dome of thought.

At the very best you have got to take a chance, whether you want to or not.

FELL IN A FAINT.

Mrs. Edwin Martin, Ayer's Cliff, Que., writes: "Before using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I was in a terrible condition. Dizzy spells would come over me and I would fall on the floor. I could not sweep without fainting. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food has so built up my system that I can work and do my housework. Your medicine cured me when doctors had failed."

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

MR. BAXTER'S ROBBER

By EDMUND COMPTON.

Mr. Benjamin Baxter never forgot that in college he had been the right (football) tackle of his time and had pulled stroke oar in the first university race in which his college had beaten after a long series of defeats. When, as a middle aged man with a bald head and somewhat pursy stomach, he visited Europe he maintained that if any sneak thief, robber or bandit could get away with him he was not come to do so. This did not satisfy Mrs. Baxter, who dreaded that, in Italy especially, her husband might be kidnaped and held for a ransom.

Mr. Baxter had heard that one of the principal sights of Rome was a visit to the Coliseum by moonlight. One evening while in the Eternal City, when the queen of night was at the full, he proposed to his wife that they go and view the ruin thus illuminated. Mrs. Baxter refused. But he persisted.

Leaving his hotel on the Esqualine hill, he strolled down a broad thoroughfare and soon stood on a height overlooking the eastern end of the enormous theater of the Caesars. He was surprised to note how immense it looked under the different light. The great pile, or the remaining two-thirds of it, built by slaves 1,900 years ago, where gladiators had fought and Christians had been torn to pieces by wild beasts, rose against the sky like the dark silhouette of a mountain. Going around to the entrance, Mr. Baxter went within the walls and saw another sight—the moonlight throwing the upper portions of the interior into contrast with the shadowy lower parts. Many visitors were there, but as the hour was late they gradually departed.

Suddenly Mr. Baxter found himself alone. To go out through the main entrance was to increase the distance to his hotel. There were openings all around the oval, but not lighted. Nevertheless the fearless American concluded to make his exit by one of them. It was very dark under the archway through which he passed, especially since that at that moment a cloud rolled over the moon. Suddenly he felt some one brush by him and a cloth fly against his face. He had heard that the members of the International League of Pickpockets were then working Rome and were used to covering their victims' faces with a newspaper when robbing them, and it flashed upon Mr. Baxter that he was suffering robbery. Clapping his hand to his pocket, he missed the portemonnaie he usually carried there. Throwing his arms around the person who had passed him, he dragged him back into the arena. There he found that he held a priest.

"Ah, ha!" he cried. "So you thieves resort to the priestly dress to commit your depredations. But you can't fool an American. I'll get my money back or I'll break your back over one of these stone walls."

Then came a volley of words like an explosion of a Gatling gun, but since Mr. Baxter knew only two Italian words, "dove sta" (where is), they produced no effect upon him. He felt all over the man's body to find his portemonnaie, but found only 10 centessimi, or 2 cents. Then, after giving the fellow his opinion of him (in English), telling him that he had been very dexterous in passing the pauper to a dark figure whose footsteps were to be heard running away, Mr. Baxter remembered that, after all, there were only a few five lire bills in the portemonnaie. So he gave the thief a pound drubbing and a final kick and started out of the ruin quite pleased that he had lost none of his youthful strength or courage. The only fear he felt was at a possibility of having to appear in court against the robber. On arriving at his hotel he told his adventure to his wife.

"Why, my dear," said that lady, "I have your pocketbook locked in the trunk."

Thereupon Mrs. Baxter unlocked the trunk and took out the pocketbook.

"Well," said Baxter meditatively, "I downed him anyway."

There was a sharp rap at the door. Opening it, there stood two of the national police in swallowtail coats, white cord aiguillettes, cocked (Napoleon) hats and swords. Any one could see by the serious expression of their countenances that the dignity of the Italian realm had been offended. Behind them stood a delicate, intellectual looking priest, wiping scratches on his face and forehead with a bloody handkerchief.

Mr. Baxter, marching between the officers of the law, was taken to the police office, where, summoning his Italian vocabulary, he kept repeating: "Dove sta the Americano consulato?"

His plea was finally heard, and he was permitted to write a line to the consul, who came, but whose influence availed nothing but to secure for the American who had maltreated an inoffensive priest a fair trial. Baxter was locked up.

The next morning before the time arrived for calling the case the consul visited the priest who had been assailed, and who proved to be a man of influence. The matter was explained to the ecclesiastic, who listened attentively. When the consul had finished, the injured party said:

"Signore Baxter comes from a land where there are a great many devoted sons of the church. Whether your explanation is correct or not I do not know, but if the matter was a mistake I excuse it; if it was a wanton attack I forgive it."

A cab containing the consul and the priest soon after drove up to the law courts, and Mr. Baxter was released.

Hospital "Boarders."

"There is a class which gives every hospital in the city a whole lot of trouble, especially in the winter time," said a member of the faculty of the Pennsylvania hospital. "It is made up of what we call 'steady boarders,' meaning men who have no homes, who are too lazy to work and who feign illness in order to secure a comfortable bed and good food for a week or so at a time. However, we have devised a scheme which is quite effective in driving them away. When one of these boarders arrives on the scene we can usually spot him. We know the earmarks of the species. He is taken into the receiving ward, solemnly undressed and laid upon the operating table, where a fake examination takes place. The trouble is finally located in the spine, and an immediate operation is advised. The patient writhes, protesting that he feels much better, but is not permitted to leave. Meanwhile a piece of ice has been sharpened to a point and suddenly, without warning, the ice is drawn down the boarder's back. With a yell he is off the table, out of the room and out of the building. We threw his clothes out after him, and he never comes back."—Philadelphia Record.

England's Oldest Borough.

As Salisbury is well known as Sarum, so is England's oldest borough, Barnstaple, as Bocrum, which may have been the Roman name of the town. According to old memorials, "the old name of the town was Abertawe, because it stood towards the mouth of Taw River." The Saxons changed it to Bernadenstaple. Barnstaple appears to have been represented in the Witenagemot of Anglo-Saxon Parliaments. It was also one of the oldest boroughs—if not absolutely the oldest—in the kingdom. Its beautiful manufacture, once an important industry, has now died out, but there are numerous makers of lace and gloves, large cabinet works, tanneries, and potteries ("Bocrum ware").

Had Palpitation OF THE HEART ALSO WEAK and DIZZY SPELLS.

When the heart begins to palpitate it will beat fast for several seconds, then slow, then start to flutter, and a feeling of utter depression will come over your whole system, accompanied by weak, fainting and dizzy spells, and if you should happen to wake up in the night with your heart palpitating, and that "all gone" sinking sensation, you feel as if you were surely going to die.

When you feel this way, you may be sure that both your heart and nerves are out of order, and what you require is a real good heart and nerve tonic; one that will build up and strengthen both the heart and nerve system.

For this purpose nothing can equal Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills.

Mrs. J. S. Nicholls, Listowel, Ont., writes: "I was weak and run down, my heart would palpitate, and I would take weak and dizzy spells. A friend advised me to take your Heart and Nerve Pills, so I started at once, and found that I felt much stronger, and my heart was never so much better in a short time. I cannot praise your medicine too highly for it has done me a world of good. My husband has also been bothered with heart trouble, ever since childhood, and finds great relief by using your valuable pills."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50 cents per box, 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

EDISON WINS OVER FIRE.

New Buildings Replace Burned Ones Within Six Days.

ORANGE N.J., March 29.—The new buildings at the Edison plant in West Orange, put up to replace those burned last Monday night, were ready for occupancy to-day just as Thomas A. Edison said they would. While the fire was still burning he declared that he would have the new buildings up within six days, and the following morning he had the iron ready and the frame part up.

The new buildings are covered with corrugated iron. Mr. Edison believes this is the best cheap construction for purposes of fire protection.

GEN. PETAIN "THE TERROR"

Simple and Democratic, He is Beloved by His Soldiers, Whose Interests He Carefully Guards

PARIS, March 29.—During the war the French have become enthusiastic over a number of suddenly discovered men of military genius who shortly afterwards have lost battles and fallen into disfavour.

Even General Joffre himself did not altogether escape for a time. The best example, however, was General Foch, who stood at the head of the commanders who won the battle of the Marne; but we hear very little now of Foch.

The latest 'discovery' is General Philippe Petain, commanding the armies around Verdun. Petain, who was born near Calais, entered Saint Cyr in 1876, serving there in the famous Chasseurs-a-Pied. By 1890 he was captain and, after two years in the Ecole Superieure de Guerre, he was given stayff standing as professor of infantry tactics. Shortly after the outbreak of the war Petain was made a general of division, and in June of last year was given command of the Thirty-third Army Corps, his career thus being regular and gradual. His first marked success in the war was his management of the first line assault in the Champagne offensive, and it was believed that he would command the French offensive in the Somme, which the German blow at Verdun postponed.

Youthful and Athletic.

Petain is now 60 years of age, but is wonderfully youthful and athletic In fact, he may be called almost a crank about the physical fitness of his staff officers, objecting to any one who cannot run, ride a bicycle, and drive an automobile. He is popularly known as the "Petain, the Terror," by reason of his strenuous energy, which he keeps at such high pressure by running, heavy training and general gymnastic work.

Like General Joffre, he is very democratic and simple in his mode of life, his headquarters being a hovel guarded by civil detectives and not by soldiers. With his soldiers, therefore, he is naturally very popular especially as he thoroughly looks after their food and clothing. Indeed the story goes that he succeeded in getting a good, hot, square meal served to the Moroccan troops a few minutes before they made their tremendous charge against the Douaumont fort, soon after the Brandenburgers had taken it. During the recent fighting Petain has ordered that all the men should shave, so that their masks would protect them better against gas attacks. Perhaps the obligatory moustache of the French soldier may thus disappear.

Hinges on Verdun.

General Petain was made Chevalier of the Legion of Honour in 1901 and is now Commander. But, after all, his reputation will stand or fall by the success of his resistance at Verdun, for soldiers are judged only by results.

CURES CATARRH, BRONCHITIS BY SWIFT CERTAIN METHOD

Thousands of drug fiends have been started on their downward course through Catarrh snuffs containing some habit forming drug. If you suffer from a cold, sneezing, use a sensible treatment like Catarrhozone. It heals and soothes, brings relief at once, cures thoroughly. In bronchitis and throat trouble no doctor can do better than perscribe Catarrhozone. Try it—see what wonders it works—what power it possesses. Different from the old way,—you inhale Catarrhozone. Get the dollar outfit which includes the inhaler and is guaranteed. Smaller size 50c; sample size 25c; at all dealers.

Michael Foran, one of the survivors of the famine days in Ireland in 1847, when thousands died of starvation, has died in Connemara, aged 94. He had a narrow escape from being buried alive in 1847, being found nearly dead by the roadside by a burial gang and put into a grave with fourteen others, when luckily he showed signs of life.

A Certified Cure of Bilious Headache

Chronic Liver Trouble Was Entirely Cured by the Use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills—Endorsement by Justice of The Peace

Many people are habitually bilious. Mode of life tends to make chronic a torpid condition of the liver. The result is spells of biliousness with sick headache, stomach derangements and much irritability and depression of spirits.

To many neglect to take active means of curing biliousness. The bad spell passes over and for a time they are all right. But an unusually hearty menu upsets the liver and consequently the usual discomfort and suffering.

The writer of this letter has broken up this habit of biliousness and is now enjoying the best of health. Her experience should prove of value to many who, like her, have suffered for years from bilious spells and sick headaches.

Miss Cora Cochran, Salisbury, N. B., writes:—"I was nearly always troubled with headaches, and every two or three weeks would have to lose a day or two from school with bilious sick headache. I have taken doctor's medicine and other preparations, which did little good.

"When I had the sich headache I would vomit a lot and could keep nothing on my stomach. My mother got Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills and I was soon improved, and continued the treatment until entirely cured. My condition generally was greatly benefitted, and I am now in the best of health."

Mr. J.J. Keohan, J. P., writes:—"This is to certify that I am personally acquainted with Miss Cora Cochran and believe her statement in regard to Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills to be true and correct."

Keep the liver active by the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills and you will prevent a multitude of petty ills. Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, one pill a dose, 25 cents a box, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Company, Limited, Toronto.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

LADY'S SHIRT WAIST.

By Anabel Worthington.

The woman who keeps well informed on fashions knows that the very newest in waists is the shoulder cape idea to give a military air to the woman who feels there is some dash in her make-up, or to the one who depends upon her relatives to give her dash. For all that, we see simplicity expressed in the model No. 7,682. Strikingly military in cut, in the height of fashion is the necessary fulness to blouse at the waist line in front; at the back it is gathered as pictured. The shoulder cape is rather full and deep enough to cover the bust line. Contrasting goods are used for the chin collar, that touch of tabs at the side in light tone; the pointed box plait is also of contrasting goods and trimmed with buttons in "vogue." The full sleeves are gathered at the wrist and finished with a slashed cuff that buttons. In making without the shoulder cape the fronts of the waist roll so as to form narrow revers, and short sleeves are used in the waist, with a deep turn-back cuff. A design that will be extremely popular and one that you will attempt as satisfactory from just what the illustration shows, but of course you will want to copy it.

This pattern is cut in sizes—36, 38, 40 inch measure. To make it in size 38 will require 3½ yards of light goods 36 inches wide and ⅝ yards dark—or 2½ yards if all one color is used. If made without the cape and box plait only 1¾ yards of 36 inch material will be needed.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

By sending a cents to the office of this publication you may obtain the pattern.

Presentation to Norwood Couple Who Are Moving to Peterborough —Employment Bureau Formed

NORWOOD, March 29.—Rev. Mr. Geer of Hall's Bridge, has been home for a few days.

Captain Neilson was in town on Thursday.

Mr. Archie Thompson of Hastings was in town last week.

Mrs. G. Jones spent a couple of days in Havelock last week.

Mrs. Chas. King left last week for her home at Stewart Valley, Sask.

On Tuesday evening Mr. and Mrs. D. Bongard who are moving to Peterborough were the recipients of a leather rocker and a jardiniere stand, presented by their friends and neighbours, with the accompanying address:

To Mr. and Mrs. David Bongard:—

It is with sincere regret that we learn of your intended removal from the community in which you have both resided for so long. We esteem you very highly as neighbours, and friends and hence feel that in your distinct loss.

However, we are glad to know that you are not going so far away that we will not have the pleasure of seeing you at least occasionally.

In token of the sincerity of our esteem for you we ask you to kindly accept these gifts and as you use them from time to time we hope they will cause you to think of your old friends and neighbours here.

Signed on behalf of the community:

Mr. and Mrs. John Rathwell.
Mr. and Mrs. B. Weese.

Mr. and Mrs. Kurr and family moved to Peterborough on Friday.

Mr. Harry Andrews of Havelock was in town on Saturday.

Sgt. Brown of Peterborough spent the week-end with Norwood friends.

Mrs. (Dd.) Ford entertained about thirty-five guests, on Tuesday evening last, at a ten-cent social tea, the proceeds to go towards the patriotic work of the Ladies' Aid of the Methodist Church.

An employment bureau has been organized by the Norwood Boy Scouts with the following officers:

Supervisor—Scoutmaster—Rev. A. M. Irvin.

Chairman—Patrol Leader—A. Weir

Secretary—Patrol Leader—Harry Puffer.

Members of Executive—Patrol Leader, Basil Rogers, Scout Norman McKelvie.

Mrs. Elliott of Edmonton, Alberta, who has been visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Howson left on Monday to visit her husband's people at Halifax.

Mr. John Weir spent Saturday in Peterborough.

On Saturday at her son's home in Centre Dummer, the death occurred of Lydia Ann Borsbeck, relict of the late Charles Rusaw, in her seventy-third year.

The funeral service was held at Centre Dummer Baptist church, of which deceased had been a member, on Monday afternoon at one o'clock after which the cortege proceeded to the Norwood Cemetery where interment took place.

Deceased was a sister of Mr. Thos. Borsbeck and Mrs. H. Murphy of this place.

The Norwood platoon was entertained on Friday night by the congregation of the Baptist Church. An interesting programme of recitations, drills, etc was given, after which refreshments were served. All, however were deeply disappointed in not hearing the expected, address by Lawyer Wearing of Peterborough who was to have been present.

Mr. Will Duffield of Toronto, son of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Duffield of town has enlisted.

Mr. Will Gilders of Brooksville was in town on Monday.

The funeral of the late John Buck, who died on Monday at his home on the Belmont Road, will take place on Wednesday afternoon to the Norwood cemetery.

Mrs. Minors is visiting her mother at Bobcaygeon.

Pte. Fred Kempt was in Peterborough on Saturday.

Lt.-Colonel Johnson was in town on Thursday.

IN FIVE MINUTES! NO INDIGESTION, GAS OR SOUR, ACID STOMACH

The Moment "Pape's Diapepsin" Reaches the Stomach All Distress Goes

"Really does" put bad stomach in order—"really does" overcome indigestion, dyspepsia, gas, heartburn and sourness in five minutes—that—just that—makes Pape's Diapepsin the largest stomach regulator in the world. If what you eat ferments into stubborn lumps you belch gas and eructate sour, undigested food and acid; head is dizzy and aches; breath foul; tongue coated your insides filled with bile and indigestible waste, remember the moment "Pape's Diapepsin" comes in contact with the stomach all such distress vanishes. It's truly astonishing—almost marvelous, and the joy is its harmlessness.

A large fifty-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin will give you a hundred dollars' worth of satisfaction or your druggist hands you your money back.

It's worth its weight in gold to man and women who can't get their stomachs regulated. It belongs in your home—should always be kept handy in case of a sick, sour, upset stomach during the day or night. It's the quickest, surest and most harmless stomach regulator in the world.

GLASS OF SALTS CLEANS KIDNEYS

If Your Back Hurts of Bladder Bothers You Drink Lots of Water

When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore, don't get scared and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys and irritate the entire urinary tract. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowels; clean, by flushing them with a mild, harmless salts, which removes the body's urinous waste and stimulates them to normal activity. The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In 24 hours they strain from it 500 grains of acid and waste, so we can readily understand the vital importance of keeping the kidneys active.

Drink lots of water—you can't drink too much; also get from any pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate clogged kidneys, also to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure, makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everybody should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean and active. Try this, also keep up the water drinking, and no doubt you will wonder what became of your kidney trouble and backache.

MAMMA! DON'T YOU SEE YOUR CHILD IS SICK, CONSTIPATED

Look at Tongue! Move Poisons From Liver and Bowels at Once

Mother! Your child isn't naturally cross and peevish. See if tongue is coated; this is a sure sign its little stomach, liver and bowels need a cleansing at once.

When listless, pale, feverish, full of cold, breath bad, throat sore, doesn't eat, sleep or act naturally, has stomach-ache, diarrhoea, remember, a gentle liver and bowel cleansing should always be the first treatment given.

Nothing equals "California Syrup of Figs" for children's ills; give a teaspoonful, and in a few hours all the foul waste, sour bile and fermenting food which is clogged in the bowels passes out of the system, and you have a well and playful child again. All children love this harmless, delicious "fruit laxative," and it never fails to effect a good "inside" cleansing. Directions for babies, children of all ages and grown-ups are plainly on the bottle.

Keep it handy in your home. A little given to-day saves a sick child to-morrow, but get the genuine. Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," then look and see that it is made by the California Fig Syrup Co."

LOCAL WEEKLY MARKET REPORT

Sugar Advances Another Ten Cents and Hogs Are Up to $10.50—War is Taking Toll From Every Purse and Every Household—Tea Very Firm - Eggs Are Cheaper and Going Lower

Sugar advanced another ten cents on Tuesday, making a total of forty cents in practically a week, and the end is not yet. Retail grocers are more or less in the air, and prices are not uniform. Sugar never was among the grocers' favoured commodities. Grocers are few who make a regular profit from it. And just now the market is very unsettled. England and France formerly obtained their supplies of sugar from Germany and Austria. The farmers of the Central Empires produced very extensively of sugar beets, and the Cuban cane was largely supplied to America. But now the Allies are invading our market, and we are now facing eight-cent sugar when it should be cheapest. And some say the worst is yet to come.

Costly Freightage.

And the war is playing havoc with ocean freighters. Rice, sago, and tapioca are all considerably advanced. These articles come from the Orient, and so many vessels have been withdrawn from the service of trade that shippers find the greatest difficulty in forwarding supplies. Besides insurance rates are away up, and the world grocery trade are so harrassed that no one is sure to-day of what will happen to-morrow.

A large consignment of lemons were received in Peterborough this week. Their arrival is decidedly timely, but it had a narrow escape en route. For ten hours it was pursued by a submarine in the Mediterranean, and finally managed to elude the enemy. Had that vessel been sunk it is patent to everyone that local prices would have been seriously affected.

Mr. J. John, tea emrchant, is the authority for the statement that three vessels laden with tea were recently sunk within a few days of each other with a total loss of eight million tons of tea. The nerekis should be at home not only first Tuesdays but any old time the neighbours drop in.

Hence the long arm of the Huns reaches into the most remote home and takes toll from every teacup, sugar bowl and in fact takes a pinch here and a handful there from all the containers in the kitchen cabinet. There is some satisfaction in knowing that their work is merely destructive. They have not captured these supplies for their own use and we are assured that in Hunland the boards are bare especially the cupboards.

War Costs Dutch A Pretty Penny

The Hague, Netherlands, March 29.—The war so far cost Holland a clear $140,000,000. Further, reckoning the demands of the intervening period at $8,000,000 a month, the new minister of finance, Dr. Anton van Gyn, estimates that by August 1 next a sum of $180,000,000 will have been spent of the mobilized land and sea forces and in meeting the various other extraordinary demands made on the treasury by the war crisis.

Of the amount mentioned, $110,000,000 was raised by a five per cent. loan issued after the first three or four months of the war, and the problem now facing the country is how to provide the balance of $70,000,000. Three bills have just been presented to the Dutch parliament, embodying a straightforward and fairly bold solution of the question. The new minister of finance therein proposes to raise as much as $32,000,000 by a special levy termed a "defence tax," in the financial year beginning May 1 next, to obtain another $18,000,000 by a tax on war profits, and to have recourse to a loan for the balance of $20,000,000. The actual loan, however, is to amount to $50,00,000 out of which, assuming the war is over, the extra $30,000,000 will be utilised to consolidate the floating debt accruing from the ordinary budgets of 1914, 1915, and 1916.

Seeing that the floating debt of the Netherlands East Indies will also have to be consolidated shortly it is evident that heavy demands will be made on the money market here before long. As, however, it is largely a matter of replacing floating by a fixed debt, it is not expected that the market will be greatly influenced; and the powerful position of the Netherlands Bank—whose gold stocks now amount to $196,000,000 — and the general plentifulness of money here renders the prospects of the coming loans bright.

GERMAN ATTACKS IN AVOCOURT WOODS FAIL

New Attempts Expected At Malancourt

The Germans Fail To Retake Lost Positions At Avocourt

Several Attacks Failed Before the Fierce Resistance of the French---Enemy Who Gained a Foothold in Malancourt Expected to Drive Forward Now in an Attempt to Capture the Whole Position.

UNITED STATES WORRIED OVER SUBS.

PARIS, March 30.—Several German infantry attacks upon Avocourt wood, in an endeavour to retake lost positions were made last night. The War Office report of this afternoon says these assaults failed. No further advances against Malancourt were attempted by the Germans. East of the Meuse there was heavy artillery fighting.

Under cover of a violent bombardment the Germans launched a heavy attack against the French front south of the Somme, about eighty miles from Paris. The enemy penetrated the French advanced lines west of Vermandeviller, ten miles southwest of Peronne, and north of Chautnes, but were driven out by an immediate counter-attack.

LONDON, March 30.—Having gained a foothold in Malancourt, the Germans are expected to drive forward furiously to try to capture the whole village and gain possession of the two important highways intersecting in the town. The French position at this point is in peril. From the heights to the north and northeast, and the redoubt newly conquered by the Teutons, the German artillery is pouring a terrific fire upon the French fortified works. The French are replying from the ridge of Dead Man's Hill and Hill 304, southeast of Malancourt, where heavy batteries command the Malancourt highways.

REPORT OF GERMAN WAR OFFICE

Special to The Examiner:

BERLIN, March 30.—German War Office this afternoon claimed no further important gains in the fighting around Malancourt, but announced the repulse of all French attacks in the Avocourt woods to the south.

Calls Upon Strikers to Return to Work

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, March 30.—After an investigation of the grievances of the men who have quit work in the Glasgow district, the Council of Amalgamated Society of Engineers, decided to-day that the strike in the six shops was unconstitutional, and called on the men to return to work. The Council points out that the strike is in contravention of the Muntions of War Act, and warns the men they are liable to fines which may be deducted from their earnings.

More Worries For the United States

Special to The Examiner.

WASHINGTON, March 30.—Any expectation that the administration would recede from its determination to break off diplomatic relations with Germany if it is proved a German submarine attacked the Sussex, was removed by news of the attack on the steamer Eagle Point. Only prompt and complete settlement of the whole submarine issue can prevent the threatened rupture—and there are officials who believe such a settlement more likely after relations have been broken off than before.

Lloyd George Returns To England

Examiner Special:

LONDON, March 30.—David Lloyd George, Minister of Munitions, returned from France to-day on account of serious labour troubles among Clyde munitions workers.

Austrian Aeroplanes Shot Down

Special to The Examiner:

ROME, March 30.—Official statement reports four Austrian aeroplanes shot down over Venetia and eight officers captured.

BERLIN, March 30.—The submarine "crisis" in the German Reichstag has completely passed, with a victory for Chancellor Von Bethmann-Hollweg, who urged a conciliatory policy toward neutrals.

French Air Squadrons in Successful Raids

Special to The Examiner:

PARIS, March 30.—French air squadrons have made three successful raids on railway stations through which the Crown Prince draws supplies for his Verdun armies, the War Office announced this afternoon. A French squadron dropped fifteen bombs of large calibre on the Sablons station at Metz, and five on Pagny station. Two aeroplanes last night bombarded the Mezrirse station at Metz.

PARIS, March 30.—General Dubail, who was in command of all the French armies in Eastern France, including those before Verdun, has returned to the capital to become military governor of the Paris district. He succeeds General Manoury, who retires on account of ill health.

LONDON, March 30.—Complete suspension of telegraphic communication between Holland and England is reported. It is rumoured the cable has been cut by the Germans.

Rev. John Butler Invited to Cambray

LINDSAY, March 30.—At a meeting of representatives of the Lindsay district of the Methodist church, held at the home of Rev. Capt. Williams, it was unanimously decided to invite Rev. John R. Butler, of Cavan, to Cambray circuit next conference the terms to commence on July 1st.

Rev. Mr. Butler will take the place of Rev. C. G. Williams, now chaplain of the 109th Battalion.

Voice of the People

The dust season is once more upon us with the usual unpreparedness of our Council to cope with it. It is well known that the dust—especially the Spring dust—is the source of more serious diseases, than all other causes combined. The press will need to get after the Council to give it its usual Spring awakening, and that too immediately when the health of the community is so desirable.

Yours truly,

ANTI-DUST.

GOVERNMENT IS STILL SEEKING FOR A WAY OUT

Strong Undercurrent of Discontent and Resentment Among the Conservative Members Over Grave Charges Made by Mr. Geo. Kyte

NOTHING FROM HUGHES

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, March 30.—The Government is still seeking a solution of the situation which has been created by grave charges preferred by George Kyte in connection with fuse contracts on Tuesday night, and the Prime Minister came from his office after it was over with a heavy frown on his brow, and with nothing but trouble in his eye.

There is no visible mitigation of the strong under-current of discontent and resentment which has been evident among members since the charges were preferred, and unless something is done in the meantime disaster would follow any vote taken on the Laurier resolution as far as the government is concerned.

"This is no ordinary caucus," remarked a Conservative member this morning. "Think of it. Here are three men sitting down together and making an agreement to divide the spoils before the contract was let, and what were these spoils divided from? From the letting of contracts for uses which the companies, who secured them, were not in a position to provide and that at a time when our boys at the front were crying out for shells and shedding their blood because of the lack of. There is only one analogy in history for such a transaction and that is the time that lots were drawn for our Saviour's garments."

From General Hughes no word has yet been received, so far as known. Round his name to-day the controversy rages. Only his immediate resignation will satisfy a large body of the government party. Sir Wilfrid Laurier is content to give the government time to think about the predicament in which it finds itself. He consented the other night to the adjournment of the debate, though he had everything to gain from a political standpoint by insisting at the time upon a vote being taken.

WHAT THEY SAY.

NEW YORK, March 30.—E. B. Cadwell, one of the backers of the American Ammunition Co., the Canadian dealings with which has resulted in charges against General Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia and Defence, today, through an office attache, denied any dealings with relatives of Hughes. B. F. Yeakum, President of the Frisco lines, could not be seen. His secretary would not admit that Yeakum was interested in the Ammunitions Company.

"There is no reply to be made," he said. "The American Ammunition Co.," said the spokesman at Cadwell's office. "Is a concern with assets approaching a million dollars. We do not knew Col. Allison." In the Ot-

A GOOD CHANCE FOR RETURNED SOLDIERS

News comes that there will be vacancies on a staff of a munition factory at Quebec, for from fifteen to twenty returned soldiers, and if there are any who would care to take up the work, they can hand in names at the office of the Patriotic Fund, Peterborough, and such will be promptly wired to headquarters of the Soldiers' Aid Commission. Application in due form will at once be forwarded to Quebec, in the interest of each applicant. Those who wish to apply will please act promptly. If friends of men returned, and who are out of the city temporarily, wish to make application for same, the names will be forwarded. But in any event prompt action is desirable.

STAR BOXERS ARE COMING FOR TUESDAY NIGHT'S BIG SMOKER

Toronto Sportsmen's Battalion to Send Six of Their Champions to Provide Feature Bouts---Singers Will Also Be Provided by the Sportsmen---To-day's Orders and General Military News.

The smoker under the auspices of the Sportsmen's Patriotic Association in the Armouries on Tuesday night next promises to be one of the most interesting events of its kind ever held here. The Sportsmen's Battalion of Toronto are sending down six of their championship boxers, making three first-class bouts, while there will be several other bouts by members of the 93rd Battalion. In addition, Sergt. Newman and Pte. Baker, of the Sportsmen's Battalion, will sing, and either Lt.-Col. Greer or Capt. Tom Flanagan, of the Sportsmen, will be on hand. The 93rd Battalion Band will provide music, and altogether it will be a big night. The admission will be 25c.

Mr. Dan O'Connell, of the local Sportsmen's Association, has received the following letter from Capt. Flanagan, Paymaster of the 180th Sportsmen:

"I will have much pleasure in sending you boxers and singers for your entertainment next Tuesday. In all probability we can send you sufficient boxers to furnish three good bouts, with Sergt. Newman and Pte. Baker to sing for you. We will likely send you Ptes. Janson and Feltmatte at 158 pounds, Ptes. Johnson and Picton at 147 pounds, and Ptes. Donovan and Christie at 125 pounds."

It might be mentioned that these boxers are taking part in the International Boxing Championships at the end of this week.

There are now 42 probationers in attendance at the Infantry School of Instruction. All are wearing the scarlet and blue uniforms with khaki greatcoats. No officer attending the school is permitted to wear any badge of rank whilst a probationer at the school.—Kingston Standard.

The Kingston Standard says:

On Sunday afternoon next, April 2, at 2.30 o'clock, the 146th battalion will commence battalion services in the Armouries. The service on Sunday will be conducted by Captain Campbell, chaplain of the 146th, and every Sunday until the Battalion goes into camp at Barriefield service will be held at the same hour.

The colours of the 80th Battalion have arrived in Belleville, and are on exhibition in one of its principal store windows. Both the King's colours, and the regimental colours have been purchased by members of the Ketcheson family in Hastings County, and will be presented to the battalion in the near future.

The Kingston Stadard says:

The Machine Gun School is on the third week of its course, and yesterday commenced work on the Colt machine gun. The school has four Colt guns in the city for instructional purposes, together with an equal number of Lewis-Savage guns. The school will close its present session on April 7th.

Ottawa, March 28.—It is understood that it is the policy of the Militia Department at the present time to authorize no more overseas battalions, except under exceptional circumstances until the present regiments are up to strength. The Military Department appreciates the many offers by individuals and districts to enlist, but under present conditions these will not likely be accepted.

Within a few weeks the regiments now being enlisted will be moved to the summer mobilization and training camps. It is very desirable that each of the present units being recruited should reach these camps in full strength so that drill, discipline and organization can be perfected without the handicap and delay of new and untrained drafts being added to complete establishment. Regiments that enter the training camps complete in numbers and organization will be ready for overseas service in a much shorter time than those that have to be brought up to strength after they have been training for weeks. For this reason and to prevent new organizations dividing the men available with organizations under way, no new battalions will be authorized until those now recruiting in the several districts are filled or until they have been moved from these districts to the summer training camps.

The Norwood Platoon is holding a dance in the Armouries in that place on Friday night of this week, 31st inst.

The Havelock Standard says:

Mr. Ed. DeCow, teacher at the Rush Point School, has enlisted in the Signal Section of the 93rd Battalion, at Peterborough, and on Friday night of last week his pupils and friends of that neighborhood assembled at the school house and presented him with a beautiful military wrist watch and the following address, read by Mr. Henry Melville.

Rush Point, March 24, 1916

Mr. Edward DeCow.

Dear Sir,—It is with feelings of the deepest regret, in a sense, that we have learned of your near departure from our midst after a year and a half of residence among us. As a teacher you have earned the respect of all the older people and the love and esteem of all your pupils. But we are indeed proud to know that you depart from us to don the King's uniform—the uniform that clothes the man standing for the loftiest principles of liberty and chivalry

TAX RATE OF 25.3 MILLS ADOPTED BY COUNCIL

BOMBADIER JACK O'DETTE

One of the Peterborough Boys who left with the 33rd Battery. He was a member of the Classic team in the City League last summer.

War Tax of One Mill and Levy For Garbage Collection Will Bring the Rate Up to Twenty-seven Mills—By-law Read a Third Time and Passed.

COUNCIL MEETING

This year's tax rate will be twenty-five and three tenths mills, plus one mill for war taxes and seven-tenths of a mill for garbage collection, making up all twenty-seven mills. A by-law fixing this rate was passed at last night's meeting of the City Council. His Worship Mayor Duffus sounded a note of warning in respect to the tax rate. He said that the estimates have been reduced to a much lower figure than was previously anticipated. Nothing but hard-headed financing would keep the rate down in years to come. Any improvements or extensions such as the construction of new sewers, sidewalks, etc., either this year or for some time to come, would increase the rate. There will be no debenture maturing of any account until 1924, so that there was little hope of a lower rate for some years to come. Mayor Duffus said he regretted that the impression had gone abroad that Peterborough's tax rate this year would be twenty-seven mills, whereas it was twenty-seven mills with the provincial war tax and garbage collection added. The rate as struck by the Council was twenty-five and three-tenths mills. This included the grants to the Patriotic and Belgian Relief funds.

The Band Grant.

"Hew to the line," quoted Ald. Dobbin when the question of an increased grant to the band of the 57th Regiment came up for discussion. A resolution endorsed by the Speakers' Patriotic League and recommending an increase in the grant, was read to the Council. Ald. Langford favoured an increase in the grant. He suggested that a part of the sum set aside for the footbridge over to East City be used for that purpose. Ald. Weir, representing East City objected to this, claiming that if the band was to give any concerts in the park, the residents of East City would have to have a bridge to get over and hear them. Both His Worship Mayor Duffus and Ald. Edgar expressed their willingness to help the band. It was finally decided to increase the grant from two hundred and fifty to four hundred and fifty dollars.

Ald. Dobbin thought the Council should be more consistent and not tamper with the estimates.

The question of supplying quarters for the Maple Leaf Band will be referred to the City Trust Commissioners. It was suggested that one of the rooms in the city buildings be secured at a nominal rental.

Help For the Farmer.

The Council will, submit to the Board of Trade, a communication received from the Minister of Agriculture asking the Council's endorsation of a "back to the land movement." The letter pointed out that there were a large number of retired farmers and others in every community who might be persuaded to emerge from their retirement long enough to assist the farmers to get in their spring crop and later on the harvest.

The Public Meeting.

No action was taken in connection with a request from Capt. J. H. Burnham, M.P., to the effect that the Council participate in the public meeting that is to be held on Friday evening and make it a civic affair. Ald. McIntyre contended that as Capt. Burnham had taken the initiative in the matter he should be prepared to see it through.

Ald. Langford swallowed his Adam's apple a couple of times and said the Council should make an effort to make the meeting a success. Many prominent men were slated to speak.

WM. HAMILTON SHOPS FLOODED BY AN ICE DAM

Machine, Boiler, Blacksmith Shops and Shell Department Inundated by Three Feet of Water

SWEPT THROUGH PREMISES

Three feet of water swept through the shops of the Wm. Hamilton Co., yesterday afternoon when huge slabs of ice jammed in the creek that passes beneath several of the company's buildings. The employes were driven from their benches, the night shift was turned back home but this morning work was resumed under decidedly dampened conditions. Blocks of ice, piled up on the forges of the blacksmith shop, indicate the depth of water that raced through the main part of the plant. Great double doors at the entrance of one shop were lightly brushed aside and the continuous procession of ice cakes was held up and settled in the yard and adjacent shops. It was one of the most serious inundations in the history of the Wm. Hamilton plant. The water varied in depth from one to three feet. By dynamiting the obstructing dam some of the company's employes relieved the situation in the evening, but there is a great quantity of ice from McDonnel street, north and a recurrence of yesterday's jam will be avoided only by constant vigilance. The Hamilton shops lost two hours in the afternoon and the entire night's work. A section of Reid Street was covered by two feet of water and the ice was collecting on all sides. The company's initiative in attacking the jam undoubtedly confined the trouble to fairly moderate limits. There is some question as to whether the city is liable and a little bill may be forthcoming as a result of the pile up.

SPRING FRESHETS BUSY YESTERDAY

Three feet of water, laden with ice, poured through the Wm. Hamilton shops yesterday. From four o'clock in the afternoon until this morning work was held up.

20,000 feet of lumber was swept into the river from the McDonald Estate yards when ice caught and jammed under the George street bridge. $400 worth floated away.

Workmen on the Park street sewer were driven out by a rush of surface water and operations have been suspended until the wave has passed.

Water found its way into the boiler room of the De Laval plant yesterday, but was not a serious situation.

If possible the home should be set slightly above the land immediately surrounding it, but not too high.

THURSDAY, MARCH 30, 1916

STIRRING AND SAD SIGHT.

The creek that passes through the city was, this morning, at once a stirring and sad sight. Its muddy, rushing waters, filling the full space to the brim of the retaining walls, was the stirring part of the sight. The sad side was represented by the moving mass of swirling waters, whose abundance spoke eloquently of the destructive work of the past. The rushing water from the melting snows which are swiftly rolling to the sea, and will in a few days leave a trickle behind, speak of the destruction of forest growth. Forest growth would have held the snows to be melted gradually, the resulting water to be seeped out gradually, helping to form a summer flow instead of a dry stream bed.

This condition has a direct bearing upon the meeting on Friday night to celebrate the Hydro-Electric purchase. This is all very well, but it is only surface treatment at the best and in contrast to the real demands of the situation at its highest value—deeds not words.

The value, that is the greatest amount of beneficial value, of the purchase of the power possibilities in the Trent watershed, depends upon permanence and adequate volume of water. This depends, in turn, upon an adequate plan of forest conservation in the area of the watershed and of an adequate plan of reforestry. As time goes on and the industrial possibilities of the country develop, we shall need more and more water power. Water power naturally depends upon water and we must provide for a larger or more evenly distributed flow. In the Trent watershed there are hundreds of thousands of acres that are not and never were fitted for farming. The dense forest that covered them has been cut away and immense expanses that were formerly reservoirs that held water and gave it out in steady flow during the summer, are as bare for water conservation as a barn floor in July. The same conditions in this regard, prevail as in the country from which the water flow of our city creek comes with such a rush in spring. With the difference that in the latter case, the bared lands are fertile and fruitful, while the other lands only provide facilities for slow starvation and destruction of water supply and water power and hydro electric energy.

True statesmanship applied to government, looks ahead, foresees and fore-provides. To keep up the water flow of the Trent watershed and the advantages dependent upon such a course, there must be applied a strict policy of forest conservation in the yet intact forest districts of the north, and there should be a vigorous reforesting policy applied to districts cut or burnt over, and foolishly devoted to unprofitable farming. Of course a policy like this needs time to have maturing results; but posterity is as much concerned as ourselves and more so, for posterity will make greater demands upon the water supply and water powers furnished by the Trent watershed. And it is possible that even in the time of some of us now living the demands upon the water supply of this district through industrial development, may be more than can be met. We must not look alone to power supplying energy for our own brief day. We must if we would truly develop our possibilities, provide for the future and the interests of this future are pretty closely involved in forest conservation and reforestry of large areas of the Trent Valley Watershed.

APPLY THE PROBE.

That seems to be the only thing to do in connection with the shell contract charges made in the House of Commons. It is possible that there may be not as much in these charges as asserted; but if they are a tenth part true they must be met and probed. Even a well-founded suspicion of wrong-doing and recklessness in the provision of ammunition and consequent waste of money involving military inefficiency, is a gross wrong to the country and hostile to the interests of Canadian success in providing men for military service. The charges are no party affair; they have so much texture, create so much uneasiness, that on the authority of the Toronto World, a government supporter, twenty members of the Conservative parliamentary party are "in a state of more or less open revolt against the government." Mr. Andrew Broder, the veteran and staunchly Conservative member for Dundas, who has been heard in Peterborough, is reported as saying to Sir Robert Borden, that if an investigation is not granted into the shell committee charges, he will vote against him. Premier Borden has only to summon the courage to order an investigation, to have the situation greatly eased; the suspicion of weakness and ineffective leadership in his own case somewhat lessened, and the air of the suspicion that now fills the country clarified. This state of suspicion left undealt with is hostile to the highest interests of Canada in prosecuting her share of the war. Apply the probe.

Beck and Hydro Forced to Fight U.S. Octopus and C.N.P.

The Toronto Telegram, whose Conservatism is above suspicion, has the following in regard to the idea that "Beck and Hydro" have to fight the American railway octopus as well as Canadian Northern. It says:

For the benefit of the stranger from Mars it may be repeated that the situation was simply this: The Canadian Northern was seeking the renewal of a couple of charters for lines in Ontario between Toronto Niagara and London. These charters have been held for seventeen years. They have done no more for the development of Ontario than market gardens, butchered into town lots and held as real estate speculations, have done for the upbuilding of Toronto. Along comes the Hydro-Electric Commission with a bone-fide scheme of immediate development of the undeveloped and stagnating opportunities by means of Hydro-Electric radial railways. Presto! The C.N.R. becomes frantically interested in the development of Western Ontario again. The C.N.R. discovers that these paper railways, covered with the fungus of seventeen years' delay, are "essential links" in a system "from tidewater to tidewater." The C.N.R. is filled with holy zeal to build these lines—build them at once. Hence the application for the renewal of the charters. Reasons are not hard to find. If the C.N.R. ever builds it will be on public money. The lines are partly covered by the $45,000,000 loan pried out of the Dominion in 1914. The Dominion will be touched for the "usual subsidy" of $80,000 a mile, and bond guarantees. Thus, when the lines are built the Hydro radial proposition will have to buy off that competition or meet it. If the competition is met, and the new lines are not profitable—well, they haven't cost the C.N.R. much except thought. The public will have furnished the money and the C.N.R. the experience. On the other hand, if the competition is bought out or bought off, the money goes to C.N.R. magnates, Mackenzie and Mann—and the public gets the experience.

Sir Adam Beck, head of the Hydro, yanked aside still another curtain, and revealed still another compartment in the C.N.R. cabinet of mysteries. The charters were being renewed, he declared, for the purpose of negotiating with the Delaware and Lackawanna Railway for an entrance into Canada. The tentacles of this U. S. octopus have been feeling blindly and in vain for entrance into Canada at three strategic points—St Catharines, Hamilton and Toronto. These cities have shown their doors to the invader and barred them tight. But the CANADIAN Northern Railway's triumph in the Railway Committee of the CANADIAN House of Commons—you can wave the flag all you like and sing O Canada till the cows come home—this great triumph for a Canadian institution shows, in the cold grey light of Sir Adam Beck's analysis, merely as a strategic gain for the great American railway octopus.

Maybe it was this which justified Sir Adam in saying:

"This is a death blow to the Hydro if you renew this charter. The line will be rendered non-remunerative, or not sufficiently remunerative to justify going on with it."

Pretty strong words, and perhaps Sir Adam spoke in his haste, like David did when he said all men were liars. Still, there is nothing to indicate that David had to repent at leisure for this expression. Sir Adam later described the prospective action as a "black eye to the Hydro," which is less serious. Willard may have got a black eye or two—certainly not more—last Saturday night, but he is alive, and it's Moran that's doing the kicking.

If the Hydro got its 'death blow' at the Railway Committee yesterday it is likely to prove a very lively corpse. It will go on. It will possibly beat the C.N.R. branch of the D. and L. to a frazzle. When it does the country will have another financial cripple to keep, that's all. Ottawa is a city of charities.

SPECIAL DEPARTMENTAL REGULATIONS

Providing Facilities For the Enlistment of Young Men Attending the High and Continuation Schools and Collegiate Institutes

In Circular 11 of January last, the Department offers inducements to young men attending the High and Continuation schools and the Collegiate Institutes and the Normal schools and Faculties of Education to enlist for overseas service during the present war; but, as at that date the courses for the Departmental certificates had not been covered, no certificates could be granted on the report of the teachers. By Easter, however the academic courses are usually completed except for the review. The Department will, accordingly, exempt for such overseas service young men who are preparing in the High and Continuation Schools and the Collegiate Institutes for the examinations of next June for admission to the Normal Schools and the Faculties of Education (not including the University Matriculation examinations), from said examinations and will grant them the certificates based thereon, on the following conditions.

1.—(1) The school the candidate is attending shall have been approved for the aforesaid purpose by the Inspector concerned.

(2) Schools whose staffs, organization, and provision for teaching Science and Lower School Art have already been approved for 1916 shall be recognized as so approved.

(3) (a) The Principals of the schools which have not been inspected during the current school year, but which have candidates desiring to qualify under the Regulations herein provided shall, on receipt of this circular, notify to such effect the High or Continuation School Inspector concerned.

(b) On receipt of said notification, the Inspector shall inspect the school before April 20th, and, failing such inspection, he shall, make by correspondence such investigation of the condition of the school as may enable him to report for or against its approval for the aforesaid purpose.

2.—(1) The candidate shall have obtained a certificate from the Principal of the school, if so approved, that he has been in regular attendance up to April 20th, or up to the date of his enlistment thereafter, and that in the judgment of the members of the staff engaged in his preparation for examination, said candidate is qualified to receive the Departmental certificate for which he has been preparing.

The Minister recommends the staff to deal as liberally as practicable with the claims of each candidate.

(2) The form of the Principal's certificate will be supplied to each Principal on application of the Deputy Minister.

3.—The candidate shall enlist for overseas service not later than May 12th.

4. A candidate for a certificate under the aforesaid provisions shall make application to the Deputy Minister, submitting therewith the Principal's certificate and evidence of enlistment.

Is Premier Hearst Anti-Hydro? Toronto Telegram Says He Is

The Toronto Telegram devotes a full page of yesterday's issue to a demonstration of its indignation and disgust over the triumphs of Mackenzie and Mann in procuring at the hands of the Railway committee at Ottawa a renewal of charters that have been held seventeen years and not acted upon, and the resultant defeat of Hydro-Radial Railway interests—an action which Sir Adam Beck describes as a "death blow to the Hydro."

"The more astute observers declare that the C.N.R. bills were merely a pretext for a show of strength against Sir Adam Beck on the part of the anti-Beck factions in the Hearst Government and the Borden Government which had effected a junction."

"Is Premier Hearst of Ontario plotting to destroy Sir Adam Beck?" asked an Ottawa observer, to whom Ontario politics are not an open book. "If not, then why was Ontario's Minister of Power left to struggle alone with the anti-public ownership forces in the Railway committee, like Paul with the beasts at Ephesus?

"Sir Adam Beck claimed, in the Railway committee, to represent the Province of Ontario, the Government of Ontario. When he made that claim he must have done so in good faith. But what, in the three hearings these C.N.R. bills have had, has the Ontario government done to strengthen Sir Adam Beck's hands, to prove his claim that he spoke for anyone but himself? One three-minute speech by Ed. Bayly, K.C., from the Ontario Attorney General's Dept., and a telegram stating that R. J. Codee had been retained to represent the department, was the only official assistance I recollect Sir Adam receiving.

"That Hon. Frank Cochrane is the head and front of an anti-Beck movement has long been a matter of gossip.

"That he has assistance in his warfare from the jealousy of Premier Hearst is a matter of rumour; if untrue, unjust to Ontario's Prime Minister—but it is persistent.

"That the alleged Hearst hostility is shared or inspired by Hon G. Howard Ferguson and Hon. T. W. McGarry is another matter of supposition— unestablished as yet, although yesterday's developments went some way to confirm it. There was certainly no evidence of assistance to the Hydro or Sir Adam Beck from Hon. G. Howard Ferguson."

The Telegram proceeds to give "samples of the abuse which aroused no protest from the Hearst Government," "Ontario's Minister of Power had to take it all without one word of aid, succor or comfort from the Government he had built up and kept built up in his own province." The Telegram gives pictures of five Cabinet Ministers, Premier Hearst, Hon. Howard Ferguson, Hon. T. W. McGarry, on. Frank Cochrane, Hon. J. D. Reid, under the big heading, "Is this the anti-Hydro combination from the Hearst and Borden Governments."

CITIZENS OF BERLIN, KAN., WANT NAME CHANGED

The citizens of Berlin, Kansas, a little town in Bourbon County, want to change the name of their town. They asked W. E. Brooks, chairman of the board of control, how it could be done.

The citizens assert that there is not a person in the townsite, or even close to it, who is in sympathy with the German cause, and the name of the town is the cause of many jibes at the inhabitants by travelling men who "make" the town.

Berlin People Regard Verdun Fight as of Decisive Importance.

London, March 29. — Madge Lessing, an English actress, who has returned to London after spending nine weeks in Berlin,, told of her impressions of the conditions there.

"London reminds me of Berlin as far as its external gayety and apparently abundant prosperity is concerned," she said, "only I find a lot more butter on my plate here. If Berlin is a fair criterion there is no such thing as the pinch of war in Germany. There are plenty of able-bodied men about and more money—all paper, of course—in circulation than ever."

Asked about Verdun she said:

"In Berlin they know that the losses are frightful, but they hope to break through. Many people frankly regard the battle as of decisive importance in the result of the war. I think that there is far less general confidence of victory than a year ago."

THE WORLD OF SPORT

THE CITY LEAGUE CHAMPIONS HONOURED

Clarke-Graham Cup Presented to Pennants at an Enjoyable Banquet---City Leaguers Who Are Now in Khaki Were Not Forgotten By Those Around the Festive Board.

The Pennants, champions of the City Hockey League, were the guests of honour at a most enjoyable banquet tendered them by the City League officials and teams at Hooper's last night. During the evening the Clark-Graham Cup, emblematic of the City League championship, was presented to the victorious Murray street aggregation, who were warmly congratulated on all sides for their clever win.

Mr. R. M. Glover, president of the City League, presided, and gathered around the festive board were the League officials, the members of the champion Pennants and representatives of the other three City League teams.

After an appetizing and well served repast had been done ample justice to, a short toast list was honoured.

The toast to the King was loyally marked with the singing of the National Anthem.

The toast to the "Guests of the Evening," the champion Pennants, was neatly proposed by Mr. Frank N. Hourigan of the Americans, who congratulated the winners on their success and paid a tribute to the sportsmanlike conduct in the past season.

The singing of "For They Are Jolly Good Fellows" marked the honouring of the toast.

Mr Hughson Johnstone, president of the Pennants, made a witty speech in reply, telling a number of anecdotes that caused much merriment. Mr. Johnstone thanked the City League for the enjoyable banquet and expressed his appreciation of the business-like and sportsmanlike manner in which the City League had been conducted.

Mr. R. M. Glover presented the Clark-Graham Cup in the unavoidable absence of Mr. C. G. Graham one of the donors. In doing so he paid a warm tribute to Messrs. Clarke and Graham, both of whom had done a great deal for amateur sport in Peterborough. Mr. Glover pointed out the great benefits that were to be derived from participation in clean, amateur sport and emphatically declared that he would not exchange his experiences in the world of athletics for a good many dollars.

Mr. B. Mulhern, captain of the Pennants accepted the cup in a neat speech in which he expressed the thanks of the victors to the League for the enjoyable banquet.

The former City Leaguers who are now fighting for the empire were not forgotten. Mr. Dryden, secretary of the League, proposed the health of "City Leaguers in Khaki." In doing so he said that this was perhaps the main toast of the evening and he could hardly find words to express his appreciation of those boys who were now driving the puck at the Kaiser. They were fighting not ony for the Empire but for something even greater, the protection of the principles of Christianity.

Lance Corp. Walter Miller of the 93rd Battalion, himself a City League star with the old Charlotte street team, and this year coach of the champion Pennants, made an appropriate reply on behalf of the men in khaki.

The health of the City Hockey League was proposed by Mr. E. N. McWilliams, who referred to the benefit of hockey generally that grew out of such anorganization. Mr. McWilliams told some reminiscences of the City League a few years ago and referred to the Charlotte street team which he had the honour to manage.

The toast was replied to by Mr. F. D Craig, who referred to the number of City Leaguers and hockey players generally who were now fighting for the Empire. He suggested that the age limit next year be placed below the minimum of military service, remarking that if the war continued until next year the public generally would not look with much favour upon men of military age engaged in hockey.

Mr. Tom Shore proposed the health of Mr. R. M. Glover, the League president, which was enthusiastically hoooured. Mr. Glover made an appropriate reply.

The banquet was brought to a close with the singing of the National Anthem.

Mr. Jas. A. Browne added considerably to the enjoyment of the evening by contributing several most enjoyable solos.

SPORTING COMMENT

BROKE AND WITHOUT A COUNT

England is the most hospitable country on the map. She has proved it time and again by affording refuge to deposed monarchs, wild-eyed anarchists and bloody-handed nihilists. There are limits to John Bull's generosity th anch matters, however, and it seems that John's stomach has been turned by Jack Johnson. The ex-king of the heavyweights was informed that England could manage to get along without him. "Here's your hat" said J. Bull, politely. "What's your hurry? There's the door. Must you go? Don't forget your wife." And so Jack went away from there, bound, it is said, for South America by way of Spain.

Jack will be thirty-eight years old to-morrow, and he was born in Galveston, Tex., on March 31, 1878. In spite of his vain boastings to English newspaper scribes, to whom he recently expressed the belief that he was able to lick any man breathing, Johnson is surely through as a boxer. According to the English papers, Jack didn't make any big hit as an actor-man, and added little to his pile by that means. The money he received from his battle with Willard in Havana has practically vanished, and the big smoke is said to be on the verge of that condition popularly described as being "broke". When at last he reaches that condition, there will be a great scattering of the hangers-on who have battened on Jack's past prosperity, and the big black will find himself friendless and alone. It will only be a case of history repeating itself, for scores of fighters, white as well as black, have traveled that route. It is a well-beaten trial, but it is no longer popular with the majority of the top-notch pugilists.

Johnson is an example of too much prosperity. At the beginning of his career Jack was an affable, polite, modest coon, and his famed golden smile had real friendliness in it. Like so many of his race he was a child in temperament. Money made him a spoiled child. He was afflicted with an exaggerated ego, and came to believe that his money and his position as champion gave him a right to do as he pleased. The strong arm of the law grabbed him and gave him a rude awakening. An exile from his native land, he has since been a wanderer over the earth, hustled about from pillar to post.

Johnson insisted in England that he laid down to Willard. "They promised me that if I would consent to be defeated by Willard I would be permitted to return to the United States and would enjoy the freedom any other man would. I would be allowed to see my old mother, and I would have my motor cars and other property restored to me. It sounded very attractive, and I fell for it, but they played the double-cross on me."

That is a very entertaining sort of yarn, but if Jack was faking in Havana he was a far better actor than he has proved himself to be on the stage. Jack has nothing to lose by spinning such a yarn, and he may find a few people who will believe it. Jack has one consolation, and that is that there are mighty few things he could say or do that would besmirch his reputation.

There isn't any doubt, however, that Jack is very much in earnest when he gives expression to his longing to return to the United States. Few people have sympathies broad enough to include Jack Johnson. He is a man without a country, and doubtless he deserves his fate. Since his exile, however, Johnson has sounded one note of deep sincerity which is to his credit—his love and longing for his "old mammy." The heart of the black outcast still beats true to that universal instinct of humanity which enshrines the name of "mother" in the holy of holies.

"LIGHTS OUT" IN RINK "FALL IN" HAS SOUNDED

President Jas. T. Sutherland of the O.H.A. Makes Stirring Appeal to the Hockey Players of Ontario

Kingston, March 29, 1916.

To the Hockeyists of Ontario.

At New Year's I had the privilege of addressing a few words to you through the medium of the press, relative to the fact that in the present great national crisis the necessity of every young man coming forward and offering his services in defence of the Empire has daily become more and more apparent.

At that time I stated that "in a few weeks the hockey season would be over, and in my opinion every hockeyist should then exchange the puck and stick for a rifle and bayonet."

The Ontario Hockey Association clubs have responded nobly to the call. It is estimated that we have some 750 players and club members in khaki. Certainly a magnificent showing and one that no other athletic association in Canada can hope to equal; and yet the call is for more men, and still more men.

In this the greatest and most critical period in the history of our race I am quite sure the members of our association who have not as yet offered themselves will at once see the urgent necessity of doing so and thus swelling the number of O.H.A men who are prepared to aid our common cause.

With 750 men in khaki, how easy it should be to make the figure read 1,000, and have it known throughout the world that the Ontario Hockey Association has actually contributed a "whole battalion of athletes" to the cause of liberty and justice.

For my part I can see no reason why our association should not issue a special "badge of honor" to our members who have enlisted in the Empire's defence, if for no other purpose than to show that we appreciate the great sacrifices these men are prepared to make for "King and Country."

The final gong has sounded on the most successful season our association has ever had, let every man now determine to play the great game that is going on across the water. By coming forward at once we may all succeed in getting "this affair" cleaned up before the referee's whistle sounds for the opening of next season. It's worth trying for, boys!

"Lights out" in the rinks. The "Fall In" has sounded.

Jas. T. Sutherland, Captain.
Quartermaster, 148 Overseas Bn.
President O. H. A.

Brig. Gen. John J. Pershing.— In command of United States forces who have invaded Mexico in pursuit of Villa. His command is the 8th Brigade.

Cup Won By Mr. McKone

The large silver cup presented to the St. Matthews' Bowling Club of Toronto, for annual competition, is now on exhibition in the window of the Nugent Drug Co. It was won last season by Mr. J. A. McKone, Principal of the Peterborough Business College, who was then residing in Toronto, and who has the Cup in his possession till the end of the season, when the 1916 champion will claim it. The cup is very large and valued at over $150.00.

tawa despatches Col. Allison was mentioned as agent through whom the fuse contracts were let at exorbitant prices.

AN INVESTIGATION.

OTTAWA, March 30.—It is understood that at a meeting of the cabinet held this morning it was decided to grant an investigation into the fuse contracts let in the United States. Sir Robert Borden is expected to make an announcement to that effect this afternoon. He will also communicate to the House a statement from Gen. Hughes.

A social evening at the Curling Rink to-night will wind up the season's proceedings. All the members are requested to attend and to help make the evening a pleasant closing of the winter's affairs.

RINK WILL CLOSE TO CURLERS TO-MORROW

Curlers are reminded that the rink will be closed after to-morrow, and they are asked to get their utensils coals and belongings to-night or on Friday.

Meeting of the Board of Trade

Board Will Deal With a Number of Matters of Local Importance —Officers to Be Elected

The annual meeting of the Peterborough Board of Trade will be held this evening in the Council Chamber. A number of matters of local importance will be dealt with, including the recent purchase by the Government of the Trent water powers at a cost of eight million dollars. The Board will also deal with a communication received from the City Council relative to the employment of retired farmers and others on the farms during the coming harvest. Officers for the ensuing year will be elected. The meeting has been called for eight o'clock sharp.

FORGOT HER NEW NAME

And Bride's Secret Wedding is Betrayed to Hotel Clerk.

If the wife of T. M. Rose of Lexington, Ky., had not forgot at the Palace Hotel in Cincinnati and registered under her maiden name, Nora Higgins, the story of the couple's secret marriage in Georgetown, Ky., would not have come to light.

Rose and his wife walked into the hotel at 11 o'clock. He registered and handed the pen to his wife. She wrote her maiden name on the same line.

When C. E. Bricken, clerk, looked at the register he could not believe his eyes. He questioned Rose, who after looking in every pocket, finally produced the marriage license.

The couple was then assigned to a room, and the name on the register changed to 'T. M. Rose and wife.'

Hon. J. D. Reid's Hostility To Hydro-Radial Railways

As Pictured By That Staunch Conservative Journal, The Telegram

Yesterday the Railway Committee at Ottawa extended the life—renewed—a couple of Canadian Northern Railway charters, which have been held unused for seventeen years—an action Hon. Adam Beck describes as a "death blow" to Hydro. The sudden zeal for the renewal of these charters is thus explained by the Conservative Toronto Telegram:

"Along comes the Hydro-Electric Commission with a bona-fide scheme of immediate development of the undeveloped and stagnating opportunities by Hydro-Electric radial railways. Presto! the Canadian Northern becomes frantically interested in the developmnet of Western Ontario again."

In regard to the renewal of these anti-Hydro charters, which will be competing lines with Hydro-Radials, Sir Adam Beck, the foster father of Hydro-Electric, said before the Railway Committee:

"This is a death blow to the Hydro if you renew this charter. The line will be rendered unremunerative, or not sufficiently remunerative to justify going on with it."

The Telegram in its full-page spread attributes a good deal of responsibility for this "death blow" to "Hon. J. D. Reid, acting (and acting badly) Minister of Railways and Canals"; and devotes a generous share of its "write up" to this gentleman. Under present circumstances—in view of Hon. Mr. Reid being announced to speak in Peterborough to-morrow night at the meeting to celebrate the triumph of Hydro and Hydro Radial interests, The Telegram's statements may be reproduced, as follows:

How Acting Minister of Railways Shackled Hydro to Department

The case for the C.N.R. could not have been pleaded better by Gerard Ruel, K.C., or Vice-President D. B. Hanna, than it was by Hon. J. D. Reid, Acting Minister of Railways and Canals. "Sir Adam Beck," he said, "wanted the portion of the bill regarding the line between Port Colborne and Fort Erie withdrawn. The C.N.R. had agreed to that, but Sir Adam was not satisfied. He wanted the bill to go through with a clause providing either that no obligations should be incurred nor action taken without first securing the approval of the Dominion Railway Commission or, in alternative, that nothing should be done until permission to proceed was given by an order in Council.

"It was impossible for the railway to accept these terms," said Hon. Dr. Reid, "on acount of the distance they had already proceeded towards financing the lines. Bonds to the amount of $1,600,000 had been placed for the mileage already built. The act of 1914, whereby we advanced the Niagara, St. Catharines and Toronto line as security for the loan, but not the Toronto, Niagara and Western. If the Government desires the C. N. R. is willing to make that line, too, a part of the 1914 bill. The C. N. R. is willing to give up the Fort Erie-Port Colborne section as desired by Sir Adam Beck, but not the Toronto-Niagara Falls section. It is absolutely necessary for their through business."

No one word of argument did Hon. Dr. Reid offer against Sir Adam Beck's suggestion that if the bills went through action should be dependent upon the approval of the Dominion Railway Board, or the Governor-General-in-Council. THAT would have given Ontario and the Hydro a chance to make out a case. Instead, Hon. Dr. Reid pointed to a clause in the railway act making it necessary to go to the Minister of Railways and Canals for approval before commencing operations.

This threw the whole affair into his own hands — so long at least as he continues to be Acting Minister of Railways and Canals —and he made it perfectly plain he was going to cling to this power to the last gasp.

"It is clear," said he, "there will have to be another railway from Toronto to Niagara. Let this bill go through. Then come to the Minister." Which would be himself. "If the C. N. R. builds," he went on, "the Minister can insist that the Hydro shall have running rights. I'll guarantee that."

Sir Adam Beck —"What if we build? They've already refused us running rights."

Hon. Dr. Reid —"They will come before the Minister (meaning himself) and he will decide whether he is going to allow the C. N. R. or the Hydro to build. If he decides the Hydro, the latter will give the C. N. R. running rights. If he decides the C. N. R., the latter will give the Hydro running rights. The responsibility as to which shall build will depend upon the information submitted to the Minister.

All of which simply meant delivering Sir Adam Beck and the whole Hydro-Electric enterprise into the hands of Hon. Frank Cochrane or his understudy, Hon. Reid.

Hydro's Cry For Help, and How Minister Answered

Hon. J. D. Reid was much more active indeed than Saul of Tarsus upon that occasion. Just contrast these statements and proposals and the answers to them. They were not made in juxtaposition, as here given. They were scattered through two hours of discussion —but they are not divorced from their meaning as given here.

Sir Adam Beck—"This is a death blow to the Hydro if you renew this charter.

Hon. J. D. Reid—"It is clear there will have to be another railway from Toronto to Niagara. Let this bill go through."

Sir Adam Beck's demands: (1) Pass bill subject to Dominion Railway Board's authorization.
(2) Pass bill subject to order-in-council.
(3) Eliminate Toronto-Niagara section.

Hon. J. D. Reid's answer: It is impossible for the railway to accept these terms.

Let this bill go through; then come to the Minister (himself or the Hon. Frank Cochrane) to decide which shall build and which shall have running rights.

That looks pretty much like warfare and war to the bitter end, on a man who declares the movement for which the stands is menaced by a death blow.

Victory C. N. R. Scored Was Really Very Easily Won

Hon. J. D. Reid is not the attorney of the C.N.R. He was working yesterday nominally for the Dominion Government in which he holds the post of Acting Minister of Railways and Canals. Possibly he was actually working for the furtherance of a Hearst-Cochrane Ferguson combination in warfare upon Sir Adam Beck. His speech and attitude were the last shot needed to crumple up the bulwarks of public ownership. They announced as plain as print in letters six feet high:

THE MINISTER WANTS THESE BILLS TO CARRY.

It was a startling sample confirmation of the diagnosis offered by the deputation member weeks ago. It was the overnment cue—for Hon. Dr. Reid addressed the committee as Minister (acting, and acting badly) of Railways and Canals. Moreover, it released the tide of Grit votes which had been hitherto somewhat doubtful as to how it should flow. If the Dominion Government was going against Beck and the Hydro policy, the biggest vote getter the Ontario overnment had, why should the Grits refrain from jumping on the Hydro?

"The Minister Wants These Bills to Carry"

Weeks ago a member of the Toronto deputation opposing the C.N.R. bills said, before one word had been spoken publicly on the subject:

"These bills will carry. I don't know what the vote will be, but the Minister wants these bills to carry."

"The Minister" was the Hon. Frank Cochrane, Minister of Railways, and Canals. He was sick then. He is sick yet. Hon. J. D. Reid is taking his place.

That Hon. Frank Cochrane is the head and front of an anti-Beck movement has long been a matter of gossip.

That he has assistance in his warfare from the jealousy of Premier Hearst is a matter of rumour; if untrue, unjust to Ontario's Prime Minister—but is persistent.

That he has an active lieutenant in his warfare in the person of his acting minster, Hon. J. D. Reid, begins to look probable.

That the alleged Hearst hostility is shared or inspired by Hon. G. Howard Ferguson and Hon. T. W. McGarry is another matter of supposition —unestablished as yet, although yesterday's developments went some way to confirm it. There was certainly no evidence of assistance to the Hydro or Sir Adam Beck from Hon. G. Howard Ferguson.

Yesterday's developments were a prima facie confirmation of a supposed situation which had been shaping itself for some time.

Hon. J. D. Reid and His Toronto Suit of Clothes

Three weeks ago, when it became evident that Sir Adam Beck meant F-I-G-H-T on the C.N.R. bills —because renewing the old charters meant duplicating the Hydro-Radial lines—when this became plain, Hon. J. D. Reid hied him to Toronto.

Had his visit anything to do with the C.N.R.'s bills? he was asked.

Certainly not, was the answer. As a matter of fact, he just ran up to get measured for a suit of clothes. (Here insert gnashing of teeth rom Sparks street, Ottawa)

Would he consult with Hon. Frank Cochrane while here?

He would certainly not miss the opportunity o saying a cheering word to his dear friend. But consult with him, in his invalid condition, on matters relating to the department? He would not think of doing so.

Back to Ottawa went the Hon. J. D. whether he consulted Hon. Frank Cochrane about Sir Adam Beck or not, yesterday saw a tremendous organised onslaught upon Sir Alam Beck and the Hydro, with Hon. J. D. Reid quite as active as the gentleman who held the clothes of those who stoned Stephen.

CRITICIZED THE OFFICERS.

KINGSTON, March 29.—Officers of the 146th Overseas Battalion were severly criticised by Ensign Smith at a meeting of the Salvation Army in the Citadel on Sunday, over the fact that the battalion band, which for the most part is composed of Salvation Army men, was used on Saturday night to parade Princess street to advertise an assault-at-arms in the city hall.

HOW GERMANY IS OCCUPIED..

Some part of the territory of France is occupied, to be sure, but von Bethmann Hollweg seems to forget that the whole of Germany is occupied. Not by an enemy, her great military effectiveness has prevented that. But in every part of the Empire there is privation, denial, want, not merely of comforts, those may be dispensed with, but of the common and necessary things of life. Actual distress may not as yet be evident, but it is in men's thoughts as a thing foreseen. Throughout the Empire there is mourning; it is a land of deep mourning for the unnumbered dead whom neither victory nor anything else could restore to friends and families, and there is the horror and the dread, everywhere present, of new afflictions. There is deep anxiety, too, about the finances of the Empire. Plausible talk and the assurances continually given to the German people cannot conceal the disorder and the increasing strain. Privation, deep sorrow that can never be forgotten or aided, but is life-long, and financial trouble always impending—these are enemies more relentless than those who come with arms in hand, they are even harder to get rid of.—New York Times.

Y. M. C. A. National Council To Devote $200,000 To Military Work

General Secretary Meserve returned from Toronto Wednesday evening, having represented the local Association in a one day's conference in connection with the military work of the Y.M.C.A. While in Toronto Mr Meserve also represented the local Association at the convention of the Canadian Charities and Correction in the City Hall, and was registered delegate at the convention of the Dominion Alliance, held in Massey Hall. These three conferences were of the utmost importance as the most live topics of the day were up for consideration. The Y.M.C.A. conference was held Tuesday at the West End Branch and at the Military department at Exhibition camp, and had for its purpose the outlining of the year's work in connection with our soldiers overseas and in the Dominion.

The Y.M.C.A. National Council has lately adopted a budget of $250,000, $200,000 of which is to be devoted to military work among soldiers. The Canadian National Council of the Y.M.C.A. is now responsible for all Association work done among soldiers from Canada at the front, the Y.M.C.A. National Council of England being responsible only for British soldiers. Six Y.M.C.A. secretaries are to be provided for each military division, where suitable quarters will be erected at convenient points among troops. This is the work that has recently been commended so heartily by the Duke of Connaught and leading business and philanthropic men throughout the world. It is not impossible that a military secretary will be stationed in Peterborough to get in touch with the 93rd, provided this unit remains in Peterborough long enough to warrant same. The local Association is pleased to state that the average daily attendance of soldiers at its building is more than 130.

The Association is well equipped for service at the Exhibition Camp Toronto, having expended $3,500 in fitting up the space under the Grand Stand, where they have a dining-room, serving excellent meals at 20c, each, a canteen, where confectionery and soft drinks are served, a barber shop, shoe shine, watch and shoe repairing, savings bank, library, club rooms for instruction in French, correspondence and reading facilities and an auditorium accommodating about 800 men, where moving pictures and religious services are held every night. The leading ladies of the city have charge of the dining-room, and in addition to these voluntary workers there are 28 employees in connection with the plant.

Work is being conducted along similar lines at many other military points and this is a type of the work that is being conducted on the other side of the water even under the fire of the big guns in France.

The work of the National Council has been reorganised so that Mr. C. W. Bishop, the National Secretary will hereafter give his full time to military work. J. M. Laing, a former Peterborough young man who is well known here, is now associated with the National Council in a financial capacity.

While the main strength of the Y. M.C.A. is to be devoted to military work during the coming year still advanced steps are being taken in work among boys and Collegiate members. More than forty per cent. of the Y. M.C.A. members of Canada have enlisted for active service, so the great opportunity of the Association is to follow these soldiers to the front and specialize in work for the younger boys at home. The opportunity for work is so stupendous and far reaching that we trust the efforts of the Y.M.C.A. will receive the prayers and support of every person. A special card with prayer subjects has been printed and may be had at the office of the local Association and any contributions to the military work of the Association will be gratefully acknowledged by the Peterborough Secretary.

Many unsolicited contributions, ranging from $10 to $1,000 have been received for the Y.M.C.A. work among soldiers. The Oshawa City Council has made a grant of $500 to the work, and have given their local Association 75 per cent. off their water bills in view of the fact that the soldiers have the use of the baths.

McDonald Estate Loses 20,000 Feet of Lumber in the Creek

VALUED AT $400

The same creek, with its burden of ice, that poured through the Wm Hamilton Company's shops yesterday afternoon, created more trouble when it piled up a barrier beneath the George Street bridge, forming an effective dam that raised the water until it floated several piles of lumber belonging to the McDonald Estate, into the stream, and finally out into the river, when the obstruction was finally moved by the sheer weight hurled against it.

It is estimated that 20,000 feet worth $400 were lost from the lumber yard, but this morning the city had men engaged in recovering as much of it as possible.

A short time ago, it was learned Mr. John Duignan drew the attention of the Board of Works to the necessity of keeping the channel clear at this month of the creek, and of removing the ice from the short stretch of water between the bridge on George street and that on Townsend Street. But City Engineer Parsons felt it would be a hazardous undertaking to send men out on that ice. Last night's jam is said to be a result. As soon as the blockade was formed beneath the George Street bridge, the creek, which has recently swollen to a torrent, backed up, and began to overflow the crib at its mouth, and was soon washing the lumber in the yard nearby. In fact a number of piles were close to the edge of the stream. Some of these were floated from their foundation and carried into the stream.

Finally the jam swept itself into the river and with it went the lumber, although much of it is believed to be recoverable. A lot of it is splintered and smashed by the crush of ice.

It is almost a safe bet that the city will receive a lawyer's letter in the near future calling attention to the McDonald Estate's loss.

Some of the ballot boxes used in the recent Vancouver provincial elections had handles made in Germany. Investigation showed the handles came from ante-bellum stock of a local supply house. New handles, made in Canada, will be provided for the next election.

MILITARY NEWS

and we pray and trust that you will return from the field of war uninjured, and with a full consciousness that you have done your duty to your God and to your country. In conclusion we ask you to accept this wrist watch as a slight evidence of our regard for you in this School Section.

Mr. DeCow replied in appropriate words, expressing his appreciation of the honour done him and his regret upon leaving so many kind and loyal friends.

KINGSTON WILL GARRISON, March 29.—Every provision is being made for a big camp at Barriefield for the summer, and it now looks as though the prediction of The Standard will be fulfilled and ten thousand men in khaki will occupy the heights for a period of training for overseas service. It is now understood that the camp buildings will hardly be ready for use, but the local militia authorities are confident that the temporary buildings will be ready enough for all the traffic that can possibly pass over it for the summer months. A local contractor, who knows what he is talking about, assured The Standard yesterday that the temporary bridge was a strong and substantial structure and the only thing that would need strengthening would be the hand rails, which would be an easy matter. With plans for new buildings in progress, and the military authorities active in all preparation, Kingston can rely on a very big and important camp. The camp staff has not yet been appointed, but there will be little if any change from the efficient staff of last year.

The 80th Battalion, of Belleville has been warned to be ready for overseas. Lieut.-Col. Ketcheson has an battalion that is fit for active service at any moment, and the order to prepare for the first stage of the journey to the front will be a pleasant one to officers and men. The order does not necessarily mean that the 80th will proceed overseas at once, but it does mean that they are liable to call at any moment.

It has been definitely settled that all field artillery will go to Petawawa for training next summer. The big north camp contains facilities for artillery shooting, which is so essential if men are to be thoroughly trained for effective overseas service.

The work of obtaining recruits is not always a pleasant task and the soldiers who are doing this work meet with many disappointments besides, in many cases, being received in such a way as would lead one to believe that they were doing something criminal instead of performing their duty. For instance, recently a young man joined the 93rd Battalion and gave up a good position in doing so. In his place was employed a young man who is physically fit in every respect, (although the position could have been filled by one who is not), and when the recently enlisted recruit interviewed this young man and tried to persuade him to don the khaki, received the answer that "he would see him in hell first."

The Recruiting League decided this morning to open a Registration Bureau for the purpose of assisting any man who has offered his services to his country and cannot secure as good a position as possible in keeping with his ability. Will all such men call at the Recruiting Rooms, on Simcoe Street, and sign the Register as soon as possible in order to assist in this commendable scheme.

A REGIMENT OF REDHEADS.

Give a regiment an inspiring name and it charges on the double-quick to glory. The Death's Head Hussars, the Life Guards, the Black Watch, the Rough Riders—one's blood tingles to such names as to a bugle call. Who wouldn't fight hard in the regiment now being recruited for Uncle Sam as "The Redheads"? Every man in this new volunteer organization is to qualify, first of all, by the fire in his thatch. The redder his hair the heartier his welcome. The editor of a magazine published in the special interests of adventures is sounding the call to colours and redheads are flocking by dozens round his gory standard. "The main point," he contends, and we agree with him utterly, "is that the redheads ought to be one of the best fighting units and one of the best known, that ever took the field." Aye! Not only will they 'take' the field—when their time comes they will 'sweep' it! Since red is not protective coloration, this regiment should be reserved for charges against the enemy.

The above is from Collier's and is similar to the statement of Major E. Norman Lewis, M.P., West Huron, that in Ottawa this suggestion had been broached, but it was felt that the Auburn tops in Canada were too few to recruit a whole battalion. Major Lewis is another of the militant members of Parliament. He is in charge of one of the batteries recently raised in Guelph.

MR. GEO. GILLESPIE TO GIVE ADDRESS

On the Revolution in Farming, Due to Application of Electricity at Friday Night's Meeting

Sir Adam Beck who is to be present at Friday night's meeting, and hopes that all true friends of Hydro will attend this gathering. Delegates will be here from different municipalities in Eastern Ontario and will present their requirements to the ministers of the two governments who will be in attendance. Mr. Geo. Gillespie, M.P.P. will speak on the revolution in farming due to the application of electricity to the ordinary work of the farm. Mr. Mayor Buller will speak on Radial railways, and Mayor Duffus who will preside, will likely give an account of different delegations to Toronto and Ottawa in the interest of Hydro.

His Nerves Weak

Poor Memory, Lacked Vigour, Lost Employment

Proof That You Quickly Get Bracing Health From Ferrozone

There's a real reason why Ferrozone cures.

No other tonic in the world like Ferrozone, nothing else is so quick and lasting in its effects on a run-down, nervous system. "I used enough medicine to appreciate an honest one," writes J. B. Beattie, from his home in Newcastle. "From babyhood I was not overly strong and was always nervous. I smoked a good deal, but on the whole my habits were good. My trouble first began with a shortening of the hours of sleep. I would awaken too early, my appetite was poor, and to whip it up I used highly spiced and sweet foods. First thing I knew I had palpitation on doing a little extra work, and then an awful tiredness came upon me, and a strange feeling of dread—almost of fear—made me think I was losing grip of myself. My power of memory weakened and I lost my position. Then I read about Ferrozone. Say it's awfully good to get a medicine that help you right off. I don't mind telling you I was badly scared, and every dose was almost like sunshine. At once I began to feel better, and permanently better I really was, for less than a dozen boxes made me a well man. Now I can do my work with any man and I am grateful to Ferrozone."

Ferrozone corrects all enfeebled conditions of the system, builds up and gives the body great resistive power against disease. To use Ferrozone assures lasting robust health. 50c. per box or six boxes for $2.50, at all dealers. Try Ferrozone, do it to-day.

By-law Authorizing Reduction in Salaries Endorsed By Council

Latest Civic Enactment Will Affect Officials Receiving Seven Hundred and Fifty Dollars and Over—Portion of the Original Resolution Was Deleted—Report Provides for the Retirement of Two Officials

By-law number nineteen hundred and fifty authorizing a reduction of ten per cent. of all salaries paid to city officials receiving seven hundred and fifty dollars and over, was endorsed at a special meeting of the city council held last evening. The reduction will date from April 1st of this year. The division resulted as follows:

Yeas	Nays
Saunders	Dobbin.
Stratton	Edgar.
Duncan	3
Galbraith.
Langford
McIntyre
Weir
Evans.
Mayor Duffus

RESOLUTION AMENDED

The original resolution provided for a reduction of five per cent. in all salaries of seven hundred and fifty dollars or less. In moving for the elimination of the five per cent. reduction Ald Stratton pointed out that such a course would not interfere with the tax rate of 25.3 mills as struck at a previous meeting. He first moved that the ten per cent. reduction be applied to salaries of seven hundred dollars and over but at the suggestion of a number of Aldermen including Ald. McIntyre, raised the limit fifty dollars so as not to interfere with the maximum scale paid to the firemen which is seven hundred and fifty dollars.

WORK WILL BE LIMITED

In connection with clause three of the appended report of the Committee of the whole Council, Ald Edgar suggested that Mr. T. A. S. Hay be appointed curator of the museum at a salary of five hundred dollars a year. His Worship Mayor Duffus pointed out that it was not within the power of the City Council to make such an appointment. He regretted that Mr. Hay was not in a physical condition to continue in the active employ of the city engineering department but added that it would be unfair to the ratepayers to allow sentiment to run away with business acumen.

Ald. McIntyre said City Engineer Parsons would be willing to retain Mr. Hay during the busy season. He suggested that Mr. Parsons be asked to explain the situation to the Council.

Ald Stratton—"We don't need any explanation. This year the amount of work will be so small that we will not require an assistant in that department."

Ald Saunder's voiced regret at the Council's decision to dismiss both Mr. Hay and Mr. Quartermaine.

In the case of City Treasurer Adams the time limit was extended from May the first to July the first.

The report as amended and adopted by the Council, follows:—

To the Council of the City of Peterborough:— Your Committee of the Whole Council beg leave to report and recommend as follows: —

1. That Mr. G. S. Schneider be permitted to operate the Red Mill moving picture house on the license issued for that house to Lee Peter until its expiration or until Lee Peter should make use of it in the city on a proper transfer.

2. That Mr. Adams, City Treasurer owing to his ailment, be given three months' leave of absence from April 1st, 1916, without salary, and at the end of that time if he is in fit condition to take up the duties of his office, the position be left open for him.

3. That in order to provide more efficient and more economical service, a re-organization be made in the staff of the City Engineer by which the City Engineer will have one efficient assistant with the stenographer instead of the present staff and that the change take effect on May 1st next.

4. That the salaries of all officials receiving $750.00 a year be reduced 10 per cent. from April 1st, 1916.

Channel Tunnel Would Magnify Power of France and Britain

Under the heading, "The SubChannel Tunnel,' the European edition of the Herald in a recent issue published the following editorial:

Construct the Channel Tunnel? Why not?

That it would render services of importance to France and England is conceded in both countries. French public opinion is, and long has been, virtually unanimous in favour of this submarine project. The mere announcement of a lecture dealing with it, to be delivered by M. Alglave, the eminent law professor of the Paris Faculty, attracted more than a thousand listeners to the Conservatoire des Arts et Metiers a few days ago; and their hearty endorsement of the lecturer's argument for the tunnel was not significant.

In England, also, there is a group, steadily growing numerically and in influence, which advocates the construction of a sub-Channel-tunnel. Heretofore the chief opposition to it has come from British military experts. The mainspring of their hostility would expose England to attack. But is England, without a tunnel, safe from attack? Ask the Zeppelins. Certainly the British Isles are safe from invasion. But that is owing to the British fleet, not to the lack of tunnel.

At the present time a sub-Channel tunnel would be of incalculable value to the Allies! for, instead of exposing England to attack it would increase her facilities for sending troops and munitions of war to the Continent, where Great Britain's destinies always have been decided and where they always will be decided. The enemy, the irreconcilable enemy of England is Germany. The Germans themselves admit it; in fact, they are shouting it from the house tops. England, therefore, should neglect nothing that would enable her to meet the enemy, not on the British coasts but at the German frontiers.

The fortunes of France and England are linked together definitely by this war. For ages to come they will have to regard Germany as the common enemy. A sub-Channel tunnel would magnify the military strength of both by adding to their transportation facilities, for England to rush troops to the Continent, for France to despatch supplies to England, regardless of submarines and floating mines.

Perhaps one of the inevitable results of the war will be the realization of this project to construct a sub-Channel tunnel.

Reminder of Brutal Enemy

London Editor Urges That "I Serve" Be Substituted on Crest of the Prince of Wales

LONDON, March 29. — The anti-German campaign which is being conducted with so much vigour throughout the British empire now has for an object the removal of any evidence of relationship between the royal family and Germany. One of the leaders in this campaign is Horatio Bottomley, whose paper, "John Bull," is ridiculed by many, but never lacks attention. Mr. Bottomley's latest efforts have been directed against the German legend, "Ich dien," which figures on the crest of the Prince of Wales.

"For us and our dominions," writes Mr. Bottomley, "this is a war of sentiment, a war for ideals. We are fighting all that is worst in the world—'the product of debased civilization'; we are fighting the Germhun. This is just as much a war of hate with us as with him. We do not proclaim our hate as a morning greeting in the family circle; it is hate in deed, the hate of a nation's deep determination— of an empire's iron resolve.

"Nothing that perpetuates or reminds us of the hatred and baleful enemy must be allowed to remain. From the hallowed walls of the chapel of the Garter Knights we have torn down the degraded banners of the kings and princes unworthy of that noble order—unfitted to find even the sanctity of memory within the place of sanctuary.

Germans Serve Devil.

"And now to-day we ask the King and his son to take steps which will do more than any conceivable act to fire the imagination of the people —to proclaim to the world our estimate of the character and infamy of the foe. Very respectfully we beg that from the historic crest of the Prince of Wales the German legend now hateful to our eyes shall be forever removed. 'Ich dien!' In the hateful language of the Hun what does it stand for? What is it that the foe 'serves'? With the name of God ever on his lips he 'serves' the devil; with eyes uplifted in impious worship he strikes down the woman and the babe.

"When the Prince of Wales' plumes and motto were taken as the trophy of victory by the Black Prince and set on his cap the defeated King John of Bohemia was an honourable foe, and in the tread and passage of the centuries 'Ich dien' did not cease to mean that those who spoke the German language served God and fought chivalrously. To-day all is changed. To speak the same tongue as those who ravished in Belgium, who laid Louvain a waste of broken bricks and stoke and who have spread their bestial presence over the fair places of our allies is to insult the tongues in our mouths."

(Mr. Bottomley suggests that the English equivalent of "Ich dien," be substituted. "'I serve,'" he says, "is a grand motto for a prince.

To some, he continues, "it may seem a small thing that two words should anger or inspire, just according as they are expressed in the language we hate or the tongue we love. But it is not a small thing; it is a big thing. This great empire of ours is in the process of remaking. In the King's dominions throughout the world all that serves to remind us of the days when the deathly grip of the Germhun was upon the land and upon the riches of the land must be broken and scattered.

"The arrogance of arms, the insults of his kultur, the very tones and letters of his language shall be removed from our sight and our ears. We will not talk with him, we will not trade with him.

Tax Rate of 25.3 Mills Adopted By Council

Ald. Edgar wanted to know what meeting Capt. Burnham had reference to when he made the request, whereupon Mayor Duffus reminded Ald. Edgar it was the meeting which he (Ald. Edgar) is alleged to have said "the Mayor should not be chairman of."

Communications.

A communication was received from the Provincial Board of Health, approving of a number of waterworks extensions.

The auditors' report, prepared by Mr. F. J. A. Hall, and concerning the audit of the city's books was received. The Council authorized two hundred copies of the report.

C. Revoy wants a sidewalk on Sophia street, east of Mark street. His request will be forwarded to the Board of Works.

A letter was received from Peck, Kerr and McElderry, stating that the fence around the property owned by Mrs. Hammond at the corner of Bethune and Smith streets, had been partially destroyed by the snow plough. The matter was referred to the Board of Works.

The matter of illuminated refuse boxes for the city's streets was also turned over to the Board of Works. The company want to install ten boxes on trial providing the city will allow them to remain on the streets for a specified length of time. This to enable the company to secure some advertising contracts.

The Council is of the opinion that the costs chargeable to the city in connection with the maintenance of the district officer of health are out of proportion with the services received. A resolution to that effect will be forwarded to the Provincial authorities.

Persian Prince Lost In Sussex Wreck

Member of Reigning House Was Passenger and Is Still Missing.

PARIS, March 29.—Prince Bahram, of the reigning family of Persia, who was a passenger on board the Sussex, is still unaccounted for. His father, Zill es Sultan, who is at present at Nice, has telegraphed to the Foreign Office in London and to the railroad company's offices, and as neither is able to give him any information he has declared that he has practically given up hope regarding his son.

Hot Water for Sick Headaches

Headache of any kind, is caused by auto-intoxication—which means self-poisoning. Liver and bowel poisons called toxins, sucked into the blood through the lymph ducts, excite the heart which pumps the blood so fast that it congests in the smaller arteries and veins of the head producing violent, throbbing pain and distress called headache. You become nervous, despondent, sick, feverish and miserable, your meals sour and almost nauseate you. Then you resort to acetanilide, aspirin or the bromides which temporarily relieve but do not rid the blood of these irritating toxins.

A glass of hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it, drank before breakfast for awhile will not only wash these poisons from your system and cure you of headache, but will cleanse, purify and freshen the entire alimentary canal.

Ask your pharmacist for a quarter pound of limestone phosphate. It is inexpensive, harmless as sugar, and almost tasteless, except for a sourish twinge which is not unpleasant.

If you aren't feeling your best, if tongue is coated or you wake up with bad taste, foul breath or have colds, indigestion, biliousness, constipation or sour, acid stomach, begin the phosphated hot water cure to rid your system of toxins and poisons.

Results are quick and it is claimed that those who continue to flush out the stomach, liver and bowels every morning never have any headache or know a miserable moment.

Baker Bequeathed Sums to Churches

MONTREAL, March 29.—The late George Hague, at one time general manager of the Merchants Bank of Canada, whose will has been probated, bequeathed $100 per annum for three years to Olivet Congregational Church, Toronto. The testator's sister, Mrs. Mary Higgins, Toronto, is left $500. The sum of $1,500 is given to Wycliffe College, and $1,000 to Canada Congregational Foreign Missionary Society, Toronto.

Numerous other bequests to churches and missionary societies are made, the estate divided up being about $100,000.

NEW CONFIDENCE AMONG RUSSIANS

PETROGRAD, March 29.—The depression which followed the reverses of last summer has been conquered by the Russian people and the nation is full of new confidence, in the press, in public meetings, and on the streets.

The opening of the new offensive of the legions of the Czar against the German and Austro-Hungarian front has been awaited almost impatiently, because all classes are convinced that it will bring victory and that no enemy will be on Russian soil when fall comes.

The war against Turkey is considered decided. All papers speak of Armenia as 'the new Russian province' and predict the Turkish Government will ask for a separate peace within two months.

The Bourse Gazette, one of the most conservative papers, says:

"Russia to-day is in a better condition to bring the war to a victorious end than she was a year ago. Our army is numerically stronger than that of Germany, Austria-Hungary, Bulgaria and Turkey combined, and we have steadily improved our organization. The supply of guns small arms and munitions is almost inexhaustible, thanks to the aid of Japan and the United States.

Expansion.

"There is no longer the slightest doubt that we can crush our enemies. Our frontiers will not only be immensely extended in Asia Minor, but also to the west. Before the coming summer ends a large part of Germany will be in our possession, and we may also have Constantinople, which our allies were not able to take.

The new offensive on our western front may begin any moment, and is absolutely sure of success, because of our military superiority and of the fact that the Germans and Austrians have been compelled to thin their lines to ward off crushing defeats on their fronts in France and on the Isonzo.

General Retreat.

Although the lines of the enemy are thin, it will be no easy task to break them, because they are strongly fortified. But they will be broken, and then the retreat of the Germans and Austrians must become general. They cannot hold the territory they have invaded, and the conquered fortresses are of no use to them.

It is no vague prediction if we say that by August or September our Armies will again be on German soil and the plains of Hungary. In the meantime the Germans will also be crushed in the western theatre of war, but even if they should succeed in breaking down the French army that would not alter the situation as far as we are concerned. Russia is able to carry on the war alone and to win."

A charming finish to a black chiffon waist is a square double collar of white crepe with black dots.

Makes Stubborn Coughs Vanish in a Hurry

Surprisingly Good Cough Syrup Easily and Cheaply Made at Home

If some one in your family has an obstinate cough or a bad throat or chest cold that has been hanging on and refuses to yield to treatment, get from any drug store 2½ ounces of Pinex and make it into 16 ounces of cough syrup, and watch that cough vanish.

Pour the 2½ ounces Pinex (50 cents worth) into a 16-ounce bottle and fill the bottle with plain granulated sugar syrup. The total cost is about 54 cents, and gives you 16 ounces—a family supply—of a most effective remedy, at a saving of $2. A day's use will usually overcome a severe cough. Easily prepared in 5 minutes—full directions with Pinex. Keeps perfectly and has a pleasant taste. Children like it.

It's really remarkable how promptly and easily it loosens the dry, hoarse or tight cough and heals the inflamed membranes in a painful cough. It also stops the formation of phlegm in the throat and bronchial tubes, thus ending the persistent loose cough. A splendid remedy for bronchitis, winter coughs, bronchial asthma and whooping cough.

Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, rich in guaiacol, which is so healing to the membranes.

Avoid disappointment by asking your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex," and do not accept anything else. A guarantee of absolute satisfaction goes with this preparation or money promptly refunded. The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

CREEK ON THE RAMPAGE AGAIN

Ice Jam at G. T. R. Bridge This Afternoon

The flood in the creek running through the city which was thought to be subsiding grew worse this afternoon again. The ice jammed above the G.T.R. railway bridge between Stewart and Reid streets and soon the water was running over the track. At the Hamilton Co.'s plant just above the premises were again flooded, the water invading the machine shop. A staff of men working at the railway bridge this afternoon made a considerable improvement in the situation, and it is thought that the wost is over.

WEDDING BELLS

MONCRIEF—BARNARD.

A very pretty wedding was solemnized at "Sunnyside," the home of Mr. and Mrs. Wilbur Barnard, South Monaghan, when their eldest daughter, Leona, was united in marriage to Mr. Ross Moncrief, youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. John Moncrief, S. Monaghan. The Rev. W. T. Wickett officiated.

The bride, who entered the drawing-room to the strains of Mendelssohn's Wedding March, played by her sister, Miss Hattie, looked very pretty in a gown of white silk crepe de chine, trimmed with seed pearls, veil and orange blossoms. She wore the groom's gift, a pearly necklace, and carried a sheaf of bridal roses. The bride was given away by her father. Loretta, the little sister of the bride, acted as flower girl, and wore cream silk with touch of blue.

After the ceremony and the signing of the register, the guests, numbering about 100, sat down to a dainty dejeuner. Mr. and Mrs. Moncrief left for Toronto and other points, amid showers of confetti and best wishes of a host of friends, with whom they are very popular.

The bride travelled in a suit of navy blue, with becoming hat with touches of pink and blue, and black fox furs. On their return they will reside at Hillcrest Farm, South Monaghan, where they will be at home to their friends after April 15th.

OBITUARY

JOHN R. BRAITHWAITE.

John R. Braithwaite, an old resident of Cavan, died on Thursday last in his sixty-eighth year. The interment took place at St. John's Cemetery on Saturday. Deceased was a bachelor.—Millbrook Reporter.

MRS. JOHN HURLEY.

There passed peacefully away at 4.10 this morning at her home, 464 Charlotte street, a very highly respected citizen, in the person of Mrs. Margaret Hurley, widow of the late John Hurley at the age of 65 years. Deceased had been a resident of this city for the last thirty-three years, formerly coming from Lindsay where she was born and raised. Mrs. Hurley who up until a few days ago, seemed to be enjoying fairly good health, unfortunately contracted a cold which finally turned to pneumonia.

The late Mrs. Hurley was held in high esteem by all who knew her and her many friends will be grieved to hear of her demise.

There are left to mourn her loss, one son and three daughters, Frank of Toronto, Mrs. John J. Boomer, Miss Margaret Hurley of Windsor and Miss Loretta at home. She is also survived by two brothers and four sisters, Messrs. P. S. Brady of Waubashene and Joseph of Brechin. Mrs. John O'Reilly and Miss Julia Brady of Lindsay, Mrs. A. A. Lawder and Mrs. E. Kennedy of Chicago.

The funeral which will take place on Saturday morning, April 1st at nine o'clock will proceed to St. Peter's Cathedral thence to St. Peter's cemetery for interment.

CONCERNING FEET.

Human feet have not yet become completely adapted to the different shape of boots with the consequence that many people suffer from sore feet. I relieve all such.

TALENT TEA WAS A SUCCESS

The talent tea, held at the home of Mrs. Chard, 140 Park Street, under the auspices of the Wives' and Mothers' Club, was a great success. A very pleasant time was spent. Musical numbers were given by the following members, Mrs. Norman, Miss M. Allan, Mrs. Thompson, Mrs. McKinlay, Mrs. F. Stanley, Mrs. Stanley, Mr. Buzg and Miss Chard. Mrs Bradshaw, two recitations. Tea was served by Mesdames Thompson Lashbrook, McKinley and Chard Thanks was extended to Mrs. Chard for the use of her house on behalf of the Club. The sum of $3.00 was collected. The tea closed by singing Auld Lang Syne and God Save The King.

WATER SUSPENDS THE SEWER WORK

Water entered the boiler room at the De Laval plant yesterday, but fortunately did not cause any serious inconvenience. It trickled in many streams from the fields to the west and submerged the sunken tracks which are used in the factory yards, but in the main caused no damage. Further up Park street the advancing trunk sewer had to be abandoned today by the workmen who were driven out by the surface water. Operations have been suspended until the water has lost itself in some direction or other.

Do not allow moths to breed in your house. It can be prevented by eliminating the garments that have had them, and by keeping a watchful eye on all closets and chests.

To make shoes rainproof the soles should be soaked in a mixture of tallow and resin. This should be melted, half a pound of resin to one pound of tallow, and the liquid poured into a shallow dish through which shoes in the mixture, while it is lukewarm, and leave until the mixture has been to a great extent absorbed by the leather.

OFFERS MILL TO EMPLOYES

Paterson, N.J., Manufacturer Wearied by Disputes With Workers

Paterson, March 29.—Henry Doherty, Jr., who, with his two brothers, owns and operates one of the largest silk mills in Paterson, has offered in a public letter to turn his mill over to his operatives if they can furnish an adequate guarantee to pay him 8 per cent. on his investment.

Wearied of the constant bickering and discussion over the demands for a nine-hour day and, fearing a repetition of the costly strike of 1913, the manufacturer, whose mill at Lake View, is regarded as one of the most up-to-date establishments, says he will let his workmen run things if they can get the backing of the Paterson newspapers and the Paterson Chamber of Commerce, and supply the guaranty. They may work then, he says, eight hours or five hours, so long as the dividends are forthcoming.

THE DEAD NOBLES.

Their death befits them like a splendid robe—
These British lords and heirs to names that die well.
They pass from House, from club from ancient seat,
To face their end, perhaps their order's end.
Since time was born, not Egypt Greece nor Rome
Has matched with death more valiant, stancher men.
From palace, broad estate, long held and loved,
Self-poised, as on a hunt for deer or grouse,
They go to Flanders, France the Dardanelles,
And, side by side with yeomen from their lands,
Endure and perish grandly, true to class.
As died their fathers in old wars, they die;
As sires oft met the arrow-hail and axe,
Armored in steel these, clad in inward steel
Of will and pride, with patriot hearts, front bombs
And bend their souls by not an inch to death.
The Mid-Sea isles, the decks of battleships,
Channel and trenches—all behold expire,
The coroneted men, the British Lords
With stately rite, while England proudly mourns.
Abbey and church give welcome to their bones.
Mayhap their castle must go—mayhap is gone.
But they depart as Lords indeed should die.
Unto traditions true, distinguished, calm,
Like sons of peers ,Crusaders, Chevaliers.
As knights of long ago, they pay their debt.
Let not Democracy withhold its praise
Would Shakespare, Scott, who lived to tell the tale,
To shape the well-earned crown of glorious words—
How these confirmed their honor in their death!
More than to Roses' Wars will men look back,
Recall in this Great War a caste demised.
And petted titled ones gave up their lives
As did the Barons bold in other times.
Temples should sink by Jove's own fiery bolts,
Not slowly crumble by decay's mean hand.
When doom is on a kingly race, 'twere well
That mightier conquerors should ride them down;
That not in exile, stripped, they eat their hearts.
When gods must be dethroned, Almighty wrath
Alone should overwhelm them by His power.
When noble orders fall before their fate,
Let sons of lineage go out in blaze
Of glory and with half the globe on fire.
By sword they came, by sword and war they go:
Their fitting requiem is clash of arms;
Their death bed in the earth's most storied lands.
Has God prepared this exit from the world?

MARY PICKFORD TO-NIGHT AT THE EMPIRE

The Popular Actress Will Appear in Photo Play for the Next Three Days

Mary Pickford, the world's foremost motion picture star, repeats in "Rags" the transcendent triumph she attained in "Tess of the Storm Country," hitherto conceded to be her greatest portrayal. Always inimitable, always human, lovable and impulsive, she makes the character of "Rags" a living, breathing incarnation of all that is sweet and tender. The dramatic situations are numerous and powerful, and the sacrifices, renunciation, and ultimate triumph of the abused and oppressed title character are thrilling in the extreme. "Rags" is a genuine Pickford classic.

A SPLENDID PROGRAMME

93rd Band Concert on Saturday Night Will Be a Treat For All

The popular concert by the band of the 93rd Battalion in Victoria Hall on Saturday night, under the direction of Bandmaster Hughes, will give the citizens of Peterborough an opportunity to judge the capabilities of the band in a standard concert programme. With numbers including such well-known overtures as "Raymond" and "Crown Diamonds," and such exacting numbers as the selections from "Lohengrin", and "William Tell," there is a feast of good music, while lighter numbers include the stirring patrol, "Wee McGregor," the delightful waltz, "Eileen Alanna," the charming gavotte, "Les Cloches de St. Malo," with its pleasing bell effect, and Eilenburg's beautiful descriptive number, "The Mill in the Forest." The band will be assisted by Mr. T. Stratton, Harry Lauder imitator. The entire programme is a most pleasing one, and in view of the popular prices, 15c and 10c, Victoria Hall should be crowded.

Renewed Attacks of Enemy on Douaumont All Repulsed

EIGHT ENEMY AIRSHIPS DESTROYED BY THE FRENCH

The Germans Have Lost 20,000 Men in Renewal of Struggle For Verdun

Several Battalions Were Wiped Out in an Effort to Capture Malancourt—French Guns Tore Great Gaps in the Charging Lines.

LONDON, March 31.—The Germans have lost twenty thousand men in the renewal of the Verdun struggle on both banks of the Meuse, French military experts estimated to-day. Several battalions were wiped out in an effort to capture Malancourt. French guns on Hill 304 tore such great gaps in the charging lines of grey that the attack was halted after the Germans had secured a foothold in the village through a lack of men to follow up the drive. The German losses in the renewal of the attacks around Douaumont yesterday were extremely heavy.

3,000 MUNITION WORKERS ON STRIKE.

LONDON, March 31.—Three thousand munition workers are now on strike in the Government gun factories in the Clyde district, and reports from Glasgow to-day said the labour troubles threatened to spread. Less than four hundred strikers have returned to work, in spite of the pressure of Union leaders. The Government to-day directed serious attention to the situation at Liverpool, where ten thousand dock workers rejected the award of arbitrators and refused to return to work. The dock workers have now been out three days, and the results of the strike are already being felt in shipping circles.

GOVERNM'T MAY YET BE OBLIGED TO HANDLE LIQUORS

Probability the Establishment of Provincial Wholesale Dispensaries Will Be Needed

WHOLESALERS DON'T WANT BUSINESS

TORONTO, March 30.—The Provincial Government is facing the possibility of being obliged to establish Government wholesale dispensaries for the sale by wholesale of liquors to druggists, physicians and dentists, and others entitled to have liquors in their possession for dispensary and other purposes under the Ontario Temperance Act. This possibility is due to the very general reluctance of wholesale druggists throughout the Province to becoming the wholesale distributors of liquors as is proposed by the Government in the new legislation.

Several of the leading wholesale druggists assert they have no desire to handle liquors at all except as they are needed in their own preparation of drugs for the trade and declare that the Government can better enforce prohibition by having full control of its original distribution. A Government wholesale dispensary in charge of competent officers, could keep a check upon all order, and where the orders from any licensed druggist seemed unusually numerous, determine from the record of prescriptions filled by the druggist if such supplies of liquor as necessary in his business. Under Government supervision of this character it is pointed out the possibility of liquors being obtained by druggists or others for illegal purposes would be reduced to a minimum.

Before the bill receives its second reading in the House it is understood printed copies of the measure will be mailed to every member of the Council of Thirteen of the Ontario College of Pharmacy, the governing body of the druggists of the Province, in order to receive the suggestions of the members of the Council, which will later be presented through the legislative committee of the Council to the Government in the hope that the bill will be altered if necessary to comply with such recommendations as commend themselves to the Government.

This would indicate that the bill will not get its second reading until next week.

Brother and Sister Met in Lindsay For the First Time In Twenty-eight Years

LINDSAY, March 31.—To pass close by in the old Union Station at Toronto and not recognize each other, and later on meet in the Simpson House, Lindsay, for the first time in 28 years, was the experience of Mrs. A. C. Patterson, of Chicago, Ill., and her brother, Mr James Corrigan, of New York City.

It appears that there are business matters to attend to in Lindsay, the Corrigans formerly residing in Emily Township, and by communication it had been arranged to meet in Lindsay this week. Not having met in 28 years it was an easy matter to pass in Toronto and not recognize each other. Mrs. Patterson arrived in town first, and stepped into the G.N.W. office to wire Mr. Corrigan that she had arrived, and would await his arrival. She then registered at the Hotel Simpson. A few minutes later Mr. Corrigan arrived on another evning train and walked in to the same office for the purpose of wiring his sister of his arrival. Mr. Waite, who was in the office, remembered that a few minutes previously he had received a message addressed to Mr Corrigan, and he informed him of the same.

Needless to say there was a happy meeting between brother and sister a few minutes later in the Hotel Simpson. Both are known to a number of Lindsay people Mr Corrigan has visited Lindsay only once in 31 years.

Oferfs to Bare Neutrality Plots

German Held Prisoner in England Would Bring Information to the United States

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 31.—Franz von Rintelen, a German, held in England as a prisoner of war, has sent word to officials here that he can give testimony of value in prosecuting neutrality cases, and is willing to do so if permitted to come to the United States in custody, as was Herat von der Goltz, who arrived in New York yesterday.

Rintelen's offer will be considered, but it is generally understood that British authorities probably would not be willing to let him cross to this country.

There is some speculation here as to how the Scotland Yard men who brought Von der Goltz to New York will regain custody of the prisoner after his testimony in connection with neutrality cases is finished. The British officers told New York authorities that they were giving up Von der Goltz under an agreement that he would be returned to their keeping later. Officials of the State and Justice departments and the Immigration Bureau said to-day that they had heard of no such agreement, and at the Department of Justice doubt was expressed that an understanding of that kind could legally be made.

The arrival of Von der Goltz and the possibility that Von Rintelen might be brought to the United States led to a rumour to-day that more sensational developments were expected in connection with neutrality prosecutions. Officials said, however, that there was no ground for such a report.

PUT STOMACH IN FINE CONDITION

Says Indigestion Results From An Excess of Hydrochloric Acid

Undigested food delayed in the stomach decays, or rather, ferments the same as food left in the open air, says a noted authority. He also tells us that indigestion is caused by Hyper-acidity, meaning, there is an excess of hydro-chloric acid in the stomach which prevents complete digestion and starts food fermentation. Thus everything eaten sours in the stomach much like garbage sours in a can, forming acrid fluids and gases which inflate the stomach like a toy balloon. Then we feel a heavy, lumpy misery in the chest we belch up gas we eructate sour food or have heartburn, flatulence, water-brash or nausea.

He tells us to lay aside all digestive aids and instead, get from any pharmacy four ounces of Jad Salts and take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast and drink while it is effervescing and furthermore, to continue this for a week. While relief follows the first dose, it is important to neutralize the acidity, remove the gas-making mass, start the liver, stimulate the kidneys and thus promote a free flow of pure digestive juices.

Jads Salts is inexpensive and is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice combined with lithia and sodium phosphate. This harmless salts is used by thousands of people for stomach trouble with excellent results.

OTTAWA, March 31.—Judge Fitch, of Fort Frances, has been dismissed from public service.

LONDON, March 31.—Many Canadians have received Legion of Honour decoration for gallantry in France.

RETIRED FARMERS RETURN TO LAND FOR $1.10 A DAY

STRATFORD, March 29.—Robert Hanna, a young married farmer residing on 300 acres of land near Millverton, has put to the test the proposal that retired farmers return to the land to release younger men for service in the army. To Messrs. Thos Lannin and Colin Kerr of Mornington, retired farmers, Mr. Hanna made the offer to enlist in the 110th Battalion if these men would go out and work his farm at $1.10 per day each. The offer was accepted, and to-day Hanna was attested in the "Pertha". Before the war is over munition workers may be placed on the same basis. Maybe.

OVERWORKED MINISTER

Tells How Vinol Restored Strength and Vitality.

Peterborough people will realize that we could not publish such letters as the following if they were not genuine and truthful statements of facts. The Rev. Mr. Hughes, Holly Springs, Ark., says:

"I am a Methodist Minister, and suffered from broken-down nerves, loss of appetite and sleeplessness. I was weak, my circulation was very poor, and I was not able to do my duty in my Parish as I felt I should. I had tried various remedies but did not seem to get any better. Through Mr. Gatin of Bearden, Ark., I learned of Vinol, and it built me up. I regained my appetite, can sleep better and do more work."

There is no secret about Vinol, it derives its power to build up the over worked, brokendown, nervous system from the medicinal extractives of fresh cod livers without oil combined with tonic iron and beef peptone.

Anyone in Peterborough who wishes to try Vinol can do so with the understanding that we will return their money if they are not satisfied.

No Warnings Now and Crews Left To Drown

LONDON, March 31.—British naval officials state that none of the British vessels, armed or unarmed, torpedoed since the inception of the new German submarine campaign, has received any warning, nor has the crew been removed except where the torpedoed ship sank slowly.

A report which has been made public shows that four unarmed British merchantment engaged in trade between British and American ports have been sunk without warning. They included the Englishman, from Avonmouth for Portland, Me., and the Fenay Bridge and Manchester Engineer, both from Philadelphia for England.

These vessels followed the general practice of British merchantmen engaged in trade with America in not even having defensive armament.

DO THIS FIRST—YOU!

You know, and every physician knows, that when any sickness has passed, whether it be throat trouble, organic disturbances, contagious diseases, or even a severe cold, a relapse is feared, because sickness robs the system of Nature's resistance and leaves it subject to lingering germs.

Drugs never build up a worn-out body—only food can do that, and the first thing to take after any sickness is the concentrated, blood-making oil-food in Scott's Emulsion, which feeds the tissues, benefits the blood and strengthens both lungs and throat.

Physicians prescribe Scott's Emulsion after sickness. Nurses everywhere advocate it. Scott's is pure nutritious food, without injurious drugs.

Parents Want Boy of 14 Back From the Army

OTTAWA, March 31.—The attention of Parliament was called to a distressed father in Quebec who wants his boy of 14 years back from the grip of the war, and who so far has been unable to persuade the officers of the 189th Battalion that the boy should not be compelled to go to war, although regularly enlisted.

Mr. J. A. C. Ethier brought the matter up. He said that one of his constituents, Mr. E. Paquet, had a son who was not yet fifteen years of age who had enlisted without the permission of his parents. Both the father and mother went to the headquarters of the battalion to appeal to the officers, but they were badly received, and the officers, according to the parents story, threatened to have the boy charged with perjury if they persisted in their efforts to have him released. Finally, the boy was sent to Amherst, and through Mr. Ethier an appeal was made to General Sir Sam Hughes. The latter instructed his secretary to make arrangements for the release of the boy. But no release had yet come. Mr. Ethier said that if the present acting minister did not take steps an appeal would be pressed in the courts. The parents had given one son already to the war, but drew the line at allowing a mere boy to be sent to the trenches.

Acting Minister of Militia Kemp said that he would make inquiries into the case and see that General Sir Sam's original instructions were carried out.

ALBERTA TO ENDORSE TEMPERANCE ACT.

EDMONTON, March 31.—That the Prohibition Act will be strictly enforced was the statement of Attorney General Cross in the Legislature last night. Included in the votes is $60,000 for putting the new liquor legislation into effect. Rev. W. F. Gold secretary of the Alberta Temperance and Moral Reform League, will be one of the officials for the administration of the act.

BE PRETTY! TURN GRAY HAIR DARK

Try Grandmother's Old Favorite Recipe of Sage Tea and Sulphur.

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur properly compounded, brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when it is streaked or gray. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is mussy and troublesome. Nowadays, by asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this famous old recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, for about 50 cents.

Don't stay gray! Try it! No one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy and attractive.

Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is a delightful toilet requisite for those who desire dark hair and a youthful appearance. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Messerschmidt Were Injured When Truck Hit Automobile.

NEW YORK, March 30.—For injuries they suffered when their automobile was struck by a motor truck, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Messerschmidt, of No. 1,180 Greene avenue, Brooklyn, were awarded a verdict of $27,563 by a jury in Justice Kelby's part of the Supreme Court yesterday.

Mrs. Messerschmidt was awarded $20,000 of this sum. She and her husband were driving their automobile in Jericho Turnpike, L.I., on September 20, 1914 when the front wheel of the motor truck collapsed and their machine was struck. The truck is owned by a dry goods concern.

OUR SERIAL STORY

"Flower of the Gorse"

BY LOUIS TRACY

Yvonne that she was wanted at home.

Lorry obeyed cheerfully. He believed he had blundered on a means of discomfiting the rascally secretary, and, that laudable object once attained, the path was clear for his own love making. Though his aims and hopes differed from Harvey Raymond's as the open sea from a slime-covered morass, he too made the mistake of imagining that money could level all obstacles; which, if regarded as an infallible maxim, is misleading alike to the just and the unjust.

Usually, when returning to the hotel from the cottage, he took the short cut by the footbridge on which Yvonne had encountered Madeleine and Fosdyke. He was aware, however, that the girl habitually used the slightly longer but more open highway. So he turned into the Concarneau road, and was approaching the main bridge (the famous old pont that gives the village its name) when he saw two people sauntering slowly toward the harbour, and apparently engaged in close converse. They were some distance away, and partly hidden in the deep shadow of a fifteenth century mill with curious carvings beneath the roof of a lion and a man; but he could not be mistaken as to Yvonne and Raymond, for no other girl in Pont Aven carried herself with Yvonne's grace, and the misshapen little secretary was in a class apart.

Evidently Raymond had offered his escort to Yvonne, and they were extending a somewhat late promenade to enable the former to convey such news as he had to give of the journey to Quimperle. Possibly he had received an answer from that mysterious "friend" Duquesne. Nevertheless Tollemache was aware of a sudden lessening of his exaltation. It was as though when overheated by exertion he had entered a cold and chammy vault. He could give no valid reason why he should not quicken his pace and overtake Yvonne with her father's message. Yet he hung back, conscious of a sense of intrusion, yet furious with himself on account of this inexplicable hesitancy.

Finally he compromised. Yvonne would surely not take a prolonged stroll after ten o'clock at night. He would walk a little way up the old Concarneau road (so called because, after the fashion of ancient tracks, it climbs a steep hill boldly, while its modern supplanter follows a longer and easier sweep) and keep in the gloom of the ancient houses clustered there until he saw her making for the cottage. With growing impatience, and a prey to not a little misgiving, he waited fully half an hour.

At last she appeared, walking swiftly and alone. And now his anxiety yielded to astonishment. Coming quietly down the hill, and crossing the Place au Beurre, he was just in time to see her vanish into the obscurity of the Rue Mathias. At any rate, then, she was heading for Mere Pitoy's. Glancing toward the harbour, he fancied he could make out Raymond at the end of the short, narrow street.

He did not think it necessary to lurk in the background until Raymond passed, but went to the hotel and stood on the terrace under the sycamores, but well in view of anyone approaching the annex.

Soon Raymond came, picking his steps with careful slowness, and keeping to the well lighted centre of the square. His chin was sunk in the upturned collar of an overcoat, and he had the aspect of one lost in thought. Yet he seemed to know of Tollemache's presence, and raised his eyes in a steady stare when the two were within a few yards of each other.

He did not speak, but his pallid face creased into a malevolent grin. Whether or not this was intended as a polite recognition, Tollemache neither knew nor cared. He returned Raymond's stare with the impassivity of a Red Indian, and, though puzzled and distressed, resolved to look in on Harry Jackson before retiring for the night.

In after life Tollemache never forgot that moment. It was big with fate. Perhaps, if left to their own course, events might have followed the same channel next day or some succeeding day. But there could be no questioning the tremendous significance of that particular hour when its outcome was recalled in the after light of accomplished facts.

Thenceforth there was no damming the torrent that swept away men and women in its fury. Some were lost for evermore, some were thrown, bruised and maimed, on far distant strands; but all were caught in an irresistible flood, and, if Tollemache were a visionary, he might have heard the rush of mighty waters as he turned to enter the hotel.

CHAPTER VII.

Wherein Both the Reef and Mr. Raymond Yield Information.

Yvonne was lokoing forward to Raymond's return from Quimperle with an ill concealed restlessness that drew a sympathetic inquiry from her mother.

"Are you still fretting about Madeleine?" she said.

This solicitude was not feigned; but it centred wholly in Yvonne. The folly, or stupidity, of some pert village maid whom she had never either seen or cared to see did not interest Mrs. Carmac in the least. Had she voiced her real feeling in the matter she would have condemned her daughter's lack of proportion. During half a lifetime she had dwelt among the elect. To her it was quite immaterial whether or not Madeleine's career was ruined. Nor was this a mere pose on her part. She had trained herself to think that way. Yet, so sharply may deeds clash with personal inclination, both she and Walter Carmac were noted for their philanthropy. She strove to do good, but not by stealth. She could lecture Rupert Fosdyke with genuine zeal; but, while seeking to reform the victimizer, she had little pity for the victim. Prim her point of view, Madeleine was one of a fixed percentage of girls who rebelled against the social law. Of course one tried to reduce their number; but it was almost bad form to wear one's heart out because the expected had happened.

Yvonne, though she would not have cared to put her impressions into words, was aware of this attitude on her mother's part, and it saddened her inexpressibly. At such moments a seemingly impassible gulf yawned between them. Madeleine had been her trusted associate since they were babies together, toddling up the hill in convoy of some older girl to the kindergarten class in the convent. She knew that her friend was pure-minded and warm-hearted. Nothing could have shocked her so greatly as the discovery that a man like Rupert Fosdyke should have succeeded in so brief a time in undermining the moral structure that Brittany builds so solidly in its women folk.

"I shall never cease fretting about her," she answered. "If by some cruel chance Mr. Raymond's friend fails me, I am minded to ask my father to come with me to Paris to-morrow. Madeleine will not resist me if once we are brought face to face."

"Your father has far too much sense," said Mrs. Carmac composedly.

"Oh, please don't talk in that strain. I cannot bear it!" pleaded the girl.

"It hurts, of course; but isn't it better to look at the facts squarely? I am surprised that Mr. Raymond, who has more experience in life, should have flown on a wild-goose chase to Quimperle. It is nothing else. If Madeleine is actually on her way to Paris, the journey is a matter of obvious arrangement. Rupert will unquestionably meet her at the Gare St. Lazare, and what opportunity will your deputy have then of making any appeal to the girl herself? Rupert would simply take him by the collar and swing him aside. You see, Yvonne, I am forty-two, and you are twenty. We survey life from different angles."

"From different levels, at any rate," said Yvonne, closing her ears to the cold accuracy of her mother's reasoning. "You gaze down on us simple Pont Avenois from the altitude of New York and London, while I cannot peer above the eaves of our little mills. I am looking now through the low door of a desolate cottage, and I can discern a broken-hearted woman crooning her sorrow by the embers of a dying fire. Oh, Mother, Mother, if ever you would have me love you as a daughter, you must try and realize that my very heartstrings are twined round my Breton friends, that I rejoice with them and grieve with them, and I love them for their many virtues and condone their few faults! I have never knowingly wished evil to any one, but if God in His mercy should preserve my dear Madeleine from that horrid man I would not care what means His wisdom adopted. Even though Fosdyke marries her, Madeleine will not be happy, and I cannot think that if he meant to behave honourably he would have tempted her to plunge her people into such distress by leaving home clandestinely."

Mrs. Carmac could have rocked with laughter at the notion of Rupert Fosdyke marrying Madeleine Demoret; but she curbed the impulse. Despite her primitive simplicity, Yvonne was in an excitable mood that night, and this affair must be allowed to settle itself without disturbing their good relations.

"Well," she sighed, affecting an accord she did not feel, "we can only hope now that your telegram will prove effective. Who is the person whose aid Mr. Raymond is securing?"

"A Monsieur Duquesne."

Mrs. Carmac wrinkled her smooth forehead. "I have not heard the name," she said, after a pause. "But there is nothing unusual in that. Raymond is curiously secretive. Any other man, living in a household on the footing he occupied in the Chase and in Charles Street, would have spoken at times of his relatives. He, for all I know of his earlier history, might have been born in—Saturn. I was going to say Mars; but Mr. Raymond does not meet one's ideal of a Martian."

A PAIN IN THE BACK

COMES FROM THE KIDNEYS.

When a pain asserts itself in the back you may rest assured that it comes from some derangement of the kidneys, for were there not something wrong with the kidneys the back would be strong and well, and would be without a pain or an ache.

For backache, lame or weak back, there is no remedy to equal Doan's Kidney Pills.

They take out the stitches, twitches, and twinges, limber up the stiff back, and give perfect relief and comfort to all poor, suffering women who suffer so much from a weak, lame, aching back.

Miss Iva A. Ferris, Mill Cove, N.B., writes: "I suffered for two years from pains in my back. I tried several kinds of patent medicines, and was almost discouraged until I noticed your advertisement of Doan's Kidney Pills. I thought it would not hurt to try them. I had only used two boxes before I noticed a great difference, and after I had taken four boxes I was completely cured. I would not be without them in the house. I can recommend them to all I know."

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50c per box, 3 boxes for $1.25; at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

When ordering direct specify "Doan's."

What Is Uric Acid?

THE CAUSE OF BACKACHE, RHEUMATISM, GRAVEL AND SUDDEN DEATH.

Ever since the discovery of uric acid in the blood by Scheele, in 1776, and the fact which it had, upon the body, scientists and physicians have striven to rid the tissues and the blood of this poison. Because of its overabundance in the system it causes backache, pains here and there, rheumatism, gout, gravel, neuralgia and sciatica. It was Dr. Pierce who discovered a new agent, called "Anuric," which will throw out and completely eliminate this uric acid from the system. "Anuric" has proved to be 27 times more potent than lithia, and consequently you need go longer fear muscular or articular rheumatism or gout, or many other diseases which are dependent on an accumulation of uric acid within the body. Send to Dr. Pierce, of the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y., for a pamphlet on "Anuric," or send 10 cents for a trial package of "Anuric Tablets."

If you feel that tired, worn-out feeling, backache, neuralgia, or if your sleep is disturbed by too frequent urination, go to your best drug store and ask for Dr. Pierce's Anuric Tablets. They are put up in 50-cent packages.

Doctor Pierce's reputation is back of this medicine and you know that his "Golden Medical Discovery" for the blood and his "Favorite Prescription" for the ills of women have had a splendid reputation for the past fifty years.

Economy Begins at Home

Now-a-days Governments, Chancellors, bankers and business men talk economy. However, it is one thing to talk economy and another to put it into practice.

The Canadian Housewife

holds the key to the situation. Real economy may be practised by the housewife in food purchasing for the home. At very small cost she may obtain the finest cocoa that money can buy — a cocoa unexcelled as a food drink and unrivalled as a flavoring, that adds extra delight to hundreds of dainty desserts.

His Own Cup of Tea.

There is one man at least in New York who has satisfactorily solved the problem of getting a cup of tea to his liking, no matter where he may be.

Ordered by his physician to quit coffee, he discovered that nothing could be more uncertain as to quality and making than restaurant tea. Then his wife came to the rescue with a birthday gift. Now when he sits down to luncheon he orders a pot of boiling water. Then from an inside coat pocket he produces a small green canton flannel bag and a little package with the fragrant aroma of Flowery Pekoe. From the bag he conjures a teaspoon fashioned on the principle of his wife's tea ball. A generous pinch of tightly curled leaves from the package, a click of the spoon's perforated lid, and he dips it into the water and glances over the menu for his favorite luncheon dish. A few seconds and the tea is made, the spoon lifted out for use later. Coffee is forgotten, and the midday meal is a feast with a piping hot "bowl of tea," made just right, to add a finishing touch.—New York Post.

The Curious Guanaco.

"Aguara!" ejaculated one, as they crouched low in the boat. "Kill" said he pointed to the ridge inside me in the stern sheets. The golden brown of the white breasted, deerlike animal stood out, a little note of color, complementing strongly against the verdant green of the dark, wet forest side, but well out of range. I had seen the "Indian guanaco skin capas or cloaks sold by the fur dealers of Punta Arenas, but this was my first glimpse of the animal itself, many thousands of which I saw later during my expeditions through Tierra del Fuego and Patagonia. "You are a queer animal, indeed," apostrophized an Argentine lieutenant as he and Captain Musters once viewed a solitary guanaco. "You have the neigh of a horse, the wool of a sheep, the neck of a camel, the feet of a deer, and the swiftness of the devil." Yet without a graceful animal and at a distance not unlike red deer, though larger.—Outing.

CREAM FOR CATARRH OPENS UP NOSTRILS

Tells How To Get Quick Relief from Head-Colds. It's Splendid!

In one minute your clogged nostrils will open, the air passages of your head will clear and you can breathe freely. No more hawking, snuffling, blowing, headache, dryness. No struggling for breath at night; your cold or catarrh will be gone.

Get a small bottle of Ely's Cream Balm from your druggist now. Apply a little of this fragrant, antiseptic, healing cream in your nostrils. It penetrates through every air passage of the head, soothes the inflamed or swollen mucous membrane and relief comes instantly.

It's just fine. Don't stay stuffed-up with a cold or nasty catarrh—Relief comes so quickly.

AFRICAN WAR DIFFICULT

Explosive Bullets and Huge Distances Hindered Conquest of Kamerun

A young British subaltern who was with the columns which won the Kamerun from the Germans writes: "The Germans had armed the natives for the most part with elephant guns and had supplied them with explosive shells. It was the most brutal kind of warfare, for these shells after striking a poor fellow would explode inside him and tear his body to pieces. Dum-dum bullets were used by the millions by the Germans and some of the natives used poisoned arrows. The German advance pickets were almost always fortified by trenches or deep holes. It means sure death to fall into one of these holes, for spikes similar to those used on harrows were on the bottom. Each of these spikes was tipped with a poison, which meant sudden and sure death to those who were impregnated by it.

"As our column left the seacoast the main difficulty lay in getting a sufficient amount of ammunition. every cartridge and every shell had to be carried by hundreds of miles inland. By the time an attack was begun sometimes the attacking force would find itself short of ammunition. Those in command made plans to the home government for automobiles and about fifty London taxicabs and an armored automobile were sent to us. These arrived late in the campaign, but they certainly were most useful. It was a queer sight to see these taxis, which we knew at one time had been soliciting fares in Piccadilly or in Fleet street, loaded with boxes of shells, cartridges, food stores, and what not. Some of them had the meters still on them. However, they proved a boon in quick transportation."

SPADE WAS TOO HOT

Humor of Hard-worked Trench Soldier of Britain

A British volunteer writing home from the front says: "As Kitchener said, or didn't say, our trenches stretch like a grey snake from Switzerland to the sea. And what hard work our young soldiers have, let me tell you, digging these trenches. I saw a young soldier lay down his shovel the other day and light his pipe. 'Here, what did you lay down that shovel for?' the sergeant said. 'To cool it, sir,' said the young soldier."

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

A WOMAN DUELIST.

By HAROLD OTIS.

Segrand, fencing master at Paris, when dueling was not only more common but more serious there than now, prepared the way for the killing of many men by teaching his art to the Parisians. It was generally understood that a pupil of Serane was sure to kill his man. If his lessons were really so valuable it must have been partly owing to a special confidence given the pupil and a corresponding loss of nerve on the part of the opponent. At any rate, those whom Serane had taught usually had little trouble in settling their disputes without recourse to the foil.

One evening Serane was sauntering down the boulevard and on reaching the opera concluded to go in and attend the performance. One of the singers on the stage was a woman named Maupin. Though she was not singing an important part, Serane's gaze was constantly fixed upon her. Why one woman's personal will appeal to one man when another woman is the chief attraction for other men is an insoluble problem. We only know that the fact exists. In Maupin, Serane saw that which appealed to him strongly. At the close of the performance he sent his card to her and received an invitation to call upon her behind the scenes.

"M. Serane," she said as soon as he appeared, "I deem myself fortunate in your desiring to make my acquaintance. You are well known to me by reputation as a splendid teacher of fencing, and I wish you to give me lessons."

Serane found the singer as fascinating in the greenroom as on the stage. She was young, fairly good looking, and about her was a certain abandon which when not too pronounced is attractive to men. Serane fell desperately in love with her, and she permitted him to love her in order that she might get out of him all the skill in fencing he was capable of imparting. She was an apt pupil and, taught by a lover, became the most skillful fencer that had ever been turned out from his academy.

No sooner had Maupin acquired the art than she began to attract attention as a duelist. At first her affairs with the sword leaked out as mere rumors. One report was that a young nobleman who had been devoted to her had fallen by her hand; that, disguised in men's apparel, she had insulted him and killed him without his knowing of her identity. Again it was rumored that she had fought and killed another woman. That she was applying her skill in affairs of this kind there was no doubt, though some that were attributed to her had no foundation in fact.

She liked to have Serane with her both on account of his devotion and because his presence gave her additional eclat as a swordswoman. But he came to understand that she craved blood or the excitement of taking it, and he endeavored to dissuade her from her course.

One night Serane and Maupin were dancing at a students' ball in the Latin quarter when Maupin jostled the belle of the evening, and upon the girl's looking at her resentfully Maupin was rude to her. The insulted girl was dancing with an intimate friend of Serane, Gustav Grammont.

HAD SALT RHEUM ON HANDS.

Could Not Do Her Work.

Eczema or salt rheum is one of the most common of all skin diseases. It may centre itself on any part of the body, but there are certain places where it most usually begins, such as the bends of the elbows, the backs of the knees, the groove behind the ears, the scalp, on the palms of the hands, between toe fingers, or on the soles of the feet.

It is, as a rule, not dangerous, but is very irritating and annoying to the sufferer on account of the terrible itching and burning sensation it causes.

It is impossible to eradicate this trouble from the system by external applications, as it is caused by the blood being in an impure state. What you need is a good blood cleansing medicine such as Burdock Blood Bitters. A medicine that will drive out all the foulness from the blood and make it pure and rich.

Mrs. Adelard Theriault, Theriault, N.B., writes: "Some time ago I was troubled with salt rheum on my hands, and it was so bad I could not do my work. I tried several medicines, but they all failed to help me. One day a friend told me to try Burdock Blood Bitters, so I got a bottle, and before I had taken it my hands were better. I am not afraid to recommend B.B.B. to anyone."

B.B.B. has been on the market for the past forty years, and is manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

grammont, supported by two other men, ordered Maupin to leave the room. She said that she would do so provided they would go with her. They did so, and before morning she had killed them all.

Serane in this affair refused to support Maupin. Indeed, she was obliged to call on another man to act as her second. The day after she had killed Grammont and the others Serane received a note from her accusing him of cowardice in having deserted her in the hour of need and challenging him to mortal combat. Stung to the quick by her ingratitude, he sent a hasty reply accepting the challenge.

The man who had been a lover and had taught the object of his love to kill people, filled with a mad remorse, resolved to kill her, thus punishing her and stopping her career of bloodshed. They met in his academy, the doors of which had been bolted and the windows screened. Maupin stepped out on to the floor with as much composure as a mother would administer food to a babe. She looked at Serane with a stony stare and said:

"Serane's pupils always kill their opponents."

There can be no doubt but the woman said this to fill her antagonist with a superstitious dread that would take away his nerve. If it had any such effect, Serane gave no evidence of it. A revulsion of feeling had come over him. Had this not occurred, had he opposed Maupin as a lover, as she had presumed he would, there would have been no chance for him. As it was it was a fair fight between them.

But with Serane in full possession of his faculties there could not be a fair fight between them. As soon as Maupin saw that she had lost her power over him she knew that, if he chose, her punishment had come. The moment they crossed swords she saw in Serane's eyes not only a determination to kill her if he could, but a perfect confidence of being able to do so.

Singularly enough, this woman who had conquered men with men's weapons no sooner discovered that her womanly influence over the man who had furnished her with her power had ceased than every particle of her confidence deserted her. She gave her opponent a mute look of appeal. He answered it with a sword thrust to the heart.

He Had Met Her Before.

Miss Christabel Pankhurst, the militant suffragette, was distributing flowers and cigarettes among the wounded in a Devonshire hospital one day when she said, in some perplexity, to a very stalwart guardsman:

"I'm sure I've met you somewhere. Bandaged though you are, your face is most familiar. I am Miss Pankhurst. Think—haven't we met before?"

The guardsman blushed, cleared his throat, and answered from the bed:

"Suppose we let bygones be bygones, miss. I was a police officer."

A Doubtful Compliment.

The Bishop of London has had many compliments paid him in his time, but he says that the best he ever received, although probably it was not intended as such, came from a very pretty little girl. Dr. Winnington-Ingram was preaching one day in a fashionable west end church when he was interrupted in the midst of his sermon by a loud childish treble voice, proceeding from the back of the church, which said: "Mamma, I'm tired. Could not the bishop go back to heaven now?"

FALKENHAYN THE DESPOT

From Disgraced Gambler to Chief War Lord His Career

The most powerful man in Germany to-day is General von Falkenhayn, says Hendrick Hudson, a Admiral, who returned after a long stay in that country. He writes in the Paris Tempo: "General von Falkenhayn, who was placed at the head of the great General Staff when Field Marshal von Moltke fell into disgrace immediately after the battle of the Marne, is the most powerful man in Germany. In regard to his antecedents, one knows that Von Falkenhayn, while a young officer, was obliged to give up his military career on account of having run scandalously into debt. He left for China, where he took a position in a commercial house. When the expedition against the Boxers was organized in 1900, Von Falkenhayn was permitted to re-enter the army service, because of his valuable knowledge of the country in which the military operations were conducted. Since then he has risen steadily in rank, but he has not been able to shake off his previous reputation.

Maximilian Harden, the well known journalist, was unsparing in his criticism of General von Falkenhayn's selection as Von Moltke's successor. In his publication, The Zukunft, he declared that "it was a bad policy to intrust the fate of Germany to a gambler, even if he were a good one at the game." This bold utterance caused the suppression of the Zukunft for a whole week. Von Falkenhayn's power rests on the extraordinary influence he wields over the Kaiser, which is altogether inexplicable to those intimately acquainted with the German ruler. 'Our Emperor has been hypnotised by this general,' said a prominent German. 'He is a victim of the dominating spell which the latter has managed to cast over him.'

"Being extremely jealous of his authority, General von Falkenhyn keeps away from the General Headquarters all persons whom he suspects of trying to gain the confidence of the Kaiser. Many court officials have on different occasions tried to get audiences with their sovereign only to be invariably rebuffed by Von Falkenhayn. Sometimes the refusal is very curt and ungracious. In other instances diplomacy requires that some thinly-veiled excuse be given. The Chief of Staff then usually informs the petitioner that His Majesty is just getting ready to depart for another front, but that he will grant the desired audience on his return to headquarters. This promise, however, is never kept."

SWAMP WOLF VS. HUNS

Polish Landowner Led Relentless Guerilla Warfare in Strange Land

In the enormous swamp region of Polesia, where the country has been in the possession of the German and Austro-Hungarian armies strange and gruesome events are taking place, wrote a Warsaw correspondent. Under the leadership of a mysterious chieftain who is known as the "Swamp Wolf," the peasants of this district are conducting a relentless guerilla war against the invaders, inflicting great damage upon them. Polesia is an immense triangle north and east of Brest-Litovsk. The railroad line Brest-Litovsk-Pinsk-Gomiel runs by these uncanny swamp and forest lands for nearly 250 miles. A large part of the district is the private property of the Czar. The endless wilderness has been kept in its primeval condition purposely, because it is one of the finest hunting grounds in the world. Wild buffalos and elks are plentiful and numerous packs of wolves roam the woods. The region is very thinly populated and the widely scattered small villages can only be reached by narrow paths through the dangerous swamps and wild forests.

In this district bands of natives are waging a determined war. Almost daily German and Austro-Hungarian patrols are attacked or ammunition and provision trains captured. The guerillas operate in bands of fifty to five hundred men. Of the mysterious "Swamp Wolf," the leader of these marauders, little is known but he is said to be a rich aristocratic landowner. His orders are law to the peasants, who imagine him endowed with supernatural powers. His followers believe him to be the savior of Russia and willingly sacrifice their lives at his command. Few of the transitrvers have ever seen him, but they are all convinced that he will destroy the armies of Russia's enemies. Hundreds of the guerillas have been caught and hanged or shot, but the "Swamp Wolf" escapes all traps set for him. Still the warfare is a serious danger for the Teutonic armies.

TURKEY WAR-WEARIED

Capital Respects English Submarines —Friction With Germans Constant

A Swedish engineer passing through London on his way to Stockholm from Constantinople gives a very pessimistic description of the situation in Turkey. The question whether he did not think that the heir presumptive, Prince Yussuf Izzeddin, was murdered by the tools of Enver Pasha, made him smile. Everybody in Constantinople, he said, knew that and had expected it to happen, no one, perhaps, more than the murdered prince himself. The latter had placed his last will and political testament in the hands of nine friends, living in various parts of the country. "The Turkish population," he said, "has no confidence whatever in the German bulletins of victory and never had, not even when they were true. They have always felt that the participation of their country in the world war was nothing more than a gamble, and as the war is being prolonged their fears of the outcome are growing fast.

"The numerous visits of British submarines to the harbor of Constantinople created a veritable panic. 'These Englishmen,' the Turks said, 'must be in league with Shaitan himself, since they succeed in getting through, no matter how many rows of mines are placed outside the entrance to the port, and then they always know where the ships are moored which they want to destroy. Not once have they made the mistake of attacking a neutral ship.' What is very depressing is the constant friction between the Turkish population and the German soldiers. For some time before I left there was not a single Turkish soldier left in the city and never did an evening pass without battles between Turkish citizens and German soldiers in the narrow streets of old Constantinople. While the Turkish officers who had received their military education in Germany were full of admiration for everything German, the great majority of the civilian population sympathizes with England and France, though they fear Russia."

If we win through this war, and the Empire is saved, it will be by the courage and devotion of British fighting men, and despite our politicians.—Mr. George Makrill.

ENGLAND AND RUSSIA; GREY'S SENSIBLE WORK

No Clash of Interests But Age-old, Discredited Suspicions

It was Sir Edward Grey who effected the Anglo-Russian understanding. No finer achievement stands to his credit. Think what Anglo-Russian relations had been before Grey some time ago took them in hand. There had been neither sanity in them, nor consistency, nor stability, for over half a century. A seemingly incurable suspiciousness separated the two powers. Many suggestions for their improvement had been made, but nothing had come of them. Lord Salisbury had informed his countrymen that to regard antagonism between England and Russia as something fundamental and inevitable was "the superstition of an antiquated diplomacy"; but nothing had been done to translate that utterance into terms of policy.

Asia No Real Bar

Englishmen had gone on repeating that they backed the wrong horse in 1855 and 1878, but their statesmen had not drawn from the admission any practical conclusions. They had declared again and again that there was "room for both England and Russia in Asia," but they had not attempted to attach any specific meaning to the words. Anglo-Russian relations, in short, had been marked by a dangerous and drifting inconclusiveness.

Sir Edward Grey made up his mind to end a deadlock that did neither country any good. He saw that the extreme cordiality and intimacy of Anglo-French relations required as their natural and logical corollary the formation of an equally close friendship with the ally of France. He saw, too, that it was not a British interest, but its very reverse, that Russia should be unable to make her due weight felt in the European balance of power. He saw, also, that only if England and Russia came together would Japan and Russia really and sincerely accept the Peace of Portsmouth as the basis of their Far Eastern relations.

Result: Alliance

Above all he saw that London and St. Petersburg were parted by an unhappy state of mind and obsolete prejudices rather than by any concrete antagonism of interests, and that questions might arise which would once again awaken their mutual and inveterate suspiciousness. Therefore, he sought an agreement with Russia. He set down and seriously examined and compared the respective interests of the two countries, and he did so in a spirit of conciliatory frankness that very soon bore fruit. The value of the understanding that he effected was abundantly proved when Persia lapsed into anarchy without disturbing the [illegible] overclouding the surface of Anglo-Russian relations. Its value was still more abundantly demonstrated when the outbreak of the war found England and Russia no longer at odds, but bound by a sober and tested friendship that ripened at once into a firm alliance.

IS YOUR HEALTH WORTH $5.00?

Woman Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Restored Her Health.

Lima, Ohio.—"I was all broken down in health from a displacement. One of my lady friends came to see me and she advised me to commence taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and to use Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash. I began taking your remedies and took $5.00 worth and in two months was a well woman after three doctors said I never would stand up straight again. I was a midwife for seven years and I recommended the Vegetable Compound to every woman to take before birth and afterwards, and they all got along so nicely that it surely is a godsend to suffering women. If women wish to write to me I will be delighted to answer them."—Mrs. JENNIE MOYER, 243 E. North St., Lima, Ohio.

Women who suffer from displacements, weakness, irregularities, nervousness, backache or bearing-down pains, need the tonic-strengthening properties of the roots and herbs contained in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

If you want special advice, write the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential), Lynn, Mass.

Until 1895 only one company manufactured bicycle tires in Canada. That was the Dunlop Tire & Rubber Goods Co., Limited, which was formed in 1894, and now makes over 80 per cent. of the bicycle tires used in Canada.

R. J. Mecredy, in 1889, won the first race in England in which a rider used the Dunlop pneumatic tire.

It took J. B. Dunlop, the original "airman," exactly three months to make that first set of pneumatic tires which his boy used.

Though J. B. Dunlop invented the pneumatic bicycle tire he never rode a bicycle of any kind himself.

Thin Men and Women Who Want to Gain Weight Should Try At Once This 10 Days Flesh Building Test

Report Gains at Rate of Three to FIVE Pounds a Week in Many Instances. Full Directions Given.

Most thin, run down men and women would probably be glad to increase their weight with ten to twenty-five pounds of good, firm, solid, healthy stay-there flesh and fat if they believed it possible to accomplish such results by but merely making the materials in their daily meals do a little more work than they are doing now.

This is said to be the chief reason why most thin people do stay under weight. They are so constituted that they fail to fully assimilate the nourishment of their food, a great deal of which passes from the body as waste. Increase assimilation to normal and normal weight follows as a matter of course.

If you are ten pounds or more underweight and believe this can't be done in your case, here is a simple, inexpensive, and really harmless test that is well worth trying.

First, weigh yourself. Then with each meal for ten days and each night as you go to bed take a single Sargol tablet. Then weigh yourself again and let the scales tell the story.

Sargol may not increase your weight as much as one pound a day but with whatever increase in your weight may be shown you can decide what its continued use for a few weeks further may be able to do for you. Sargol does not of itself make fat but consisting of a splendidly balanced combination of assimilative aids and flesh building agents it unites with your meals for the purpose of making it easier for your blood to accept their strength, flesh and fat-making nourishment and turn it into strength, flesh and fat upon your body.

A great many people have gladly told that it succeeds. There are many reports like the following: "I have increased 18 pounds in less than a month," wrote a man from Colorado. Another man who said that he had been losing over a pound a week and was under 155 pounds, gained two pounds the first week taking Sargol, and "been gaining ever since." Last report over 170 pounds. Better than 15 pounds gain. A lady from St. Louis wrote, "Have gained 26 pounds and am still gaining." Sargol as a rule should be taken 30 days or more where results like above are desired.

The tablets are small, easily swallowed, produce no disagreeable effects, contain no habit drugs, are harmless and not at all expensive as compared with results said to be obtained.

NOTE—Sargol, referred to above is well known as a flesh builder to many of the leading local druggists who furthermore sell it on the positive guarantee, as found in each large package, of satisfactory weight increase or money back. In view of this liberal offer and the harmless nature of the remedy, it would seem that all who desire increased weight should be glad to give this method a trial.

If you find a druggist who is unable to supply you send $1.00 money order or registered letter to the National Laboratories, 74 St. Antoine St., Montreal and a complete ten days treatment will be sent you postpaid, in plain package.

SPORTS TO REPLACE BARS

Bowling, Quoiting and Golfing to be Encouraged at Calgary.

Here is a Certified Cure of Chronic Salt Rheum

By Use of Dr. Chase's Ointment—Also a Bad Case of Eczema Just Reported Cured

Eczema and Salt Rheum are different names for practically the same disease. Small pimples or vesicles form in groups, break and run watery matter, a crust is formed, itching is intense and the disease shows a strong tendency to spread over the body.

Whatever may be the cause, Dr. Chase's Ointment will cure, for it heals and dries up the sores and leaves the skin soft and smooth.

Mr. Geo. P. Compton, Brooklyn, Lot 61, P.E.I., writes:—"I suffered for two years with Salt Rheum. Though I consulted three different doctors and tried many medicines, it was all to no effect. A friend advised me to try Dr. Chase's Ointment, and I am glad to say that when I finished the sixth box the Salt Rheum was all gone. There can be no doubt that the cure was entirely due to the use of this ointment, and I want other sufferers from Salt Rheum and Eczema to know about it."

Mr. Geo. Hunt, J. P., Brooklyn, Lot 61, P.E.I., writes:—"This is to certify that I know Mr. Geo. E. Compton and believe his statement to be true and correct."

Mrs. Allan, Mathers whose husband is proprietor of the Manitoulin Woollen Mills, Sheguiandah, Ont., writes:—"I have had a bad case of Eczema on my right leg below the knee. I tried all kinds of ointments and liniments, but to no avail, and was pretty well discouraged. Hearing of how Dr. Chase's Ointment is curing Eczema, I decided to give it a trial, and I am glad to say that it made a complete cure. The sore healed up completely and I have had no trace of the old trouble for over a year."

It takes a little patience to cure a severe case of Eczema or Salt Rheum, but you soon obtain relief by using Dr. Chase's Ointment, and you can see with your own eyes the benefits obtained once the healing process sets in. Dr. Chase's Ointment, 60 cents a box, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Company, Limited, Toronto.

YOUTHFUL DEPRAVITY IS BERLIN'S PROBLEM

Kultur at its Finest in Crimes of Children of Capital—Where War Hits Worst

Berlin is a city of problems, problems of every conceivable and inconceivable sort, writes a journalist of The Hague. The people have grappled and dealt with, dramatically and ably, such grave and intricate difficulties as the bread supply, the butter supply, the meat supply and so on. But there is one curious difficulty arising from the war which the people of Berlin have not succeeded in overcoming. That difficulty is the control of the young, now that the parental authority is too often missing. Cases of juvenile theft, burglary and even of highway robbery have increased and continue to increase. One organization which looked after youthful offenders, dealt with over three thousand cases so far back as in 1915, which was almost double the number for 1914.

War and Crime

A few days ago two lads, of eight and twelve respectively, carried out a daring and skilful burglary. They were not caught at the time, but they were seized later and were found to be in possession of the most complete and scientific kit a hardened crook could desire. The influence of the war is here unmistakable. In days past stories of Red Indians dominated the young. Then came the detective craze; but these were innocent diversions compared with the strange results of war excitement. The child lives in the atmosphere of daring adventure and heroism. In the early days of the war the little Berliners were content with a uniform or a sword, but they soon went beyond that. Time and again groups of boys of all classes of society have handed together, chosen their "general" and decamped from the parental roof. Overnight, or more often during the day, they hid in the woods or in empty houses.

Once so far it was easy to go further. They were rovers and highwaymen and carried their impudence to an extent that would be unbelievable were it not witnessed every day in the courts of Berlin. There are cases on record in which men in the surrounding country and even in the streets of Berlin have been set on by these gangs of young rovers. The reason for this outburst of lawlessness is to be found partly in the excitement of war, and partly in the fact that fathers have now been absent from home for so many months, while too often the mothers are engaged in hard wearing toil from the first thing in the morning till the last thing at night. Many mothers work long hours in the factories, yet often before they go to their day's toil they do a round with newspapers or milk. And when they return at 6 o'clock in the evening the housework has still to be done. This applies also to the women working on the street cars, the railways and in the post office.

No Hope of Reform

Thus, the little rebels are left to themselves. The school must take care of itself. Whether the children arrive late or not at all, is a matter over which, too often, they themselves decide. Of 3,600 Berlin teachers, over 2,000 were with the colors in December, 1915, while 107 municipal schools were being used as hospitals, or for other military purposes. Schools since had to be combined, classes enlarged and the number of lessons hours reduced. So much the longer are children without control. Another danger in the present situation arises from the demand for juvenile labor. Little porters hang around the markets and the station and earn as much as $2 a day or more and find, in their avocations, an easy road to crime. What is to be done? Where can the children be sent? Nearly all the industrial schools and reformatories have been turned into hospitals. This is not a good time for the youth of Germany.

Colored Hero's Career

More Liquors During War

In the first six months of 1915 the money spent by the people of Great Britain on wine and alcoholic liquor exceeded by $40,000,000 the amount spent during the same period of 1914.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

LADY'S SKIRT.

By Anabel Worthington.

7670

The more dressy we want our dress to be, the greater the liberty in combining materials, just at the moment. There is, however, the need of artistic touches in containing materials, or the dress may be transformed into a garment that will fall short of the really fashionable and attractive design we can make from a dependable pattern. The chance for individual arrangement so that the dress really looks as if it belonged to the wearer is given in many of the new models, one of which is illustrated in No. 7,670. We have here a lady's dress with a one piece gathered skirt, one in which there is a perfect blend of the goods used to complete it and the pattern of which may be adjusted to give the effect shown in the smaller illustration with surplice closing, if one leans to the panel suggestion in front, by having the section to the right and left of the centre front mark the beginning and ending of the bands that go "round and round." The waist is in the fulness that is the mode; the stylish collar appears to wed itself to the revers that are in pointed effect, and which are embellished and fastened to the fronts with buttons. The long loose sleeves have a soft cuff that brocades the wrist with shirring, and a belt may be plain or have sash ends. Silk or satin is used to trim the skirt at yoke and knee depths and at the hem; the collar and revers are of the same material. This model may be made of one material, omitting entirely the banding that appears on the skirt.

The pattern is cut in sizes 34, 36, 38, 40 inches. For size 36, the width of the lower edge is 2½ yards. In this size, 3½ yards 40 inch material were used with 1½ yards 36 inch silk to trim.

To obtain the pattern send 6c. coins to the office of this publication.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 10 cents, or 2 for 25c.

The Germans Lose Heavily In Their Attack On Malancourt

French Still Hold Outskirts in Spite of Terrible Sacrifices of the Enemy---Bombardment Has Gone On With Redoubled Violence But the Germans Are Able to Make Little Headway.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

PARIS (Official Statement) March 31.—In the Argonne district we have repulsed two attacks with hand grenades directed against our positions to the north of Avocourt. To the west of the River Meuse the bombardment of Malancourt has gone on with redoubled violence. Last night the Germans delivered a series of attacks in massed formation. They advanced from three sides at a time upon the village which formed the advanced salient of our line, and which sheltered one of our battalions. After furious fighting all night long, which entailed considerable sacrifices on the part of the enemy, our troops evacuated the ruined village, but we still hold its outskirts.

To the east of the River Meuse the night passed quietly.

In the Woevre district the Germans endeavoured on three separate occasions to capture from us a work to the east of Haudiomont, but all their advances were repulsed. There has been no occurrence of importance on the remainder of the front.

NO PATRIOTIC FUND FOR FORESTRY UNIT

The following notice has been received by the local branch of the Canadian Patriotic Fund from the head office of the Fund:

Dear Sir,—At a meeting of the Executive committee of the Canadian Patriotic Fund, held at Ottawa on March 23rd, it was unanimously decided that the 224th Battalion, commonly known as the Forestry Battalion, could not be regarded as coming into the same category as combatant units and that the families of men serving in that battalion should not be entitled to assistance from the Fund.

If, however, a man whose family is already being assisted by the Fund, having enlisted in a combatant battalion, is transferred at the will of the militia authorities and NOT AT HIS OWN REQUEST, into the Forestry Battalion, his family is entitled to special consideration and may be assisted at the usual rates. Also if a member of the Forestry Battalion is transferred to a combatant battalion, his family also may be given special consideration.

Yours truly,
PHILIP H. MORRIS,
Asst. Secretary.

Havelock Liquor Case Dismissed

Magistrate Langley Gave Judgment This Morning in the County Police Court

In this morning's session of the County Police Court, judgment was given by Magistrate Langley in the case of J. S. Whitney, of Havelock, who was charged with keeping liquor for sale without a license. The case was dismissed.

The date of the alleged offence was on March 4th, 1916, when, according to the evidence, Inspector Williams entered the premises and seized six bottles of rye whiskey, and one bottle of brandy.

The judgment in part is as follows: "Is the quantity found so great that it is unreasonable to suppose it could be intended for the use of himself and family? On this point the case is very near the line, and I have given it much thought and consideration, and I am not prepared to find that the quantity is so great as to form the conclusive evidence under the section. I have found no reported case where conviction was based solely on the presumption raised by the section and where the quantity is shown by the report.

"Had there been any other evidence which might lead to a reasonable deduction that the liquor was kept for sale in conjunction with the proof of quantity, outside entirely of the section, a prima facie case might have been made out, but there is no such evidence whatever."

MAY BE HANGED AS A PIRATE

Special to The Examiner.

LEWES, Del., March 31.—Ernest Schiller, the 24 year-old German who, single-handed, captured a British ship, just outside New York harbour, may be hanged by the British authorities as a pirate. Schiller is held here while the Delaware authorities are puzzling over what disposition they shall make of the case. If it is proven that the steamer Matoppa was outside the three-mile limit when the stowaway held her up, he belongs legally in a class with Captain Kidd, in "committing an act of piracy on the high seas."

CHILD'S FEET HAD BEEN FROZEN FOR AT LEAST TEN DAYS

According to Medical Testimony in Preliminary Hearing on Charge of Neglect and Abandonment of Evelyn Glover, Against Two Women of Smith Township

CASE BEING HEARD TO-DAY

Mrs. W. J. Tully and Miss Edith Tully, of Smith Township, appeared before County Magistrate Langley this morning, charged under the Children's Aid Act, with neglect and abandonment of Evelyn Glover, a ten-year-old child. Crown Attorney Hatton conducted the prosecution, while Mr. G. N. Gordon appeared for the accused. Mr. Jos. Wearing was present in the interests of the Children's Aid Society. On behalf of his clients, Mr. Gordon did not plead nor elect. The preliminary hearing was then proceeded with. Two witnesses were heard when the Court adjourned until 2:15. The little girl was brought from Nicholls Hospital in the ambulance to the Court House, and reclined on a stretcher in the Court Room during part of the trial. Later she was removed to an ante-room.

The Mother's Story.

Mrs. Edith Glover, mother of the child, called, said she lived on Knox street, Ashburnham. She was the wife of Robt. Glover. Evelyn Glover was her child. She didn't know Mrs. Tully. She first saw Miss Tully on January 11th, when she came to her house. The little girl had met her at the Post Office and came over with her. Miss Tully wanted to engage an older brother, but the little fellow was laid up, so Evelyn said she would go until she could get a boy. She was to help Miss Tully and go to school. The latter said she generally engaged a boy to do the chores. Witness told defendant that Evelyn had never been on a farm before. She didn't say as to what the chores would be. Miss Tully stated that there was her mother and herself, who resided on the farm. The school teacher boarded with her. Mrs. Glover only saw Miss Tully once afterwards. Her child, she stat-

THE ANNIVERSARY OF ST. JULIEN WILL BE OBSERVED IN CANADA

Government Asks People Generally to Fly Their Flags on the Anniversary of the Canadians' Gallant Stand ---Pte. Rogers Killed--To-day's Orders and General Military News.

OTTAWA, March 30.—The anniversary of the Battle of Ypres, the famous struggle of April 22, 1915, when the Canadians fought a great and gallant and successful fight against the Huns, will be celebrated officially in Canada by the hoisting of flags on all public buildings.

The Government in a notice issued to-night expresses the hope that private citizens will also fly flags on that day in commemoration of the splendid stand of the Canadians and as a mark of Canadian determination to carry on the work of the men who died at Ypres for freedom.

KILLED IN ACTION

Well Known City Hockey League Player Gives Life For Empire

A well known young Peterborough member of the 21st Battalion, C.E.F., has given his life for the Empire. Yesterday Mrs. Joseph Rogers, Brown street (Browntown) received official news from the Adjutant General's Department, Ottawa, that her son, Pte. Joseph H. Rogers, had been killed in action on March 16, having been shot through the heart. Pte. Rogers, who was known to his many friends in Peterborough as "Scottie," was born in Canada about twenty years ago. By hockey fans he will be remembered as a member of the Boston Exploits hockey club, playing with that team in its first year and two years ago acting as spare when the Exploits won the City League championship. He was a genial, bright youngster and the news of his death will bring grief to a large circle of friends. Pte. Rogers did not pass the medical examination here for the 21st Battalion, but went to Lindsay, where he was accepted, and he went to Kingston with the detachment. He was a member of No. 3 company of the 21st Battalion, which contains all the Peterborough boys in that unit.

Pte. Rogers' father, Gunner Joseph Rogers, enlisted here a short time ago with the 52nd Battery and is stationed at Kingston. Maxwell, a brother of Pte. Rogers, is on munition work in the Ross Rifle Works, Quebec. His mother resides on Brown street.

As far as is known, Pte. Rogers is the first Peterborough member of the 21st Battalion to be killed.

FOUND IN HOSPITAL

Lance-Corp. Clayton Martin Had Been Reported Missing Since January

Mrs. G. H. Martin, 104 Aylmer street, has received a letter from her son, Lance Corporal Clayton Martin of the 13th Battalion, C.E.F., France. Lance Corporal C. Martin left Peterborough with the 39th Battalion and later transferred to the 13th Battalion (Royal Highlanders of Montreal). He has been reported missing since January last, but has turned up in a hospital in France, where he has been confined with rheumatism and only five minutes' walk from where his brother, Pte. Chas. Martin, is stationed.

In referring to the big military parade in Port Hope Wednesday The Guide says: The announcement that forty of fifty officers and Sergeants would be let loose upon the community to gather in recruits, reminded many young men about town that they had pressing business in Toronto and Peterborough. That shows that these men have consciences that are bothering them and in due time they will come to a right mind when they will be able to walk the streets with heads erect.

OTTAWA, March 30.—"The Government has always taken pains to ascertain the views of the Imperial authorities, especially the views of the War Office, with regard to such matters," was the reply of Sir Robert Borden to an enquiry by Hon. Charles Marcil in the House to-day, as to whether the decision of the Administration to enlist 500,000 Canadians for overseas service was reached after conference with the British authorities.

The Premier responded in the negative to a question as to whether anything had occurred since the beginning of the year to induce the Government to change its mind as to the number to be enrolled in the expeditionary forces. He said that the way required to prepare such a force for the field depended on conditions which could not at present be foreseen and that reasonable regard should be had for the necessities of agriculture and other industries.

The period involved in getting troops ready for action had varied. Six months might be taken as the minimum time required to prepare infantry for the front. A longer time was needed for other arms of the service.

Sir Robert told Mr. Marcil that since the war began 290,000 men of all rank had been enrolled; there were, approximately, 112,000 in England and at the front, and, approximately 135,000 still in Canada.

Casualties of every description amounted to 22,000 and wastage accounted for 21,900 more men.

The total expenditure of Canada for war purposes up to the end of February, 1916, was approximately $187,000,000.

ROYAL COMMISSION WILL INVESTIGATE

Partial Inquiry into Kyte Charges in Regard to Fuse Contracts Will Be Made—Sir Wilfrid is Not Satisfied.

SAM HUGHES RETURNING

OTTAWA, March 30.—Sir Wm. Meredith, Chief Justice of Ontario, and Mr. Justice L. P. Duff, of the Supreme Court of Canada, acting as a Royal Commission, have been asked by Premier Borden to conduct an inquiry into certain fuse contracts led by the Shell Committee.

The announcement was made by Sir Robert when Parliament met to-day. It epitomized the Government's concession to the demand of Sir Wilfrid Laurier as outlined in the Liberal leader's resolution calling for a thorough and complete investigation by a specially-appointed committee of the Commons. It defined the Government's effort to placate many conscientious members supporting the Administration who insisted upon the Premier abandoning his declared intention to refuse all inquiry.

Proposal is Unacceptable.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier frankly told the Premier that the latter's partial and restricted proposal was "absolutely unacceptable" as a solution of the very serious disclosures which have shocked Parliament and Canada. The Liberal leader regretted that he would still be obliged to press his resolution for complete investigation by the highest court of the realm which, fortunately, was in session and could proceed with its serious task with no delay.

The Premier retorted, with considerable heat, that it seemed impossible to satisfy Sir Wilfrid.

Dissatisfaction Expressed.

While the Premier's new proposal dissipates his previous declaration to Parliament that no investigation could be authorized or conducted by Canada apart from a demand from the British authorities, and that no action could be taken until the end of the war, murmurs of dissatisfaction were heard in the chamber as he presented his proposal. When he intimated that the inquiry would be restricted to fuse contracts in the United States, Mr. F. B. Carvell exclaimed, "Shame!" while Mr. G. H. Boivin observed, "with Canada's good name at stake." The Premier paused and flushed, but resumed the reading of his statement. When he concluded, however, he was accorded a round of applause from certain of his supporters.

Sir Wilfrid's View.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier rose. "I regret to say," he briefly commented, "that the proposal in its present form must be absolutely unacceptable. If the inquiry is to be conducted by a court it ought to be conducted as completely as possible by the High Court of Parliament itself. That court is now in session, and there is no higher court. I am consequently obliged to ask that the consideration of my resolution be resumed."

Sir Robert Borden replied with some heat. He was sure the appointment would fail to satisfy the Liberal leader. He was only concerned as to satisfying the people, which he believed he had done. He was convinced that the names of the two gentlemen charged with investigating would command confidence. Sir Wilfrid Laurier would have the opportunity of appointing one of the counsel to sit at the investigation. "If this does not satisfy him any efforts of mine are incapable of satisfying him," the Premier explained.

"There is one way in which to satisfy Canada," replied Sir Wilfrid, "and that is to refuse a committee with power to investigate all." The Liberal leader repeated his inquiry as to when the consideration of the resolution would be resumed.

"I will give that information later," replied Sir Robert, warmly.

PTE. JOSEPH H. ROGERS
Peterborough Member of the 21st Battalion Killed in Action

INSURANCE RATES OF THE SOCIETY LEGALLY INCREASED

James Drain, of Peterboro' Was Partially Successful in an Action Instituted Against Catholic Mutual Benefit Association

BAR PAID-UP POLICIES

Mr. Justice Middleton, in a judgment issued at Osgoode Hall yesterday, sustains the action of the trustees and grand council of the Catholic Mutual Benefit Association in raising its assessment rates in order to place the association in a solvent condition from an actuarial stand point.

The action was instituted by Mr James Drain of Peterborough with a view of obtaining an order restraining the association from putting into force a tariff of rates passed at the 1913 convention. The plaintiff maintains that the directors had no right to discriminate among members, and on his own behalf of an other member under the age of 65 maintained that the directors had no right to apply $640,000 of an accumulated reserve toward the relief of members over the age of 65 years, and declared that the money belonged to the whole association, and that the application of it as suggested would be detrimental to the other members.

The Judgment.

His Lordship, however, finds the trustees had no power to issue paid up policies to such of the members who declined to continue their payments. He said the association, like many others of a similar nature, had started out to do insurance business at inadequate rates with the result that in 1907 it was in an insolvent condition. It had a deficit of practically $5,587,500 at that time. The rates were increased and the condition of the association was much improved, but it did not place it on a sound financial basis. The Government had to threaten to force it into liquidation, unless a further increase was made in the rates and other steps were taken to put it on a sound financial basis. In accordance with the Government requirements further increases were made in the rates, but special consideration was shown members over 65 years of age. In consequence a Mr. Drain, on behalf of himself and other members, other than those over 65 years of age moved for an injunction to restrain the grand council from increasing the assessments, also for a declaration that the council had exceeded its legal powers in issuing paid-up policies. His Lordship said in a view of the fact that the plaintiff was partially successful, he would make no order regarding the costs.

Mr. D. O'Connell of Peterborough appeared for plaintiff, and Mr. G. Lynch-Staunton, K. C. for the defendant.

The use of the oxygen inhaler alone has made it possible to make balloon flights above 25,000 feet.

FRIDAY, MARCH 31, 1916

AS SOME FEEL ABOUT IT.

The City Council, which is to be commended for its energetic efforts to cut down expenses and incidentally the tax rate, is to be further commended for refraining from impairing the efficiency of the fire brigade by applying the salary cut in its case. As to the other salary reductions there is a question in some minds as to whether they were necessary, or advisable, or just. The opinion is held by some citizens that the burden of sacrifices we are called upon to bear, or have imposed upon us in this time, should be fairly distributed. It is held that for the sake of a comparatively trifling retrenchment the burden is made great by its direct incidence, instead of being distributed among and being borne, almost inappreciably, by the great mass of taxpayers who would perhaps count that as one of the most trifling sacrifices the war condition imposes. The opinion is held that the ratepayers, who as a rule are prosperous, with plentiful employment at good wages, would not have complained of the little additional taxation, that would have resulted from leaving the salaries unreduced. In the long run ill-paid service is ill-made service.

IMPROVING MILK QUALITY.

Householders and all who use milk will be interested in a bill introduced by Hon. James Duff, Minister of Agriculture, to provide for paying for milk delivered to cheese factories on a basis of butter fat content, plus two, the factor, two being a well-known factor in the dairy industry, representing the content of casein. The object of the bill, which is presently educational, since it is not to come into effect till April 1st, (what omen) 1917, is to increase the study of the dairy industry in Ontario, to improve the cheese-making industry, and place the creameries and butter making upon a graded basis. It was held that the need for standardization of products and for securing uniformity, and a consequent higher reputation for Ontario dairy products justified the legislation. Mr. Gillespie, West Peterborough, formerly president of the Eastern Dairy Association, thought the bill was a move in the right direction. He thought the time was not far distant when we would have to grade cream in this Province if we wished to hold our markets. In the West much progress had been made in this respect.

JOURNAL OF COMMERCE.

The Journal of Commerce, Montreal, with a deep interest in Canadian economics and industry, and a lively conception of the basic need of the time—for Canadians—to know themselves, has inaugurated the publication of a series of industrial and educational supplements to be issued in conjunction with the Journal, at the rate of one per month. The subjects to be dealt with in articles pregnant with information, interest and inspiration, will cover every possible phase of Canadian national and industrial interest, from the knitting industry to the iron and steel industry. The first two supplements have already been issued—"Canada's Fishing Industry" and "The Sheep and Wool Industry." Each of these supplements is illustrated with photographs and drawings, helping to appreciation of the text and prepared with a view of giving full and reliable information respecting Canadian life, industry and resources. The Journal of Commerce is "a forward looking magazine, aiming to deal with the affairs of to-day and to-morrow." It has at its head, as editor-in-chief, Hon. W. S. Fielding, ex-minister (and one of the greatest) of Finance of Canada. The Journal of Commerce, indispensable to every commercial and industrial Canadian, is well worth the subscription price, $2.00 per year, as with it goes the supplements and a suitable binder for their preservation for future reference, together with a premium free to each $3.00 subscriber, a 400-page bound volume, 'Canadian Industry, Commerce and Finance.'

MONEY WASTE NOT THE WORST.

Assuming, as one is practically forced to do by the evidence submitted by Mr. Kyte to Parliament, that the charges against the Shell Committee have a basis of truth, the most important features outside the waste of money, so sorely needed for practical purposes in waging this war, are the discredit of the good name of Canada and the weakening of the effective offensive and making vain the sacrifices of Canadian and British soldiers in the field. While the Parliament of Canada without distinction of party—unanimously and gladly—have voted, for us, immense sums for war purposes, and given Canada a high name for patriotic and practical interest in the fortunes of the Empire; while Canadian soldiers in the field have been "saving the situation," sacrificing life and limb and reflecting by both individual and collective gallantry of action, the greatest glory on the Canadian name, it is heart sickening to know that at home there have been things done that quench all this blaze of gory and blacken the Canadian name in the eyes of the world; and subsisting to know that, the government, which is technically and morally, if not directly responsible for these outrageous conditions has, so far, steadfastly refused investigation that will completely refute, or confirm the truth of, the specific charges, supported by circumstantial and documentary evidence. We know that lack of munitions at critical moments have largely neutralized the costly work and made vain the sacrifice of Canadian and British soldiers by preventing them from following up initial successes achieved by their courage, resource and sacrifice. No; the waste of money is not the most serious part of the matter.

NOT ONE LONE SINNER.

Under the heading "No Toleration For Corrupt Dealing," the Toronto News has the following:

Throughout, the Borden Government has refused to condone corrupt dealing with public contracts or the public resources. It has sacrificed Conservative members of the House of Commons, and it will not hesitate to sacrifice a Minister of the Crown if that is necessary in the public interest and in order to maintain decent political conditions. The man, be he private citizen or Cabinet Minister, who uses this crisis in the fortunes of the Empire for his own advantage or carelessly allows associates to profit by his blindness or leniency can receive no consideration from the Canadian people.

The man deserves little credit for honesty and merits little the reputation of being "good pay," if, being financially able, he refuses to pay his just debt till he is forced to do so by process of law. The Borden government does not deserve any credit for lifting the lid, when they have refused to do so till it has become too hot to hold down any longer.

The Borden government has "refused to condemn corrupt dealing," only when it was driven to deal with it, by the action of the Opposition in Parliament. It has to bear the responsibility of having refused to act till forced to do so. It has also to bear the responsibility of permitting the wrong-doing it "has refused to condemn," by its slavish adherence to the patronage list, and intense deference to partisanship claims for recognition. When it and the government it supports is cornered, as a sheep will fight when brought to bay, the News becomes virtuously valiant and does not hesitate to hit a man when he is down. To wit, "it (the Borden government) will not hesitate to sacrifice a minister of the crown if that is necessary in the public (or party) interest." The minister of the crown, if he has erred, if he has permitted wrong-doing is no more properly a victim for sacrifice than the government which gave him so free a hand, and shouldered a tremendous responsibility — in its discharge, bristling with temptations and opportunities for the unscrupulous—upon one lone pair of shoulders. It is not alone the Minister of Militia that is to blame; it is not he alone who has, if he has,

"used this crisis in the fortunes of the Empire for his own advantage, or carelessly allowed his associates to profit by his blindness or leniency (and) can receive no leniency at the hands of the Canadian people."

Sharing the guilt and the responsibility of the situation, the government cannot load its sins upon the shoulders of Sir Sam as the scape goat, turn him into the wilderness, and let its guilt criminal carelessness go unnoticed. If there is any head-chopping to be done, Sir Sam Hughes, as the News hints, should not alone contribute a head to the basket.

REFLECTIONS.

It is a wonder that Sir Robert Borden can hold up his head in the day time when Sir Robert Borden realizes the harm that Colonel J. Wesley Allison has wrought to this country's industries.

It is a wonder that Sir Robert Borden can sleep at nights when Sir Robert Borden realizes that the lives of Canada's sons must be jeopardized by the prolongation of this war, also that this war might have been shortened by Canada's output of completed shells, an output that was throttled by the J. Wesley Allison annex to the Borden Government.—Toronto Telegram (Conservative).

CONSERVATIVE SUMMARY OF SHELL COMMISSION CHARGES

The following summary of the Kyte Shell Committee charges made in the House on Tuesday night, with the associated comments, is taken from the Ottawa Journal, Conservative:

A sensational turn was reached in the shell debate yesterday. George W. Kyte, Liberal member for Richmond, N.S., made charges and allegations which, if they are true, place Col. J. Wesley Allison, "friend, counsellor and adviser," of General Sir Sam Hughes, in a very serious light, and will not redound to the credit of the Minister of Militia himself, nor of general Bertram, head of the old shell committee.

It had been arranged between the two parties to take a vote upon Sir Wilfrid Laurier's resolution, calling for an investigation of the operations of the old shell committee, last night. But following Mr. Kyte's speech, Hon. W. T. White addressed the House for about half an hour and asked leave to move the adjournment of the debate. It will be resumed on some future date to be decided upon to-day.

Mr. Kyte's charges—if that term can be properly applied to what he alleged—came near the close of a speech which occupied nearly four hours in delivery. Briefly, they are as follows:—

On the 25th day of May, 1915, the American Ammunition Company was incorporated in the State of Virginia with an authorized capital of $1,000,000, but with only a subscribed capital of $1,000. The company was authorized to manufacture shells, cartridges, fuses, etc. One E. B. Cadwell became its president.

About two weeks later—June 9th—the International Arms and Fuse Company was incorporated in the State of New York, with an authorized capital of $1,500,000, but with a subscribed capital of only $2,000. The officials of this company were dummies, and, as in the other company, they were authorized to manufacture munitions of war.

Neither of the foregoing companies were in possession of a plant but were organized for the purpose of entering into fuse contracts with the Canadian shell committee.

On June 10th three Americans, E. B. Cadwell, head of the newly organized American Ammunition Company, one B. F. Yoakum, of New York, and E. W. Bassick, of Bridgeport, Connecticut, all connected with the two above mentioned companies—SAT DOWN AND SIGNED A FORMAL AGREEMENT BY WHICH THEY APPORTIONED AMONG THEMSELVES AS COMMISSION ONE MILLION DOLLARS OF MONEY THEY WERE TO GET FROM THE CANADIAN SHELL COMMITTEE FOR A CONTRACT FOR 2,500,000 FUSES THEY HAD BEEN PROMISED BY GENERAL BERTRAM, HEAD OF THE COMMITTEE.

NINE DAYS LATER—ON JUNE 19—THEY GOT CONTRACTS FOR $22,600,000 WORTH OF FUSES.

The contracts were awarded to the two companies.

The day the contracts were awarded them the shell committee advanced them the sum of $9,166,000. Within four months they received an additional cash advance of $1,083,300—making a total advance of $3,250,000.

ONE OF THE MEN WHO CAME IN ON THE MILLION DOLLAR DIVISION, B. F. YOAKUM, OF NEW YORK, LATER ASSOCIATED HIMSELF WITH A PARTNERSHIP FORMED BETWEEN COL. J. WESLEY ALLISON, GENERAL HUGHES' FRIEND, and EUGENE LIGNANTI, LEADER OF THE ORCHESTRA IN THE RITZ-CARLTON HOTEL, MONTREAL.

Lignanti, the orchestra leader, had a dispute with Allison and Yoakum, and was retired from the partnership on the payment to him of fifty thousand dollars.

There were other contracts with the shell committee by which Lignanti was to receive $806,000, and Allison and Yoakum $1,600,000 to divide among them.

The two companies—those incorporated in New York and Virginia, agreed to the speedy delivery of fuses, but in spite of the three million dollars advanced them by the shell committee, practically no fuses were furnished by them for nearly a year.

Of the five million fuses contracted for, only 448,000 had been delivered up to the fourteenth day of the present month.

Mr. Kyte's charges, to say the very least, created somewhat of a sensation. They were read from what appeared to be the actual agreements entered into between the alleged profiteers. Where they came from and how they found their way into the hands of the Opposition is a mystery. But they bore all the hall-marks of genuineness, and were sent across the floor of the House to Hon. T. W. White for examination.

JUDGING FROM CORRIDOR TALK FEELING AMONG THE CONSERVATIVE MEMBERS AGAINST COL. ALLISON'S CONNECTION WITH GENERAL HUGHES WAS ROUSED TO THE BOILING POINT. Groups of government supporters were seen here and there in the lobbies discussing the situation, and word got about that there was a serious schism within the party as to the best course to pursue. General Hughes has never been overwhelmingly popular with certain members of his own party, and the old antipathy towards him, accentuated by Mr. Kyte's charges in connection with Allison, undoubtedly stirred up a feeling of deep resentment against what the Minister of Militia on a certain occasion characterized as the "Hughes-Allison system." It was hinted that the decision of the government to adjourn the debate was largely influenced by the attitude of this section of the party.

UP TO SIR ROBERT BORDEN.

The disclosures at Ottawa in regard to the shell committee have startled the country. There may be an explanation of the transactions of J. Wesley Allison and associates, but we can imagine none; and Sir Sam Hughes, in his speeches in Parliament went out of his way to couple himself up with Allison; the two therefore, must go together in the conclusions reached by the public. Nor will the people take long to pass judgment.

In the meantime Sir Robert Borden can save the people a lot of suspense by making a quick investigation of the charges himself and there upon acting on his own responsibility.—Toronto World (Conservative).

It Made a Difference.

A Chinaman of noble birth had been invited to dine at William's home. His mother was very anxious that the guest should not be made uncomfortable by the little chap's curiosity, so she took him aside and explained all about the yellow skin, long braid of hair and almond eyes of the Mongolians and even showed him pictures of Chinese. She impressed upon him more than anything else the fact that the visitor was his father's friend and was to be treated with respect. Upon the Celestial's arrival William tried hard not to stare or look too curious and succeeded in being very quiet for some time, when, much to the surprise of his mother and the amusement of the Chinese, he called out, "Mamma, if he wasn't our friend wouldn't he be funny?"—Bellman.

Diving For Fish.

An Arab pilot on board an English ship becalmed in the Persian gulf had been amusing himself in diving for oysters. After several attempts his search proved unsuccessful.

"I will now," said he to the officers of the vessel he was commissioned to convey, "since I cannot gather oysters, dive for and catch fish."

All ridiculed this idea. He went down again, and the officers were astonished to see him after a short time rise to the surface with a small rockfish in each hand. The Arab's own explanation of the feat was that as he seated himself at the bottom the fish came around him and nibbled at his skin. Watching an opportunity, he seized and secured his prey by thrusting his hands and forefinger into their expanded fins.

This Morning's Police Court

Local Man Fined Ten Dollars For Selling Cigarettes to Minors

In this morning's police court a local man was fined ten dollars for selling cigarettes to a couple of minors on Sunday last. Evidence was given by P. C. Blade to the effect that he had noticed a number of boys smoking cigarettes and upon making enquiries, located the source of supply. The defendant, who was represented in court by Mr. McElderry, said he had no recollection of the sale.

Will Pay License.

Mr. R. E. Black, acting for outside parties interested in the sale of a quantity of goods in the city, appeared in Court in respect to a charge laid under the transient traders by-law. Mr. Black assured the court that the necessary license fee of one hundred dollars would be forthcoming and in the meantime the stock, which is located in a store on George Street, will be under the supervision of Chief Thompson. Mr. Joseph Wearing appeared for the defendant.

The Question of Recruiting

Regarding the question as to how far a recruit should go in pressing enlistment:

We enjoy freedom. Is it a fact that we are in danger of losing it?

Who has the right to enjoy freedom or anything else without paying the price which it demands.

To enjoy respect one has to pay the price for it. The price is exertion on the part of the individual to place himself in a position to command respect.

Has one the right to enjoy freedom who pays no price for it?

Have others apart from such an individual no right to be considered.

Have the proper authorities not a right to demand the participation of an individual in case of emergency?

For instance in case of a fire the Chief can demand the assistance of bystanders and can prosecute such individuals in case of refusal.

In case of drowning an individual would be prosecuted if he did not give assistance, and public opinion would condemn him as a coward.

Our country is in danger and the state has a right to demand help from everyone, by claiming of fit subjects.

Have those who are risking their lives on the battle line no rights to be considered, or are the shirkers at home to have all the sympathy and consideration?

The men on the firing line are calling for help but cannot be heard here. Are we to turn a deaf ear to their appeal? Are we to say only nice and pleasant things to those who are shirking their duties at home?

If the boys on the firing line could make themselves heard they would say some things about these shirkers that some of these goodie people who have such a fine consideration for the feelings of these young men who are shirking their duties would say should not be said. I would go further and say that if these individuals who are staying at home and refusing to hear the call to do their bit belonged to any one of our allies they would soon make short work of them —they would not permit such individuals to exist and enjoy life at the expense of the generosity and manhood of their fellow countrymen. We would go still further and say if these shirkers could be reached by our own boys on the firing line they might be treated in the same way as our allies would treat their own countrymen who refuse to do their part. This is war! And we have to remember this fact that we are doing things now that we would not dream of doing in times of peace. We can't draw the fine lines during such a terrible war crisis that we do in times of peace. We are up against a hitherto unknown situation for which no legal provision has, up to the present been made, and we have to meet this new situation though it may not be along the same lines that we would meet it in times of peace.

In times of peace a man can think as he likes so long as he does no violence to anyone else, and no one will say anything to him, but people can think even in times of peace when a man does not do his part. But now we are up to the neck in the time of war, and we have a right to expect everyone who is capable to do his part, will do it, though we can't perhaps make him do it.

This country is represented by the people, has surely a right to demand that every fit and proper person should do his share to continue that freedom which they now possess. Put into force this is conscription, but before that comes we are trying to get men to go voluntarily, as volunteers make the best soldiers. We are trying to impress on the young men first that it is their duty to go. We have tried to get them to come and listen to arguments quietly, but they won't do that or perhaps they would think differently and come and enlist. We have to try and make them think by some means—try and bring them to a sense of their duty in some way. We try to coax them, which does not work—the only other way that we know to make them realise their true position is by drawing the attention of their fellows to their deficiency. This we claim is perfectly legitimate in the present crisis. The country has to be saved—this is taken for granted by general consent. If so, who is to save it? Has a shirker any right to say let those who feel it their duty to save it do so? Does not the majority rule? Has he the right to enjoy freedom without paying the price for it? Can such a shirker claim the same rights and considerations that belong and are due to manhood. We claim not. So if reason and persuasion do not appeal to such a man he forfeits the right to be treated as a man, and it is fair to make the atmosphere surrounding such an individual so uncomfortable for him that it will bring him to realise and see his duty that otherwise he would not see.

Are we to pay more attention to the shirkers at home playing hockey, at picture shows, pool rooms, etc., than we are to the call of these noble fellows on the firing line that we have sent over to fight our battles to maintain that freedom that we now possess? There are some so unjust, so unpatriotic as to say yes, or at least they act so. If anyone has any other scheme that will make such individuals realise their duty and go forward to defend their country, let them come forward and reveal it to the committee who are endeavouring to bring the hundreds of young men in this city to enlist in the service of their country. They will only be too glad to hear of such a plan if it is at all workable. If they cannot do so what do they propose to do? To lie down and allow the Huns to come over and devastate our country, our homes and our loved ones like they have done to Belgium, Serbia and Poland.

Some people, even leaders of thought, seem to imagine that there is no possibility of our defeat and losing our freedom. They are deluding a fool's paradise. They are deluding themselves. They seem to think that all the statements made by those men who are the head of affairs in England regarding the seriousness of the situation are merely scare headlines to frighten people and are merely fairy stories. Leaders of men, don't thus delude yourselves. Don't take a chance of its being false. So if it is true and we stand in danger of losing our freedom, do you realize what it means? Would you not feel and act differently if you really believed that there was any chance of your losing your freedom. You would not be so particular then to urge in such fine and tender language the young men to enlist and to prevent you and your family and your country losing their freedom. It's this ostrich like act of hiding one's head in the sand that is the cause of this slackness in recruiting. Once get over the delusion that our side will win, no matter what may happen, and realise that our country is in danger and every leader of men and every woman will exchange the very atmosphere we live in that no man that is fit to go will remain at home or will dare to show his face on the streets if he is physically fit. Until we get rid of this delusion, recruiting will not proceed as it should. Don't let us have any further delusion and imagine that this is not our war as much as it is England's war.. Anyone who has studied the situation and has read the writings of the men who have guided the destinies of Germany knows that Germany had reached such a state of development that they had to have other colonies to which they could send their surplus of their vast manufacturies. Is it any wonder that they should cast their eyes of this fair Dominion of ours with its vast resources of timber, its endless plains of agricultural lands, its limitless water powers, its unknown wealth in minerals? Make no mistake, this was a prize worth striving for and the kultured (with a K) Germans knew it. Canada was to be the prize that the British nation would have to give when the time for settlement for peace came. Don't delude yourselves; this is a fact that anyone who has studied the question knows to be a fact. It may seem like a fairy story to many, but as we have said already, though they may act like the ostrich and hide their heads, the fact remains that Germany is after Canada. Are we to wait till the war is over and perhaps defeated and the peace terms are about to be settled before we realise that we are fighting for our own country, Canada.

To further delude themselves they say that Canada has done well. If we say so we do not do so with a full knowledge of the facts before us. We don't begin to compare with what England has done. England has an army of between four and five million men out of a population of about forty million, or about 1 man in 8 or 9. Canada has raised about 280,000 men (only about 120,000 are at the front), with a population of about 8 million or about 1 in 30. Is this a fair proportion? To be anything near what England has done we should have raised about four times as many as we have raised or about a million men. We have the men if it is absolutely necessary to put men in the field to save us. But how are we going to get them into khaki? That is the question that is agitating the minds of those who are assisting the military authorities at the present moment. Of course if we have conscription that would settle the question at once and there would be no questions as to how any fit and proper person who should go may feel about it.

Conscription is the only fair and equitable plan of enlistment. Lt.-Col. Mulloy says of the volunteer system: It is ineffective, unreliable, inequitable, undemocratic, prodigally wasteful of economic energy. It lacks dignity. It smacks of insincerity and moral weakness, if not hypocrisy. It is the refuge of the slacker. It cannot claim to be the child of "hoary antiquity." It never has been the British system, which is the militia levy. Though might is not right, rights must be supported by right."

If we had conscription we would not see the unjust and inequitable conditions that we see in so many instances at present of whole families of boys going to the call of their country, and other whole families of boys staying at home. Is such a state of affairs just? No one with a full sense of manhood will say it is.

Conscription does not mean that everyone has to go, but it takes into consideration all the facts connected with each man. It divides all men into groups according to their fitness and responsibilities to go. For instance if a man though single is the only support of a widowed mother or the family, he would be among the last class to go. If a number of boys are in a family only a fair proportion would be called upon to go. Single men would be called before married men, etc. If such a system were in vogue, and it surely will be if the 500,000 men which the military authorities have called for are to be raised in anything like a reasonable time.

It is an old saying that one volunteer is as good as two pressed men, so if we can't have the volunteers let us have the pressed men—better have half a loaf than no bread—better do the best we can to save our freedom.

The Recruiting Committee.

SAYS BODY IS A POISON FACTORY

Urges Everyone to Drink Glass of Hot Water Before Breakfast.

Just as coal when it burns, leaves behind a certain amount of incombustible material in the form of ashes, so the food and drink taken day after day leaves in the alimentary canal a certain amount of indigestible material, which if not completely eliminated from the system each day, becomes food for the millions of bacteria which infest the bowels. From this mass of left-over waste, toxins and ptomainelike poisons are formed and sucked into the blood.

Men and women who can't get feeling right must begin to take inside baths. Before eating breakfast each morning drink a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it to wash out of the thirty feet of bowels the previous day's accumulation of poisons and toxins and to keep the entire alimentary canal clean, pure and fresh.

Those who are subject to sick headache, colds, biliousness, constipation, others who wake up with bad taste, foul breath backache, rheumatic stiffness, or have a sour, gassy stomach after meals, are urged to get a quarter pound of limestone phosphate from the drug store, and begin practicing internal sanitation. This will cost very little, but is sufficient to make anyone an enthusiast on the subject.

Remember inside bathing is more important than outside bathing, because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood, causing poor health, while the bowel pores do. Just as soap and hot water cleanses, sweetens and freshens the skin, so hot water and limestone phosphate act on the stomach, liver kidneys and bowels.

VETS. ALLOWED ONE GALLON

Temperance Act Revised—Bill in Printed Form States Amount To Be Sold—Wine Can Be Delivered

The demand for horses may not be so large now that the provisions of the Ontario Temperance Act have been subjected to more or less revision. Vetinary surgeons, under the act as it appears in printed form, can only have one gallon of whisky for use in their business, instead of two gallons, as appeared in the original draft given in the press. The bill was distributed among the members to-day, but it is not likely to come up for discussion until Tuesday of next week.

Painting may become a popular pastime throughout the province as the result of a provision which allows any retail druggist to administer not more than six ounces of liquor to a person who has fainted on or near the premises, or who has been injured. The Act clearly defines the amounts of liquor that can be sold by either a wholesale druggist or a retail druggist.

WHAT THEY MAY SELL.

Wholesale druggists can sell ten gallons for mechanical or scientific purposes, or not more than five gallons to a physician, retail druggist, hospital or sanitarium. Retail druggists can fill physician's prescriptions, sell a pint to a dentist personally or a gallon to a veterinary surgeon. There is no limit on the size of a prescription that can be filled on a doctor's order. A dentist is allowed to administer part of his pint to a patient if he deems it needed.

The Act allows the sale and delivery throughout the province of native wines made from grapes produced in Ontario. A space is left for the stipulation of how strong temperance drinks can be. One clause says that liquor can be brought into the province by carrier or other conveyance, and delivered to any dwelling. A dwelling is defined as a house where not more than three lodgers live, in addition to the family. An apartment is a dwelling.

TELL OR GO TO PRISON.

Licenses issued by the new board shall expire on the 30th of April of each year and the board has full power to cancel or deal in any way with licenses on its own discretion. No person in the province can sell liquor unless having a license. A physician can carry two quarts with him for the treatment of patients. Any druggist who receives other than cash of its equivalent for liquor will be guilty of an offence and he is not allowed to accept money in advance for liquor.

Another provision of the Act is that any person found intoxicated in a public place shall tell where they obtained the liquor or else go to prison for three months or until they give the information.

FRENCH YOUTH A BATTLE HERO

PARIS, March 31.—Marcel Marco, who lies in a Paris hospital wounded all over and horribly burned about the legs, received the French War Cross to-day.

When the war broke out Marco was a striplihg, slender as a girl, with beardless face, eyes large and black, and hands as white as a woman's. At Verdun the other day he gladly faced almost certain death. He emerged with a body like a mere, a leg broken above the knee and a hand that was a shapeless mass. His gallantry won him the coveted decoration.

A few hours before the French evacuated one of the hills defending Verdun the commandant of a battalion picked the youngster for a daring mission. The French planned to steal away from the hill silently during the night. Marco was to stay behind, conceal himself and take special note of the emplacement of enemy artillery when the Germans arrived. Then, when night came, he was to fire off a colored light, so that the French could get the range of the German battery and destroy it.

HID IN TREE.

Marco hid in a hollow tree. Through a knothole he watched the arrival of the Germans and the placing of the artillery. At nightfall he crept out, set off a yellow light with his cigarette's lighter, and dodged back into his tree.

Now he heard loud oaths all about him as Germans searched the woods for the man who set off the light. Then he heard a crackling. They had set the woods on fire to burn him out as one does a rabbit. He gave himself up for lost.

SHELL HIT HIDING PLACE.

Another sound crashed in his ear. The French were blazing away in response to his signal. The smoke was hurting his eyes. He hoped a shell would end his existence before the flames reached his tree. Then there was an ear-splitting bang—the tree flew into a thousand pieces and his light went out.

When he came to he was in a farm house. His light had enabled the French to destroy the German battery and recapture the position. They told him how they found him unconscious, in the burning wood, with the flames licking his legs.

STRIKE LEADERS ARE DEPORTED

LONDON, March 31.—Three more leaders of the striking munitions workers in the Clyde district were deported yesterday, making eleven in all.

Two Socialist speakers were arrested this morning for inciting munitions workers on the Clyde to strike. It is expected the Government, now that it has the support of the Labor party, will take energetic measures to put an end to the trouble, proceeding against all the leaders of the movement.

Troops have been sent into the Clyde district to quell violence. However, before they arrived, considerable damage had been done at some places to ammunition factories.

It is charged that German agents have been at work stirring up trouble among the workmen and some persons believe that there is a relationship between the strike of the munition workers and the walkout of the dock hands on the Mersey river. Attempts by the Government to end the strike of dock workers have failed. Leaders of the union appeald to th men to go back to work, but they refused. Shipment of war supplies from the Mersey is being retarded.

Morris Ginsberg of Chicago, swallowed all his wealth, two nickels and a quarter in an effort to die, but physicians say he'll cough up rather than cash in.

Death Blow to the Pretence That Latest Shell Scandal Revelations Do Not Warrant Investigation

The lid is off at Ottawa. Further pretence that the revelations made do not warrant an inquiry into the operations of the Shell Committee will be received with indigation by the Canadian people. The excuse that the Committee was responsible to the Imperial Government, and that any investigation must be made by authority of Mr. Lloyd George can no longer be advanced without bringing Sir Robert Borden's Ministry into contempt.

Documents have been produced and read in the House of Commons showing that one of the most scandalous transactions ever carried out by a group of high finance bandits was formally endorsed and ratified in the following terms:

"I, Major-General the Hon. S. Hughes, Minister of Militia and Defence of the Dominion of Canada, in accordance with authority duly conferred upon me by his Britannic Majesty's Government, here by ratify and confirm on its behalf the foregoing agreement between the American Ammunition Company, incorporated, and the Shell Committee. Dated at Ottawa Canada, this 19th day of June, A. D., 1915."

What was this agreement so unreservedly ratified and confirmed by the Canadian Minister of Militia and Defence? The American Ammunition Co. was a make-believe company, organised by dummy directors and officers under the laws of the State of Virginia three weeks before the agreement was made between it and his Britannic Majesty. Its authorized capital was a million dollars, but only $1,000 was subscribed. This company, without plant, or factory or assets, or any means of carrying on business, was awarded a contract by General Bertram and the Shell Committee, with the approval of General Hughes, for 1,666,666 graze fuses for projectiles at $4 each, and 833,334 time fuses at $4.50 each.

On this huge contract, involving almost ten and a half million dollars, a cash advance of $1,041,000 was made on the day the contract was signed, and another cash advance of $690,000 was made four months afterwards. These sums should have been sufficient to build and equip at least four up-to-date fuse factories of large capacity There was the most urgent need of projectiles, for at that time the Russians were being driven out of Poland for lack of shells, and Canadian factories were piling up shells that were useless without fuses. Yet more than six months after the contract was made the American Ammunition Co. had not delivered a single one of the 633,334 time fuses it had contracted to supply, and only 160,000 of the graze fuses. Under similar circumstances a contract was entered into with another mushroom concern, the International Arms & Fuse Company, and this organization two weeks ago had delivered only 6,000 fuses out of a total of 2,500,000 contracted for, and upon which cash advances of $1,687,000 had been made by the Shell Committee.

Why this criminal delay? Who was behind the scenes influencing the Shell Committee and securing vast contracts for irresponsible middlemen without means to manufacture the articles they had contracted to supply? The sinister figure of Col. J. Wesley Allison, the confidential friend of the Minister of Militia is seen in the background. B. F. Yoakum, who secured a rake-off of $475,000 for "negotiating and effecting the contract with the Shell Committee," out of a total of a million dollars divided between the middlemen involved, was a partner of Col. Wesley Allison, and documents exist showing that Allison, under this partnership agreement, was entitled to receive a portion of the rake-off on the American Ammunition Company's contract.

Was that commission paid to Allison and to Yoakum out of the cash advances made to the company which should have been spent on the purchase of material and the equipment of factories for the manufacture of urgently required munitions? That question must be answered. If Sir Robert Borden does not permit an inquiry by the Public Accounts Committee or some other competent tribunal he and his Government should be forced to go before the electorate to defend their refusal. Canada's honour is involved in the disclosures made by Mr. Kyte. A group of Canadians appointed by Mr. Lloyd George on the nomination of the Government of Canada to manage the manufacture of munitions in Canada refused to take steps looking to the making of fuses in the Dominion, and, with the approval of the Minister of Militia, advanced over three million dollars to a group of American middlemen to aid in the speedy turning out of fuses in the United States. Documentary evidence appears to point to the division among these middlemen—one of whom was the confidential friend of the Minister of Militia—of a rake-off amounting at a million dollars before arrangements were completed for the manufacture of the fuses.

From the Minister's confidential friend to the Minister is but a step No one has charged Sir Sam Hughes with participation in this orgy of war contract graft. But the people of Canada will not be content with negative exculpation They expect General Hughes to take the stand before a properly constituted Court of Inquiry and declare on oath that he was not a party to Allison's exploitation and obtained no advantage from it. They expect also that he will disavow any knowledge of the million-dollar rake-off and of the bogus nature of the companies which on a joint capital of $4,000, secured contracts, approved by him, aggregating twenty-one millions. Only by the most explicit disclaimers before a tribunal charged with the investigation of the whole subject will Gen era Hughes be able to dissociate himself from the dirty mess that is befouling Canada's good name. The Government must act, and act at once.

RUSSIA HAS NEW MINISTER OF WAR

LONDON, March 31.—The Russian War Minister General Alexei Polivanoff, has resigned, according to a Reuter despatch from Petrograd. General Chouvaieff has been appointed to succeed him.

General Polivanoff was relieved from office at his own request. General Chouvaieff has been director of the Commissariat Department of the Ministry of War.

General Polivanoff was appointed by the Emperor Minister of War last June to succeed General Soukhomlinoff. After General Soukhomlinoff's resignation there were reports that he had been held responsible for the shortage of munitions which had seriously interfered with the operations of the Russian army. Recently General Soukhomlinoff was removed by imperial ukase from the Council of the Empire.

The Result of Shrewd Buying

Peterborough Shoppers Little Realize What the Merchant Is Going Through

When a shopper drops into one of our city stores to purchase supplies for the home and takes a look at the well kept and complete stocks on hand, not one in a hundred realizes what the merchant is going through these days to keep his stock up to the mark. It is only the shrewd buyer in business who is able to make both ends meet and give his customers quality and price just now. While our window displays this season are equal, if not better, than anything previously presented to the public at this season, it has demanded a complete revolution in buying to accomplish this.

Markets hitherto open to the merchants are closed, and the manufacturer in the markets that are available is confronted with conditions, such as have not been known in the history of the country. From a scarcity of materials a condition is reached where some lines are off the market altogether. Prices have gone up soaring and it is not a question any more of what the manufacturer is to ask for goods as much as a question of supplying them at all. A manufacturer the other day advised a buyer to take anything he was offered at once, if he needed it, even if he thought prices were high, as he said we have not by any means reached the high-water mark of prices, and the man who hesitates is lost.

Reserve Raw Silk Low.

Owing to the fact that it is impossible to get boats to carry freight from Japan in such quantities as heretofore, stocks of silks will not be replenished as in the past.

Silk gloves will be worn more this Spring and Summer, as in many centres only small assortments of kid gloves are being received. So if you desire a new pair of kid gloves for Easter do not wait too long before getting them.

The man in business now-a-days is being tried to the limit of his capacity and Peterborough is fortunate in having been protected to such an extent as it has been by the forethough of its merchants in providing such complete and well-balanced stocks at reasonable prices under the conditions that are existing to-day

IS A MARVEL OF ORGANIZATION

NEW YORK, March 31.—The Herald correspondent in London cables as follows:

"I have just returned from a five days' trip to the British fornt in France and Flanders, during which I was permitted through the courtesy of the British Government, to pass through and along the battle lines from a village near Neuve Chapelle to a point overlooking the trenches, where the gallant Canadians are cementing the Union of the Empire with the blood of their heroes.

"I have heard the shriek over my head in places were Britain's gunners are returning two 'tits' for each German 'tat'. I have glowed with reflected enthusiasm as I gazed upon Britain's soldiers marching on the roads and over the fields of France, high spirited and hopeful, towards battlefields upon which the destinies of the world, are to be decided, and I have raised my hat in solemn homage to thousands of wasted, war worn, wounded 'Tommies,' each of whom, having done a man's full share in the 'Great Adventure,' is returning, confident that those who follow after him will wrest final victory from the foe.

BRITAIN AND FRANCE UNITED.

"My journey to the front was made while the issue of the great battle at Verdun was in the balance—it may still be—and when all the thoughts of Britain's army were with, and its prayers for, the success of General Joffre's gallant French, and my thrills over a few shells that burst within my line of vision or far over my head seem ludicrous when I have had time to read and digest the news of the fateful happenings near the gateway of Lorraine that leads to Paris.

"But though that titanic conflict overshadows the sounds of war that grated upon my untrained ears, I feel certain that readers will be interested in the news that I bring as the result of my observations.

"First—That France and Great Britain are indissolubly united as a result of their joint sacrifices.

"Second—That the soldiers of the French and British armies, from the generalissimos down to Tommy and the 'Poilu,' are sworn friends.

FOR THE "FINAL PUSH"

"Third—That the British army today is a mighty machine, becoming mightier hourly, a marvel of efficiency, and that behind it, as it continues to grow, move forward and fight, is an amazingly scientific organization, developed in less than twenty months, which provides the best of foodstuffs for the inner man and warm clothing and all other essentials for the outer man, the while it is ever forwarding troops, guns, munitions and other accessories against that great hour when the final 'great push' comes that will end the war.

Write fruit jars and jelly labels: then dip each end into paraffin and quickly press them on the jars. They will stay on better than when stuck with glue or paste.

Await Britain's Commerce Note

LONDON, March 31.—No time has yet been fixed for the despatch of the reply to the American note concerning restrictions imposed by Great Britain on maritime commerce. It is expected that the State Department of Washington soon will make an inquiry concerning the reasons for the delay.

After being changed in accordance with the desires of France, the British draft of the reply was again submitted to the French Cabinet and did not prove wholly satisfactory, one point in particular leading to some disagreement. However, it is believed a satisfactory adjustment of the views of the two nations has been reached and that the note is now complete.

It is known that no concession leading to declaration of an actual blockade is made in the note, which reiterates the principles set forth in orders in council and defends their application. In regard to the actual administration of these orders, however, some moderations are granted. These concessions are believed to be the result of suggestions made by France.

The note will be signed only by Mr. Grey, the Foreign Secretary, but a paragraph will be included stating that the French government was consulted before the reply was forwarded.

The CRESSMAN Company Limited

The Testing of Dairy Products

By Means of the "Babcock Test" —The Practical Application of the Same

The price of success is attention to detail. This fact is distinctly emphasized in a bulletin recently issued by the Dairy and Cold Storage Branch of the Federal Department of Agriculture under the title of "The Testing of Milk, Cream and Dairy By-products by Means of the Babcock Test" and written by J. F. Singleton, Chief Inspector of Dairy Products. Without being profuse Mr. Singleton tells in plain language about all that is to be told of the practical application of the test, and care that should be taken of the component parts of the apparatus, the measurements advisable and the methods that should be employed. The qualities naturally most emphasized are exactness, cleanliness and temperature. The Dairy Commissioner in his introductory says there is nothing fundamentally new in the bulletin but that the contents are presented with such a clearness of diction and the processes so aptly set forth that the result is a reliable handbook for those who value information on the testing of milk, cream, and so on. A number of exact and plain illustrations lend additional worth to a notable bulletin, the number of which is 45 of the Dairy and Cold Storage Series and that can be had by post-free application to the Publication Branch, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

TWO SMALL BOYS DROWNED AT GALT

Were Playing on Ice When It Floated Out With Them

GALT, March 30.—A double drowning occurred this afternoon, when Thomas Arthur and Alfred Dempsey both six-year-old lads, lost their lives. With a playmate, Arthur Campbell, they got on to a piece of ice near the shore of Mill Creek and had been playing there for a short time when a floating floe struck it and it, too, started down stream. Nine-year-old Ted Wilson succeeded in rescuing Campbell, but the other boys, after being carried some distance, fell into deep water and were washed beneath the ice.

The fire brigade was called out and an effort made to recover their bodies, but so far without success.

THIRTEEN CITIES ON CREATORE TOUR

Peterborough to Be Favoure With a Concert by This Famous Band

One of the most extensive tours ever undertaken by a band organization in Canada has been arranged by Mr. Veitch, and will be performed by Creatore and his famous Italian band during May. Hitherto performances by full sized bands have been possible only in Montreal, Toronto and two or three other places; but by careful arrangement of dates, and by large guarantees, the Creatore organization has been billed for forty performances, lasting over a month, and distributed among thirteen different cities. The entire band will appear in all these concerts precisely as during the engagements in Montreal and at the Toronto Exhibition last Autumn. Montreal and Toronto will have one week each, the other cities from one to four performances each. The schedule of the trip is as follows: Sherbrooke, May 3; Quebec, May 4-6; Montreal, May 8-13; Brockville, May 15; Kingston, May 17; Peterborough, May 18; Toronto, May 19-25; St. Catharines, May 26; Hamilton, May 27; Buffalo, May 28; Brantford, May 29; Woodstock, May 30; London, May 31, June 1. The Band will appear in the Peterborough Armouries on the date mentioned above, under the auspices of the 93rd Battalion. Proceeds in aid of the Battalion Fund.

W. E. LECH Manufacturing Furrier and Hatter

366 GEORGE STREET . . . . . NEAR SIMCOE ST.

Here Are Suits at $19.75

Possessing An Unusual Amount of Style and Value

THIS is going to be rather an unusual season—several reasons will make it so. The Manufacturers are making serious complaint that they cannot get cloths to make up the garments, and the scarcity of dyes has increased the cost of the fabrics as well, making it difficult to secure fabrics of certain colours. In view of these conditions these Suits ought to be very interesting to any woman who has set a price of $19.75 to $22.50 for her new Spring Suit.

There are Suits of various kinds—a few Gabardines, mostly all-wool serges, some checks of various sizes—and every one of them in a striking, stunning style.

Other Suits from $14 to $35

PEOPLE URGED TO ECONOMIZE

British People Asked to Do Without Many Things

LONDON, March 31.—The National Organising Committee for War Savings has posters up all through Great Britain urging patriots not to use motor cars or motorcycles needlessly, to wear old clothes and cut down servants, in order to save for the war expenses. A newspaper supplements these suggestions with the following "don't list":

Don't tip waiters.
Don't waste money on cut flowers.
Don't use gas when coal is burning.
Don't forget that papers will clean many things.
Don't ride to war meetings—and especially war economy meetings—in a motor car when the tube and omnibus is available.
Don't smoke too much, or waste matches when spills will do.
Don't send letters if a postcard will suffice.
Don't cease to agitate against the maintenance of unnecessary officials in public departments.
Don't neglect the value of glass bottles and jars, which schoolboys are collecting in some parts of the country, or of string, waste paper and tinfoil.
Don't think of what you want.

Deposited Cinders at the "Sink Hole"

The "sink hole" is a familiar term among G.T.R. employees for a short section of the Lindsay line at Lily Lake. Last night about a dozen cars of cinders were deposited along the track at that place the higher water having crept up the railway bed almost to the rails. It is a rather cosy spot and has previously caused trouble but its behaviour in the last five springs has been exemplary.

Royal Commission Will Investigate

Effort to Do Little as Possible.

Mr. Carvelh, in a subsequent statement, took the ground that the Premier's proposal seemed to be an effort to placate the public and yet do as little as possible. The Premier had denied the full probe of a Parliamentary inquiry freed from ordinary legal limitations, and had restricted the investigation to contracts in the United States, where the Commission would have no power to summon witnesses or compel them to answer questions. Mr. Carvell believed that the disclosures and the situation were too serious to permit of any further sidestepping of the fullest and most direct investigation.

"London, Mar. 30th, 1916.

'Prime Minister,
"Ottawa:

'Please state to House on my behalf that I have no improper connection with contracts referred to or any other contracts. If any suggestion to the contrary is made I respectfully demand full investigation by the judicial tribunal presided over by Sir Charles Davidson. I shall sail first available boat.

"'Sam Hughes.'

"A good squirrel should take better care of nuts. This nut is gone' Luther Viden psychologist, who was declared insane, left this note behind had escaped from the Elgin Asylum, at Chicago.

SPECIAL FEATURES

RELIEF FOR BELGIANS

German Ships to be Allowed to Carry Supplies.

LONDON, March 31.—Announcement was made in the House of Commons by Lord Robert Cecil, Minister of War Trade, that the British Government, after consultation with its allies, had decided to permit the American Commission for Relief of Belgium to charter German steamships in neutral ports through a Dutch company, on strict conditions which would ensure that no appreciable benefit would accrue to Germany.

Lord Robert added it was the purpose of the Government to continue the facilities hitherto afforded the commission so long as it maintained proper relations with the German Government.

DAWSON BROS. NORTH-END STORE

The live corner grocery of Dawson Bros., on George Street, south of London Street, had enlarged its capacity to about six times what the store formerly was. More attention is now being given to a well-kept and well-stocked meat and provision department, which has been alloted a new section to itself adjoining the grocery department. Customers can now select their Swift's breakfast bacon, fish, eggs, butter, green vegetables, etc., with comfort. The ice cream parlour has been extended into a cosy quarter, where delicious light refreshments can be served in a bright and refined manner. The store has been still further improved and brightened by new additions to the soda water and refreshment section, where summer beverages and fruit flavours may be had for the asking. The whole store has a sort of "Come-in-and-have-a-look" invitation about it; and, as the business is increasing daily, it shows that the North-Enders can appreciate up-to-dateness in this live grocery and provision store. A few dollars spent in store advertising would arouse further interest.

The girl students at Barnard and Teachers College, New York have been forbidden to wear sleeveless gowns any more.

FIVE FEET OF WATER IN WM. HAMILTON SHOPS

Yesterday's Inundation Was Even Worse Than That on Wednesday

Wm. Hamilton Company's yard and shops were flooded yesterday afternoon even worse than on the previous day. Ice that had caught on the west side of Park Street forced its way through or was loosened by workmen and with a rush swept down to the factory and the G.T.R. bridge, where it carves at the foot of the Stewart Street hill. Against this bridge it formed a solid barrier of ice. The water retained by this dam rose until it overflowed the rail-way, washed away the ground from beneath the rails and sluiced over into the street near by. It backed into the Hamilton Company's yards and reached a depth of five feet in several of the shops, especially in the machine shop. Fortunately the flood subsided as quickly as it was formed, but it had considerably mussed up the premises and caused a further suspension of work.

U. S. TROOPS CLOSE TO VILLA

Examiner Special:

SAN ANTONIA, Tex., March 31.—American troops have caught up with Francisco Villa, fired upon a portion of his forces, and are now making a tremendous effort to check his long flight and force him to fight. After a week of hard marching, Villa's main force has been located working along the railroad which extends south from Guerrero, and the rear guard was fired upon by the pursuing American troops.

BISHOP FALLON RECRUITING.

WEDDING BELLS

FOWLER—DOAN

On March 27th a very pretty wedding took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. D. R. Doan, Welland, Ont., when their eldest daughter, Helen Pearl, was united in the holy bonds of matrimony to Mr. W. Bruce Fowler, formerly of Peterborough. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Mr. Bradshaw. Miss Ethel Fowler of Peterborough, sister of the groom, was bridesmaid, while Mr. George Henry of Peterborough, was best man. The bride was tastefully arrayed in dark navy blue tailored suit, with picture hat to match, and carried a handsome bouquet of white roses. The groom's gift to the the bride was a handsome set of furs; the bridesmaid received a pretty pearl neck pendant, while the best man received a watch for attachment.

The happy couple left on the evening train to spend their honeymoon in Toronto, Hamilton and Buffalo. They will reside in Welland after the wedding trip.

OBITUARY

MRS. H. SCULTZ.

The death occurred in Brantford this morning of Mrs. H. Schultz mother of Mrs. Harry Gainey, 14 Crickett Place. The deceased had lived in Peterborough, but two years ago moved to Brantford. She leaves three daughters and one son. The funeral will be held in Brantford on Monday.

SAMUEL BAYES

The death occurred on Thursday, March 23rd of Samuel Bayes, after an illness of about six months duration. The deceased was born near Castleton, in Haldimand county, on Dec. 25th, 1857, and lived on the farm until a year ago, when he came to Campbellford and had been in the employ of the Northumberland Paper Mills up to the time of his illness. Mr. Bayes was married in 1886 to Jennie Post, who with a family of one son and two daughters survives. The children are: Jason C. of Washago, Mrs. W. E. Walker of Peterborough and Maud at home.

JAMES MAY.

After a week's illness Mr. James May died last night at 9 o'clock, at St. Joseph's Hospital. He was in his 62nd year and had spent his life in this district. He was an employee of the Peterborough Lumber Co. and he was also a member of St. Peter's Court, C.O.F., and St. Peter's T.A.S. The deceased is survived by his wife and one daughter, Mary, of Wilson Hospital, and one son, James.

The funeral will be held on Sunday at 2.30 o'clock from the family residence, corner of Maria and Concession Streets, to the Church of the Immaculate Conception, and thence to St. Peter's cemetery.

MRS. THOS. HOGAN.

On Saturday, March 25, death removed one of Douro township's oldest and most respected residents in the person of Mary Brick, relic of the late Thos. Hogan. The deceased had been in indifferent health for some time but her condition had not been considered serious until a few days previous to her death. Heart trouble was the cause of death.

The late Mrs. Hogan was born in Ennismore seventy-six years ago and came to Douro township at the time of her marriage.

Three sons, Albert, Barrie, Jas., Seattle, Wash., Edward at home, and three daughters, Sister Buchmans, Ft. William, Mrs. Patrick McMurray, Douro and Miss Nellie at home, are left to mourn the loss of a loving mother. All were able to reach their mother's beside before the end came.

The funeral was held on Monday morning to St. Joseph's church, thence to St. Joseph's cemetery, Douro. The pall bearers were, Albert, James and Edward Hogan, S. Perdue, Patrick McMurray and John Brick. Those from a distance who attended the funeral were Mr. and Mrs. A. Hogan, Barrie, Sister Buchmans, Port William, Sister Delphine, Peterborough, Mr., Mrs. and Miss Brick, Ennismore, Mrs. and Mr. S. Perdue, Sr., Mr. S. Perdue, Jr., Emily, Mrs. O'Neil, Downeyville, Mrs. Powers, Ottawa, and Miss M. McMurray, Lakefield.

St. James' Church To Be Built This Year

Among the new buildings to be erected this year will be a larger St. James church at the corner of Aylmer and Romaine streets. Work will be commenced as soon as the weather permits. Plans are practically complete and, it is stated, provide for a splendid building that will amply provide for the future growth of the congregation.

A FITTING COMPLEMENT TO YOUR NEW CLOTHES

CORRECT GLOVES AND HOSIERY

How refreshing is the feeling of completeness—of "All rightness" which a woman has when she is conscious of being well dressed from hat to hosiery and gloves. Is it not important then that she should give to these the greatest of care? For poor hosiery and gloves are never a good investment. The qualities we sell are of the better sort that may be depended upon for service and satisfaction. Complete assortments of sizes and styles at a range of popular prices are now ready for your spring requirements.

More high-class hosiery would be purchased if women only realised the importance of hosiery as an item of good dressing, and more so than ever this season as the correct styles call for short skirts. Ask to see the lines mentioned below in our hosiery department.

At 50c—A splendid stocking in silk boot, each pair being strongly reinforced at toe and heel. In colours of black, white, paddy, and battleship grey.

At 75c—A range of pure spun silk stockings are now in stock of Perrin's make, and at a most moderate price. These include black, white, putty, suede, and navy blue.

At $1.25 and $1.50 — Beautiful all silk hose of richest lustre, and in Perrin's best makes, each pair being of exquisite texture, fashioned and fully made. Full range of spring shades, as paddy, green, emerald, sand, grey, and Brussels blue, also black or white.

At $2.00 — Silk Hose, made of silk glove cloth, which contains not a stitch of anything but pure spun silk throughout the entire stocking. Its elegant appearance is due to the superfine threads, evenly woven, and fully fashioned to fit smoothly and without wrinkling. Colours in black, white, pink, and pearl grey.

TURNBULLS

Child's Feet Had Been Frozen, etc.

ed, would be eleven years old on the 4th of May.

The little girl left the house at one o'clock that day to meet Miss Tully at the Post Office. It was a cold, windy day. She had two dresses and two coats on, as well as good underwear. Her boots were rather badly worn, but she had rubbers on. She took extra clothes with her, and two weeks later Miss Tully called and witness gave her another dress for her. She asked for a pair of boots, but witness told her she had a pair but couldn't find them. Miss Tully said she had a pair of hockey boots she would give her. Regarding payment, defendant was to supply board and clothes, and a little pocket money.

She never saw Evelyn again until February 26th, when she was brought home by an expressman. It was a terribly cold day. The child's clothes were rotten on her and frozen. Mrs. Glover stated that she undressed the child with difficulty, as it seemed to hurt to touch her. She was in a dirty condition. She didn't see any bruises at the time. Witness called Dr. Harvey, who came about five o'clock. Before leaving her home she was a healthy child. She had been bathed on the Saturday previous. When she came home she had moccasins on. Her feet were wrapped in old rags underneath her stockings. Her feet were black, apparently with blood poison. She has been in the hospital until brought here to-day. She has three fingers on each hand frozen. One big toe had to be removed, and part of the other.

To Mr. Gordon, witness said the reason the little boy couldn't go out with Miss Tully was because he had one of his feet frost bitten.

Dr. Harvey's Testimony.

Dr. Harvey said that he was called to the home of Mrs. Glover, Knox street, on the 26th February. He saw there, Mrs. Glover and a sick child. He found the girl in a high fever. Her hands and feet were wrapped loosely in white cotton rags. The large toes evidently had been frozen some time before. The ends were dry, dead and black. The smell of decaying flesh was very bad. He had the child removed to the hospital. She was in a serious condition. At the hospital with Dr. Moir, witness made a second examination. On her right foot, a dead patch of skin over the heel was found. A similar one was found on the outside of the foot. The two outer toes were swollen, and inflamed. The second and third toes were swollen and the skin was peeling off. The large toe was peeling and pretty nearly bare of skin. The end of it was dry, dead and black. On the left foot there was a dead patch also on the heel. The large toe was stiffness and granulating throughout its whole extent. The end was dead and black. The second toe had a blister under the end of it. The third and fourth toes were sluffing at the ends. The middle and third fingers of the right hand were encroased on the ends. They had evidently been frozen. The ends were black and dead. On the left hand the index and middle fingers were encroased, and the ends were dead. He has attended her ever since at Nicholls Hospital. She will be a cripple more or less all her life, because amputation of some of her toes was necessary. Frost bite was the cause of her condition. Dr. Harvey believed that the frost bites had occurred not less than ten days or three weeks at the outside, previous to the day he saw her.

To Mr. Gordon, witness said he could say the toes were not frozen on the 16th of January. If she complained on that date of them being frozen, it was not the frost bite he found. If tissue is once touched with frost it is more susceptible the next time. To walk must have given the child great pain for a week or ten days before.

The Manufacturers' Position.

On Thursday of next week a luncheon for the manufacturers and employees of the City of Peterborough will be held at the Oriental Hotel at one o'clock. There will be present at the luncheon Lt.-Col. J. G. Wright of the 109th Battalion, Toronto, and Mr. S. R. Parsons, President of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. In the evening a monster mass meeting will be held at the Armouries, when addresses will be given by the above mentioned speakers. The object of the meeting is to lay before the people the present existing condition of the Canadian manufacturer as effected by the war and some likely remedies for the future.

Registration Bureau.

The registration bureau at the recruiting office is being made use of and already several names have been registered. All those men who have been rejected by the medical officer and are desirous of securing positions with some of the local manufacturers are invited to make use of this system.

This week at the armouries names are being obtained of the likely batters and elimination contests will be held in order to secure the best for the Tuesday night mill. If possible a boxing class will be arranged in order to develope this art and make the men adept at use of the knuckle crachers which are being used at the front.

A number of men from some of the units of the Canadian Expeditionary Force have been transferred to the new Foresters' Battalion. Why the military authorities should allow men who have been trained all winter to join a battalion of this kind when hundreds of Woodsmen are available is a mystery. However, only comparatively few men already enlisted will decide to go into the Foresters' Battalion especially as the Canadian Patriotic Fund has announced that members of this battalion will not receive any grant from the Patriotic Fund.

Big Mass Meeting In Market Hall

To-night at 8 O'clock—Addresses by Leading Public Men

Let all Peterborough turn out and attend the great public mass meeting in the Market Hall to-night, when delegates from the municipalities of Central and Eastern Ontario will meet the ministers and place the needs of the district before them. Our future depends on our efforts to make ourselves heard. Stand by the city.

NO LETTERS FOR EX-PASTOR.

Sarnia Church Declines to Give Him Recommendations.

SARNIA, March 31.—The congregation of the Central Baptist Church of this city has refused to grant letters of character to Rev. Armin Holzer and his wife, as requested in a letter received a few days ago from the former pastor who is now at Pittsburg, where he is working in the Jewish missions. The church did not stop at that, but the names of the two have been struck from the roll of membership.

It will be remembered that Holzer is the converted Jew who, after being interviewed by Government officials in regard to pro-German utterances, went to the States on the last ferry at night.

In comparison with the Crimean and other wars the British Government have managed the present war with the greatest skill ever known.—Mr. Asquith.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

SPORTING COMMENT

"Jeff" Pfeffer is known to baseball students as one of the best little pitchers in the National League. Tiny "Jeff" has made a great reputation in the uniform of Uncle Wilburt's Brooklyn Dodgers. In 1914, his first season in the big entertainment, he won twenty-three games and lost only twelve. Last year he was a bit slow in starting, but he won nineteen games against fourteen lost. He stood fourth among National League twirlers in 1915 and third in 1914. Some record, that, for a new beginner who is handicapped by being a little sawed-off runt only six feet and some three or four inches in height. This year the Brooklyn fans confidently expect Pfeffer to give Alexander a run for his money in the race for the premier pitching honors of the old league.

There is a mystery in connection with "Jeff" Pfeffer which has baffled many fans, and which will here be elucidated. Although "Jeff" has been in the majors only two seasons, yet one occasionally comes across references to a "Jeff" Pfeffer, right-handed pitcher, who was with the Cubs more than a decade ago.

The original "Jeff" was Frank X Pfeffer, and he was born in Champaign, Ill., thirty-four years ago today, March 31, 1882. Old "Jeff" was educated at the University of Illinois, near his home town, and made a great reputation as a pitcher on the Illini team in 1903 and 1904. The following Frank Selee hired him for the Cubs, and in 1906 Pfeffer was with the Boston Nationals. After two seasons with the Bean City club Frank was turned over to Baltimore, and in 1909 he wore a Toronto uniform. He returned to the Cubs in 1910, and went back to Boston again in 1911. The first time Pfeffer went from Chicago to Boston he was traded for Pat Moran, now the Philadelphia pilot.

While old "Jeff" was going back, his kid brother, Edward, some seven years his junior, was forging his way to the front. Frank had been called "Jeff" since his Illini days, and for some reason the fans attached the same moniker to Edward. Why they did it is unknown, unless with the malicious design of making the printer send out a hurry call for more "f's" for his linotype magazine.

Young "Jeff" got his professional start in Fort Wayne in 1909, but he was soon turned over to La Crosse, Wis., where he made a fine record, and was recalled to Fort Wayne in 1910. The Central League Swatters fell on him pretty hard, and he lost more games than he won that year. Nevertheless he got a trial with the St. Louis Browns in 1911, but was turned back to Fort Wayne, and that fall he was sold to Denver. The Grizzlies turned him over to Grand Rapids, and in 1912 he broke even with nine games won and nine lost.

Up to that time young Pfeffer had not shown much but promise, but in 1913 the promise was made good. He suddenly developed surprising and sensational class, and in 1913 he won twenty-five games for Grand Rapids, losing only eight. Toward the close of the season he was sold to Brooklyn and got a chance to display his wares under the main tent.

Mighty few twirlers in baseball history have come within shouting distance of the first year major league record hung up by Edward "Jeff" "Hasaan" Pfeffer. If he improves with age he should be one of the marvels of the sport. Already he has far surpassed the big league record of his older brother—and the original "Jeff" was a steady, dependable twirler.

WILLARD DOESN'T WANT THIS $30,000 BOUT

NEW YORK, March 31.—Tom Jones, manager for Jess Willard, said last night that he had refused an offer for $30,000 for the heavyweight championship to box ten rounds with Fred Fulton, in Milwaukee. The offer, it was said, was made to Jones, by Tom Andrews, a Milwaukee promoter, who came here last week to see the Willard-Moran bout. First Andrews offered $25,000 for a match with Fulton April 26, and when this was turned down he increased the offer.

Jones, it was said, notified Andrews that Willard's contract with a circus, will take effect April 29, and that he would not take on any engagement which might jeopardize that Jones added that the circus contract was for $150,000.

JESS WEEPS AT CROWD.

Jack Curly, who is co-manager of the champion to the extent that he receives ten per cent. of the titleholder's earnings, told an interesting story a few days ago, which gives a good vide light on Willard's peculiar temperament. It seems that the champion made an appointment with some one in the lobby of the Hotel Knickerbocker during his recent term of training here in the city. He was on time to the dot, but the man he was to meet was late, and during the interval Big Jess collected quite a crowd around him. The spectators were looking over his massive lines with great admiration, and whispering one to another:

"Look! It's Jess Willard! What a man!"

Jess Willard, however, failed to appreciate the admiration. Instead of smiling and bowing to the crowd, as most fighters would have done, joshing them as Johnston used to do, or tossing them handfuls of coins, after the manner of that untemperamental hero John L. Sullivan, Big Jess turned tail and fled. He appeared in Curley's office a few minutes after the occurrence rushed into the promoter's inner sanctum, slammed the door, leaned up against the wall and sobbed like a boy.

Curley, who knew his foster-charge too well to question him, kept absolutely quiet, and finally the whole childish story came out: "He didn't want to be a curiosity; he wouldn't be stared at by so many people; couldn't a man meet a friend without everybody in New York gathering around him and making remarks?" etc, etc.

Canadian League To Remain Idle

Any possibility that there may have been of there being Canadian League baseball during the coming summer has been dissipated. President Stevely of the London club, acting president of the league, announced that the meeting called for Brantford had been cancelled. Mr. Stevely has written to Secretary Farrell of the National Association, asking permission for a league to remain idle for a year, and it is expected that this permission will be granted. In this case the players on the reserve list of the various clubs will be free agents for this year, but will still be the property of the Canadian League clubs.

BASEBALL AND HOCKEY IN BOSTON ON SAME DAY

Boston sport fans can see a combination of winter and summer sport on April 12. On that afternoon, the Braves open the National League season at home. At night, there will be a hockey match between Canadiens and the winners of the three-cornered Boston series between Wanderers, Ottawa and Quebec.

CANADIAN IN U. S. SENATE.

WASHINGTON, March 30.—Senator Gallinger of New Hampshire, Republican leader of the Senate, who has rounded out an even quarter of a century of service there, received many congratulations to-day, the seventy-ninth anniversary of his birth. He was born in Cornwall, Ontario.

CANADIENS WIN THE WORLD'S CHAMPIONSHIP

MONTREAL, Mar. 30.— Canadiens champions of the National Hockey Association, 1915-16 season, to-night secured one year's possession of the Stanley Cup, and the title of professional hockey champions of the world by defeating the Portland, Oregan, club of the Pacific Coast League, by a score of two to one in the fifth game of the series. Three wins were needed to mark the winners, and to-night's contest started with each club holding two victories to their credit.

Goldie Prodgers, who was used as a substitute by Canadiens through the greater part of the N.H.A. season, and who has been the sensation of the world's professional championship series, shares with "Neway" Lalonde the main credit for to-night's victory. With the score tied in the last stages of the third period Lalonde and Prodgers pulled a trick play that allowed Prodgers to get half way up the ice before the Portland forwards knew just where the puck was. Prodgers scored on the play. For the remaining our minutes Canadiens fell back on the defence, and held the visitors out.

The play was hard and fast throughout, but the checking was too close for any sensational rushes. Ill-feeling was evident in the first period, but strict penalties quickly brought the players into the mood to attend solely to the game. In the second and third periods few penalties were called for. The teams:

Canadiens— Vezina, goal; McNamara, Corbeau, defence; Pitre, wing; Lalonde, centre; Prodgers, wing.

Portland — Murray, goal; Irvine, Johnson, defence; Harris, wing; Oatman, centre; Tobin, wing.

CURLERS CLOSED THE SEASON WITH AN ENJOYABLE SOCIAL

Another curling season is gone, and the eve of its departure provided an enjoyable little social last night for many of the members and players of other years. It wasn't a big night, there was nothing hilarious about it, but just an informal, final gathering of the winter club. Incidentally the Kickers' Club was well represented, but its moving spirit was absent, and his absence was keenly felt. Especially when President J. H. Ferguson produced a framed cartoon, pointed, pithy, and clever, recalling with good-natured satire, numerous incidents of the season and mannerisms of various players familiar to the whole club. Mr. Ferguson was congratulated upon his idea and its execution, and was thanked for this souvenir of the winter of 1916-17, which will be hung in the "art" gallery.

Mr. Andy Webb, who won the Mercantile Cup a short time ago, titillated the Club by his speech on 'Woman's Suffrage.' "Andy" is one of those fortunate individuals who can say something interesting on any question, and when called upon in this instance, was not in the least perturbed.

John A. Cameron delighted the assembly with a pantomime of a curling game, or rather, a single end, and made a hit with the realism of his effort. He didn't speak a word throughout. It was one of those spontaneous skits that wins by its novelty and effectiveness. Mr. Cameron who, by the way, is one of the deans of the club, and grows keener on the game with every year of his returning youth, was recalled, and made a neat speech befitting the occasion.

Mr. "Bob" Soden, minus the scarlet cravat or scarf, the most distinguishing feature of his curling apparel, recited some of Drummond's habitant poems, and Mr. Frank Clark gave several banjo selections. Mr. Frank Matthews, just returned from Winnipeg, rocked the audience with a recital of a speech he heard a young Scotchman (back from the front) make at a Winnipeg recruiting meeting.

At the close of the meeting Mr. Matthews proposed the actuation of Mr. Webb's suggestion that the soldiers at the front be remembered. A collection was taken up and $9.70 contributed.

The prize winners at progressive euchre were Messrs. S. J. Stubbs, George Mather, J. A. Cameron and W. J. Oke. Mr. Tom Brightman was chairman. The spontaneity of the affair was its chief pleasure, the members providing their own entertainment without any formal fuss.

MIRAGE BALKS GUNS IN ARABIAN BATTLE

Cheerful Stoicism of British and Indians Praised by Press Correspondent—Battle Described

An official British press representative writes from Sheikh Saad, Arabia, as follows: "The ground between the Tigris River and the hills was the scene of the battle of Sheikh Saad. The land is maliciously and fanatically sterile. Even the agoon and the kharnoog come to an end. It was over this rutty ground that the transport wagons bumped and jolted with their freight of wounded. It was evening when our steamer moored near the battlefield. We went out to meet them as they streamed in over the mud-colored flat, and gave what aid we could. Many were walking very erect, some of them with the stiffness of effort. These were the less serious cases. The stretchers and transportwagons came in later. One was struck with the hardiness and stoicism of the British and Indian alike. 'Beg pardon, sir,' says a British private; 'can you tell me where the ambulance is?' and he deprecates the support of my shoulder, though his calf is bandaged, and it is painful for him to put his left foot to the ground. 'I am all right, sir; it's nothing serious.'

Science and Heroism

"He lifts up his shirt, and points to a puncture in his stomach. His face is bloody and bandaged. 'It is nothing,' he explains; 'took off a bit of my gums.' He will not rest, but moves on towards the distant Red Cross flag and the funnels of the steamer on the River. Here at least should be rest, warm tea, and comforts for his wounds. But in Mesopotamia it is a far cry to the smooth motor ambulances of France, the rapid transit to the hospital, where an hour or two after he has received first aid doctors and nurses are ready with every saving device that science can provide.

"We have heard the guns overnight and again in the morning as our paddle steamer with its attendant lighters forged up stream. The first shell disturbed a flight of sand grouse which came wheeling across the river in such myriads that we who were watching from the roof of the bridge forgot the shells and turned our glasses on the birds—a skein of plumage half a mile long tying itself up in loops in the most complicated evolutions, the van suddenly wheeling around, while the rear, an opposite point, then converged in a heap. They were dark at one turn, silvery the next, as the sun caught their underwings through the black smoke of a monitor.

"Men Like Trees Moving"

"The evolutions of our troops on land were obscured by the mirage. We saw infantry like trees moving, and thought them a transport train. Other masses, which could be nothing but artillery, crossed the pontoon bridge ahead of us from the right bank to the left. The mirage does not affect the atmosphere at the height of a bursting shell; we could see the shrapnel smoke unfolding two or three miles from the bank, and wondered if it were Turkish artillery or our own. 'Shelling their advance posts' was the general verdict. It was not until later that we realized that the whole force was at grips with the enemy; and it was not until we moored and met the converging stream coming in from the trenches that we realized how costly the day had been. The guns we had heard had played but a small part in the action, and the bulk of our casualties on both banks of the stream had occurred in frontal attacks on the enemy's position. As I write we are moving on to attack a new position."

PLEADS GUILTY IN MISSING HEIR CASE

NEW YORK, March 30.—Charles Edwin Summers, a lawyer with offices at No. 1400 Broadway, who was arrested in connection with the attempt to loot the estate of Thomas O'Keeffe of Brooklyn, by representing Mark J. Jordon, a film actor, as John Campbell, Jr., a missing heir pleaded guilty to attempted grand larceny in the first degree before Justice Crane in the Supreme Court in Brooklyn. Summers was accused in an indictment of subornation of perjury, attempted grand larceny, conspiracy and impersonating another person.

The lawyer's wife was at her husband's side and was largely responsible for his plea. He asserted he had not been guilty of any similar scheme before.

Henry Wolf, who has offices in Broadway, is also under indictment. The charges against him are identical with those against Summers.

SPECTRE OF PAUPERISM.

"Do you know," asks S. W. Strauss of Chicago, in Leslie's, "that in the United States 66 out of every 100 people who die leave no estate whatever? Do you know that out of the remaining 34 only nine leave estates larger than $5,000, and that the average of the balance of 25 is a little less than $1,100? Do you know that at the age of 65, 97 out of every 100 in America are partly or wholly dependent upon relatives, friends or the public for their daily bread, for their clothing, and a roof under which to sleep? Do you realize that according to recent Government statistics, 96 per cent. of the American people are living from day to day on their wages, and that a loss of employment would mean pauperism for all but 3 per cent. of us?"

CARE OF SOLDIERS' GRAVES

National Committee Has Been Organized in England

LONDON, March 31.—A national committee has been appointed by the Government for making permanent provision for the care of the graves of officers and men in France and Belgium. The Prince of Wales is president. It has been decided that no permanent memorials will be erected in any British military cemetery during the continuance of hostilities or until the military situation should appear to justify giving necessary sanction. All requests for information regarding the graves of officers and men fallen in France and Belgium should continue to be addressed to the Director of Graves Registration, General Headquarters,

VOTE ON PROHIBITION.

Way Has Been Opened For One in Parliament.

OTTAWA, March 29.—Prohibition is still a live issue in Parliament. Speaker Sevigny, in the Commons yesterday, reversed his decision of Monday and announced that the carrying of R. B. Bennett's amendment by the House did not dispose of the main motion as amended.

Sir Robert Borden stated that if a vote was desired it could be reached. This will allow a straight expression of opinion as between advocates of some form of prohibition and those opposed to it in principle. In Monday night's division members who preferred the Stevens motion calling for Dominion prohibition to the Bennett amendment and members who were totally opposed to prohibitory legislation were found voting side by side.

PETERBOROUGH MAN GETS THE CONTRACT

LINDSAY, April 1.—Mr. Richard Sheehy of Peterborough, who has been awarded the contract for building an addition to the Post Office tower, expects to start work at an early date. Mr. Sheehy, it will be remembered, built the Academy of Music.

EVERY HOME NEEDS "FIRST AIDS"

Among the safe and trustworthy first aids" necessary in every home is—Sloan's Liniment. Bruises, Muscle-aches and pains get quick relief. The penetrating, antiseptic and healing properties of this liniment have been proven time and time again. It is the kind of a remedy that once tried makes a constant friend. The ever increasing use of Sloan's Liniment shows that its merit has obtained greater and greater recognition.

"Safety First"—for the aches and rheumatic swinges of old age and the bruises of youth meet relief in the use of Sloan's Liniment.

Keep a watchful eye on the children's school luncheo; if ther have good, nourishing lunches they will be better able to stand the strain 'of school' work

One of the Zeppelins in Last Night's Raid On England Was Shot Down

By British Anti-Aircraft Guns and Fell Off the Thames Estuary, 45 Miles East of London Early To-day ---Three Persons Are Reported Killed.

LONDON, April 1.—One of the five Zeppelins that participated in last night's raid on England was shot down by British anti-aircraft guns, and fell off the Thames estuary, 45 miles east of London early to-day.

The Zeppelin's crew surrendered when British patrol boats approached, and were made prisoners. The Zeppelin broke up immediately and sank. The dirigible brought down is believed to have been the one reported over London last night, shortly before the theatres began to discharge their crowds. The Admiralty statement reporting the Zeppelin's destruction was not specific on that point. Thousands of persons witnessed last night's raid. They saw the searchlights pick up one of the German sky dreadnoughts and bathe it in light, while the anti-aircraft batteries volleyed, surrounding the long gas bag with smoke puffs. As on previous raids the crowd's attitude was one of curiosity rather than alarm. A single bomb from one of the raiders killed three persons, a man, his wife and little child, and seriously wounded seven others, it was unofficially reported.

Another bomb wrecked two brick cottages adjoining, but the occupants had marvellous escapes. The London theatres were filling for the evening when word ran through the audiences that the Zeppelins were approaching, but there was no panic and few persons left their seats. The night was ideal for a Zeppelin raid. There was no wind and only a light mist. Emerging from the show houses the crowds decided to wait, hoping for another spectacle such as that of last October when the Zeppelins visited London. Some of the Zepplin sightseers were in the streets until the supper clubs closed at 12:30 a.m., hoping to see a real air fight. The Zeppelin shot down is the first destroyed on the English coast in one of the dirigible raids. It is the twenty-sixth Zeppelin destroyed since the beginning of the war, according to figures of the British and French War offices.

WAR STEPS TAKEN BY PORTUGAL

Lisbon made Ready to Defend Attack by Hostile Submarines, Press Points Out.

LISBON, via London, April 1.—Portugal is actively preparing for war, having all eventualities in view, says the Secolo, which points out that an attack by hostile submarines upon the port of Lisbon is a possibility.

The British, says the newspaper, have reason to believe that the submarines most recently turned out from German yards are craft of 1,500 tons with a speed of ten knots under water and of eighteen knots on the surface. They are equipped with from ten to twelve torpedo tubes, it is said, and possess the ability to remain away from their base several weeks at a time, owing to the power of their electric accumulators and motors. Some of them are provided with three-inch guns and it is even affirmed in some quarters that four inch guns are carried.

24 Years in Asylum Woman Is Released To Inherit Fortune

WORCESTER, April 1.— After being an inmate for 24 years of the Worcester State Hospital for the Insane, Mrs. Mary M. McGrath, who was committed to that institution on October 9, 1891, at the instance of her husband, was released. Mrs. McGrath has been left the income of an estate valued at $750,000 by her husband, the late Henry McGrath, of Fitchburg.

Attorney Sherman L. Whipple, of Boston, who was appointed by the Probate Court as guardian for investigation of Mrs. McGrath, reported that Mrs. McGrath was a woman of unusual refinement and sensibility, and that he saw no trace of insanity in her.

Judge Forbes of the Probate Court then determined that the first thing to be done was to get Mrs. McGrath out of the insane hospital and to provide a suitable home for her.

"She will have an income," Judge Forbes said, "by the terms of the will of probably $15,000 a year. I am chagrined that a ward of this court has been left in such a hospital under such meagre conditions, surrounded by pauper insane and deprived of the comforts that a woman of her apparent culture and refinement would appreciate."

The court further declared that her permanent guardian must see to it that the comfort and happiness of Mrs. McGrath for the rest of her life must be assured.

SHOOTS HER RIVAL.

Lexington, Ky., March 30.— Run down by a pack of bloodhounds and a sheriff's posse, Miss Ella Monroe, daughter of John Monroe, one of the most prominent citizens of Hardin Springs, made a statement in which she said she had shot and killed Miss Eva Gregory, supposed to be her friend, from ambush. Jealousy caused the crime, she said.

OUR SERIAL STORY

"Flower of the Gorse"

BY LOUIS TRACY

At that Yvonne was constrained to smile. Neither she nor the woman who dismissed Raymond and Duquesne so flippantly could guess what sinister influences lurked behind the association of those two men. An astrologer would have found something ominous in that haphazard reference to the planetary harbingers of disaster, Saturn and Mars, and, oddly enough, a half-thought of the sort did flit through Yvonne's mind, because she often found amusement and interest, during the mild and clear winters of Brittany, in reading the firmament from a stellar atlas, and there was hardly a constellation in the northern heavens she could not name at sight.

At that moment, however, relief from a rather forced conversation came in the shape of Captain Popple's burly form.

"Beg pardon, Ma'am, for intrudin' at this time," he said, when admitted, "but I thought you'd like to hear the result of to-day's operations on the reef. Atween Peridot an' a trawl, we've been doin' things."

"Is Peridot here—in Pont Aven?" interrupted Yvonne, blanching in quick alarm.

"Yes, Miss. He kem from Concarneau this mornin', an' I've brought him up the river on to-night's tide."

"Where is he now?"

"I'm not quite sure, Miss. He left me a couple o' minutes since. While I was havin' a word with Jackson, Peridot went up the hill."

"Was he tired?"

Popple was undoubtedly perplexed by this sudden concern as to Peridot's physical condition; but he answered readily enough, "Well, Miss, if he isn't, he ought to be. We've been hard at it, high water an' low, for fourteen hours."

Yvonne was so visibly relieved that Popple's bewilderment increased. Of course he had heard no word of Madeleine's flight, and he could not understand that if Peridot had gone home and to bed there was a chance that the fisherman might leave the village again early in the morning without being told the disastrous news, since Madame Larraidou was a cautious old body, who would not vex her son with idle gossip.

Popple hesitated. If further details of Peridot's well-being were needed, he was ready to vouch for the Breton's apparent good health and complete sobriety.

Mrs. Carmac fathomed his difficulty at once.

"Go on, Captain," she smiled. "Miss Ingersoll only wanted to be assured that Peridot was safe in his cottage. His mother was anxious about him—that is all."

"No need, Ma'am, I assure you," said Popple earnestly. "He's one of the best, is Peridot. For a Frenchman, I've never met his ekal. I had a sort of notion he'd bring good luck, an' he did too. We've got your boxes!"

Mrs. Carmac stood up. Her pale cheeks flushed with gratification. "I am more than pleased," she cried. "Where are they? Can they be brought here to-night?"

"No, Ma'm; not both, that is. Like meself, I reckon, you're forgettin' the ways of a French custom house. I've got yours, because it was open; but the other one, which is locked, had to be left in a shed down below there until the key is produced. I tried to tell some chap in a blue coat and cheese-cutter cap that if poor Mr. Carmac had any cigars or cigarettes in his cabin trunk they wouldn't be of much account after soakin' in salt water for a matter o' ten days or thereabouts; but, bless your heart, he couldn't listen. Mossoo Gueho, the gentleman from Brest, tole me I'd have to bring the key in the mornin', or, more likely, force it open; so I left it at that."

Mrs. Carmac was puzzled, and showed it. "You say my box is open. Do you mean that it has been smashed to pieces?" she inquired.

"It's hardly been scratched, Ma'am. You see, it was this way: When the yacht broke in two the fore part was carried clean away by the sea. The trawl picked up fittin's an' bits o' machinery two hundred yards from the reef. But the after part must ha held together longer, an' the heavy seas didn't get at it quite so fierce like. Anyhow, Peridot sort o' nosed out where them boxes might be lyin', an' we sent the diver down—an' sure enough there they were."

"Could the box have been wrenched open while being lifted to the surface?"

Popple scratched his head dubiously, not because of any doubt suggested by Mrs. Carmac's question, but on account of a problem that had bothered him ever since the salvage was effected.

"No, Ma'am," he said, evidently weighing his words. "It received no rough usage. It wasn't locked."

"But it was!" insisted the lady, rather emphatically. "I locked it myself before coming on deck after we left Brest. I remember doing so most distinctly."

"Then it's a myst'ry, Ma'am, — a real myst'ry, seein' as the lock has been turned. The wards are full o' sand, of course; but that has nothin' to do with their position."

"Where is the box now?"

"Outside on a handcart, Ma'am. Jackson's on guard. That's been his job all day—just sittin' on that box. You see, Ma'am, you tole me you was particular about it an' the other one; so I've taken care that each of 'em reaches you just as we found it."

"Will you kindly ask the hotel porters to carry the one box here now?"

"Cert'nly, Ma'am. There's on'y one thing. The contents are in a sad mess. The sight of 'em may upset you."

"No, no. The loss of the clothing is immaterial. Please have the box brought in."

Popple lost no time. Mrs. Marmac was explaining to Yvonne that the solitary articles of jewelry she valued, a necklace of graded pearls, had been left in a locked case, itself inclosed in a locked box, when a porter entered and dumped a rust-covered steel trunk on the floor. Popple untied the knots of a rope that kept the lid in position. Unquestionably, if Mrs. Carmac had turned the key in the lock on leaving her cabin, it had been opened later, either by accident or design.

The owner dropped to her knees instantly. After an alarmed glance at an arrangement of straps beneath the lid, she piled a number of sodden and salt-stained articles on the floor. Soon she was gazing disconsolately at an empty box. The jewelcase was not there. But she was more than disturbed, she was exceedingly annoyed.

"I have been robbed!" she cried. "Someone on board the Stella possessed a key that would open a Yale lock, a thing that called for careful planning. I have lost twenty thousand pounds' worth of pearls and diamonds!"

"Mr. Raymond tole me the necklace alone was worth ten thousand, Ma'am," breathed Popple thickly.

"Mr. Raymond! How came you and he to be discussing the value of my jewels?" She was on her feet now, glowering in anger, a woman despoiled of her prized possessions, and ready to suspect anyone.

Popple was apologetic. He felt as if he were personally in default "We was talkin' one day about the salvage, Ma'am. If you remember, you mentioned a lot o' money in notes, which ought to turn up in the trunk at the customs shed, and it seemed sort o' nateral that Mr. Raymond an' I should talk things over."

"Yes, yes. Of course he knew all about the notes and the rest. Don't look at me in that stupid fashion. I am not accusing you or Mr. Raymond of stealing by belongings. But how can one account for this wretched business? Who could have dared to go to my cabin, when the robbery must be discovered before we reached port that night? I locked both case and box. Here are the keys. Celeste found them in a special pocket inside the skirt I wore that day. My husband's keys were in his pocket too. They were brought to me by the mayor on behalf of the police."

She was talking excitedly, almost at random, and had snatched at a porte-monnaie to display the keys, as though the fact that they existed and were in her keeping supplied proof positive that she could not be mistaken.

"It's an awkward business, an' that's the solemn truth, Ma'am," wheezed Popple. "It 'ud please me an' Jackson if you'd send for the police an' have 'em search us an' our rooms. Not that we've got much beyond a few bits o' linen——"

"You and Jackson—the steward!" repeated Mrs. Carmac shrilly. "Did you know already that my jewels were gone?"

"We guessed it, Ma'am. We didn't like the look o' that there box, an' that's a fact."

She stamped a foot angrily on the floor of polished wood. "It does not concern you or Jackson," she cried. "I would as soon think of blaming Mr. Raymond, who was with me in the deck saloon during all those miserable hours——"

"Blaming me for what, Mrs. Carmac?" came in the secretary's harsh voice. The door had been left open when the box was brought in, and Raymond himself was standing there now. He had just returned from Quimperle, and had the semblance of a man pierced with cold, as the night had suddenly grown chilly. His small eyes roved from Mrs. Carmac's irritated face to Yvonne, who was still seated, and had not interfered in the conversation. Then they dwelt on the empty trunk and the disheveled heap of its contents.

"You've recovered some of your baggage, I see," he went on quietly. "Is that the box containing your jewelcase?"

HER LITTLE BOY HAD PNEUMONIA
NEARLY LOST HIM.
DR. WOOD'S NORWAY PINE SYRUP SAVED HIM.

The slight cold, the irritating cough, the tightness of the chest, if not attended to, will sooner or later develop into some serious lung or bronchial trouble, and our advice to you is that on the first inception of a cough or cold "GET RID OF IT."

Mrs. H. Washburn, Gaspereaux Station, N.B., writes: "I thought I would write and tell you just how much I appreciate Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup, for I would not be without it in the house. Twice my little boy, now four years old, has had pneumonia, and nearly died, but since using Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup I have kept him clear of even a cough. I often say that if it had not been for "Dr. Wood's" I would have lost him."

"My little girl, ten months old, is subject to bronchitis, but when she seems to be stuffed up and has difficulty in breathing I give her a few drops of Norway Pine Syrup every two or three hours, and in a very little while she is all well, in fact, on the first signs of a cold or cough we all fly for 'Dr. Wood's'."

You can procure Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup from any druggist or dealer, but be sure and get "Dr. Wood's" when you ask for it, as there are many imitations on the market.

The genuine is put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees the trade mark; price 25c and 50c.

Ambitious Dr. Lydgate of "Middlemarch" may have been extravagant with his 2 horses, and servants and plate, and Policy of Life Insurance Most people now-a-days, however, would at least have called the Life Insurance Policy a necessity. The horses were sold, the servants dismissed, and the plate taken by the bailiff. The Life Insurance Policy alone stood at the last between Roseamond and penury. THOSE WHO LOVE BEST

Those who have loved longest, love best. A sudden blaze of kindness may, by a single blast of coolness, be extinguished; but that fondness, which length of time has connected with many circumstances and occasions, though it may for awhile be suppressed by disgust or resentment, with or without a cause, is hourly revived by accidental recollections. To those who have lived long together, everything heard and everything seen recalls some pleasure communicated, or some benefit conferred; some petty quarrel, or some slight endearment. Esteem of great powers or amiable qualities newly discovered may embroider a day or a week, but a friendship of twenty years is interwoven with the texture of life. A friend may be often found and lost, but an old friend never can be found, and nature has provided that he cannot easily be lost.—Samuel Johnson.

HOME HEALTH CLUB

By DR. DAVID H. REFDER

Control of Disease: There are fewer epidemics and scourages than becurred years ago, when Cholera, Small Pox, Diphtheria, etc., swept away thousands at a time. Little by little we have advanced in the knowledge of the prevention of diseases which formerly devastated cities and entire sections. Fact by fact, truth by truth, in methods of fighting disease and better means of preventing them are wrested from the mysteries of nature, by the earnest and unselfish work of investigating physicians, scientists, etc.

Life is a continuous warfare. Aside from the responsibilities of securing shelter and food and raiment, we must ever be on the alert to maintain health, and it is quite remarkable how well we do so, in spite of the exceptions which always occur. In a world where little is perfect, we can never hope to reach a faultless condition of life. There will always be some sickness, accidents, and always death. Our mission is to reduce ill health and unhappiness to a minimum. In spite of doubts, we are marching on in the direction of better things.

I often think that it is quite remarkable how very well we get along together, the one hundred million of people in this country, when it is considered that we represent half a hundred states, North and South, West and East, some of them thousands of miles apart, some larger in themselves than many of the kingdoms of the old world, with our native-born and foreign citizenship, representing every nation on the earth, with their great variety of habits, industries, educations, ambitions, inclinations, affiliations, needs, possessions, and temperaments, it is wonderful how well we amalgamate, and mix in general harmony, how fair and equitable is our government, and how well the general good and the general health is maintained.

The great work of our national government (it is good as a whole, and its protection adequate no matter what carping critics or the politicians may say to the contrary) in the way of compelling the production of pure food, the treatment of diseases of animals, the prevention of epidemics and maintaining the open air treatment of tuberculosis by establishing sanitariums, etc., is all right. You would better realize it if you had, as many of our alien citizens have, lived under another flag.

Now, with the help of the government, the municipal bodies, the press, and the individual effort, the interest awakened for improved hygienic conditions will result in a better and stronger nation. As the individual soldier makes up the squad, the company, the regiment, and the brigade with which the invincible and unconquerable army is made, so make of yourself an individual unit, alert, competent, active in an army to battle against disease and for the health and well-being of the masses.

Ready Remedies: The effect of auto suggestion in the treatment of disease is well known. It is the basis of many "sciences" and "ologies" and has been used by persons who have taken certain well recognized scientific facts and made religion or schools of medicine of them. Massage, magnetism, suggestion, mesmerism, are all parts of the general art of healing. The place be is simply inert material made into semblance of medicine in various forms, and given to patients to satisfy their desire to take medicine when their physicians think that none is needed. The effect is often very beneficial.

The reasons why the home nurse, the mother, is so very successful in the every day treatment of common diseases, is that she uses all of the various means instinctively, though the medicine bears no high sounding or mysterious Latin name, but such as she has in her kitchen and pantry. The Home Health Club is endeavouring to teach the use of these simples that are not poisonous but most effectual.

1. She possesses an intuitive sense or knowledge of what to do. She also knows the idiosyncrasies of the patient, particularly if the person be her husband or her children.

2. She begins at once at the very first evidence of indisposition, not allowing the ailment to gain a foothold or to become deep seated, by doing as many do, who depend upon the doctor's advice for minor ailments. They let a trifling trouble which a mother would treat go because of too little importance to call the physician. The mother usually does not waste a minute, but energetically stops a disease or cuts short its duration by immediate treatment. She actively treats a cold, not allowing it to develop into pneumonia, a sore throat into quinsy, or a cough into consumption.

3. She treats the symptoms as soon as they develop, not waiting to find some specifications for the trouble or a certain scientific chemical to combat it. She simply recognises the symptoms and she promptly treats them by the contraries. A cold she corrects with heat and fever with cold applications. She does these things promptly and energetically. She uses every auxillary means at hand and continues it persistently until she obtains the results desired.

Medicine is simply a system of stimulation and depression. When the pendulum of life swings too far one way or the other it must be brought back to normal. The common foods and condiments in the house furnish very liberal "materia medica" for the domestic treatment of common ailments. For instance, salt, pepper, vinegar, mustard, soda, kerosene, etc., do wonders when intelligence is used in applying them and many women are experts in this work.

It requires no taxing of one's memory to recall when mother applied pork, pepper and vinegar treatment, with the aid of a stocking bandage around the neck for sore throat, or the great spoonfuls of sulphur and molasses that had to be taken in the spring as a blood medicine, all simple but effectual remedies, even though they are considered a punishment to a child. When we desire to think of any particularly hot place, not one of future punishment, but one of past punishment, we recall the time when our grandmother peace to her ashes—applied a 6 by 8 mustard plaster of about what seemed to us 80,000 candle power to our backs, which had done nothing worse than become sprained. Many of us undoubtedly owe our present existence here on earth to the saving grace of these simple household articles and their prompt application to us when and where most needed, on the diagnosis of our national ancestors.

I will gladly answer all inquiries for information on health subjects from readers of this publication if same are addressed to Home Health Club, 5039 Cottage Grove Ave., Chicago, Ill. Send full name and address with 4 cents postage.

TEN YEARS AGO.

People were just beginning to claim that wireless telegraphy was impossible.

Women were still wearing at least two petticoats.

Sarah Bernhardt was making her "farewell tour" of America.

The preposterous suggestion was made that a tunnel could be built under the Detroit river.

All of the dudes were wearing peg-top trousers.

Nat Goodwin had been married only three times.

THE HOME CIRCLE COLUMN

CHEERFULNESS.

A woman whose life has been made of sorrow and pain, but who always appeared cheerful, explained to her friends: "You know I have had no money; have had nothing I could give but myself, and so I made a resolution that I would never sadden any one else with my troubles. I have laughed and appeared cheerful when my heart was breaking. I have always smiled in the face of every misfortune. I have tried never to let anyone go from my presence without a happy word or a bright thought to carry with them. And happiness makes happiness. I, myself, am happier than I would have been had I sat down and bemoaned my fate."

No one can estimate the worth of the cheerful woman; the woman whose cheerfulness is not affected by dark days or little disappointments or whose kindness does not become rancid in the midst of prosperity. The magnetism of the cheerful woman's smiles and brightness infects every one in the darkest hours. Her husband goes to the store, shop or office feeling that he can contribute himself, heart and soul to build himself into the temple of human society. The cares of the day worry him, but the thought that "at home I shall find peace" renews his strength and energy and he can endure to the end. The cheerful mother sends her children to school with the sense of something to be won, a work to be accomplished, and they do not find it very difficult to be brave, truthful, courteous and just, obedient to teacher, kind to schoolmates.

* * *

The sweetest wives are those who possess the magic secret of being contented under any circumstances. Rich or poor, high or low, it makes no difference; the bright little fountain of joy bubbles up just as musicly in their hearts. Do they live in a log cabin? The fire on its humble hearth becomes brighter than the gilded chandelier in an Aladdin palace.

* * *

There is demand for good boys. The boy who is honest, earnest and industrious, will not be long out of a job. There are lots of prosperous business men, merchants and mechanics, who are constantly on the lookout for good boys. They do not look for them in the streets however, but in some sort of employment. They have no use for an idle boy. He is too apt to make an idle man.

* * *

One of the most important things that a man owes to his family is cheerfulness. He should cast all trouble away when he comes to his home.

* * *

If you scar a sapling the tree will tell the tale; so if a child is subjected to improper influence and examples the scars will remain and his life be blighted by it.

* * *

When one is inclined to worry, the remark of an old lady should be recalled: "Yes, dearies; I've had an awful heap of trouble in my time and most of it never happened."

REPLENISH YOUR BLOOD IN THE SPRING

Just now you are feeling "out of sorts"—not your usual self. Quite exhausted at times and cannot devote real energy to your work. Sleep does not rest you and you wake up feeling "all tired out." Perhaps rheumatism is flying through your muscles and joints, or may be your skin is disfigured by rashes, boils or pimples. Headaches, twinges of neuralgia, fits of nervousness, irritability of temper and a disordered stomach often increases your discombort in the spring.

The cause—winter has left its mark on you. These troubles are signs that your blood is poor and watery, that your nerves are exhausted. You must renew and enrich your blood at once and restore tone to your tired nerves, or there may be a complete breakdown. The most powerful remedy for these spring ailments in men, women and children is Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, because these Pills cleanse the blood and strengthen weak nerves.

New, rich red blood—your greatest need in spring—is plentifully created by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and with this new, pure blood in your veins you quickly regain health and increase your strength. Then your skin becomes clear, your eyes bright, your nerves strong, and you feel better, eat better, sleep better, and are able to do your work.

Begin your spring tonic treatment to-day for the blood and nerves with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills—the Pills that strengthen.

These Pills are sold by most dealers, but do not be persuaded to take "something just the same." If you can't get the genuine Pills from your dealers they will be sent you by mail post paid, at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 by writing The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville Ont.

FASHION FEATURES WHICH MAKE FOR ECONOMY

Suggestions For Remodeling Last Season's Frock

POSSIBILITIES IN SLEEVES

NEW YORK, April 1.—For those of us who have, as it were, stacks and stacks of passe frocks to be remodeled, this should prove a banner season. Fashion has been very lenient with our little economies for several seasons past, but this spring, whether it is the war, with its consequent deprivations to many, which has turned her in this direction, or just because she fancies evolving the odd little conceptions and combinations one sees on every side, certain it is that economy just now is being made very easy and very fascinating.

Girdle, Bretelles and Jumpers.

Let us suppose for instance, that one has a dark blue serge dress of last season. It may not be worn to any great extent, but nevertheless it needs something to make it look more up to date. We may add a deep skirt yoke and a high girdle, with perhaps a bretelle over each shoulder, of black satin or moire. Cuffs and collar, too, add greatly to the effect. When cleverly done, the frock has none of the made-over appearance it would have had some seasons back, but is a delightfully chic little costume in the new deep waist effect, for shopping and general daytime wear. Coatee-peplums, quillings, bands, and insets of contrasting material may work wonders, too, with slightly worn frocks, suits, and blouses. Should a hem be slightly frayed or worn, whether it be the lower edge of blouse or skirt, one of those stiff, quaint little quillings, or a contrasting band may be set on to cover it most attractively. Around the bottom of a sleeve, which has not just the most becoming curve or finish, a double ruffle of picot edged Georgette, banded through the middle with a narrow black velvet ribbon may be added, the ribbon being drawn as tightly as desired and tied in a perky little bow. Deep cuffs of satin or taffeta with a matching collar may be attached to a blouse which has an unbecoming or old-fashioned sleeve, or an ugly neck finish. When these deep cuffs are near the sleeve, if sufficiently full, may be gathered into the cuff, thereby lending another modish touch, for much fulness is noticed in the new sleeves.

Sleeves Offer Interesting Possibilities.

Long, short, and three-quarter-length sleeves will be worn this spring and summer. There is still a strong tendency to the transparent effects of the fall and winter. That this should be so for summer is quite logical. Net is nearly as popular for sleeves and bodices as chiffon and Georgette, and it wears equally well. Many a pretty taffeta or satin frock is being made with net sleeves and upper bodice, and many a last season's taffeta or satin dress is being remodeled in this way.

England Calls on Women.

The London Daily News announces the Government has decided to organize a recruiting campaign for women to work on land. It is proposed armlets be issued to women willing to undertake farm work and that they be entitled to wear especial uniforms.

Every village will be canvassed by women's committees, as it is considered essential that an army of at least 400,000 women be mobilized. All who volunteer will be registered and given armlets and uniforms which will consist of coat, skirt, stout boots, and gaiters.

Already more than 250,000 men have been withdrawn from agriculture, and it is anticipated 100,000 more will be called. Practically only shepherds, plowmen, and others indispensable will remain.

Literary Centenaries.

The year 1916 will be a remarkable one for anniversaries. First and foremost is the Shakespeare tercentenary; July 7th will mark the centenary of the death of another of our greatest dramatists, Richard Brinsley Sheridan, who died in the greatest poverty, but was accorded a magnificent funeral in Westminster Abbey. Other literary anniversaries are those of Charlotte Bronte, who was born in 1816, and Thomas Gray, the poet, who first saw the light a century earlier. This year also witnesses the hundredth anniversary of the birth of Philip James Bailey, a poet who has always met with far greater veneration abroad than in his native country.

Origin of a Song.

The grumbling of a negro groom led to the composition of the immortal "Old Folks at Home." While waiting for a change of horses at a Kentucky hostelry the composer, Stephen Foster, author of so many beloved darky melodies, heard a melancholy negro murmur as he threw a set of harness to the ground: "I'm sick an' tired o' dis life. I wisht I was back wif de ole folks at home."

"Where may that be, Sam?" asked Foster.

"Oh," answered the darky, "way down on de Suwannee river."

The result was the song as we have it today.

GIN PILLS FOR THE KIDNEYS

Saved Hamilton Man's Life

Whole Country Amazed at Wonderful Cure of Mr. John Herman

573 St. James Street North Hamilton, Ont.

Gentlemen:—

I was taken down with Inflamation of the Bladder. During the attacks, which occurred more and more frequently, the agony was unbearable, and I became so weak I could not walk across the floor. The doctors could do nothing to relieve or cure me.

My wife sent for a box of GIN PILLS to try and see if they would help me. From the first they did me good—the pain was relieved at once, and the attacks began to come at longer intervals. I continued taking the pills for six weeks, and then, to my surprise and delight, the stone I sent you came from me and my pain stopped. I have had no return of the trouble, and I have not lost a day's work on account of it since.

There is not the slightest doubt that GIN PILLS saved my life.

Yours gratefully,

JOHN HERMAN

If you have pains in the back, suspect stone in the bladder, suffer from suppression or incontinence of the urine, or your hands and wrists and ankles are swelling, your kidneys require attention and you need GIN PILLS.

If your dealer does not handle GIN PILLS, do not take substitutes, but order direct from us, enclosing the regular retail price—50c. for box or $2.50 for six boxes. Money cheerfully refunded if GIN PILLS do not do all that we claim for them. Sample free if you mention this paper. 10

LADY'S DRESS AND CAP.

By Anabel Worthington.

7636

The more particular the housekeeper the more she wants to be comfortably dressed while in the routine of her home duties, for this means she will get through quickly; then, of course, she wants also to be presentable. A most appropriate garb for such women is shown in the illustration.

No. 7,636.—This lady's house dress may be made with the high or regulation waist line. It is fashioned on the full lines of the street dress, having the comfortable blouse with button closing to the left side of front. The neat collar is of contrasting goods and extends its broad line to the shoulder. The sleeves are full and have a deep turn back cuff, also of contrasting goods in harmony with the collar. The skirt has three gores and is as graceful in its fall from waist to hem as the most exclusive garment for other wear. The bottoms that serve to close and ornament the waist extend to yoke depth on the skirt, according to the fashion. The cap has a full crown with the front piece or snood of contrasting goods and fitting from ear to ear.

The pattern is cut in sizes 34-42 bust measure.

To make in size 36, using 36 inch material, requires 5¾ yards and ⅛ yard 27 inch contrasting goods.

To obtain the pattern send coupon to the office of this publication

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

Father Vaughan Sees Only One Way to Win---'Kill, Kill'

London's Famous Priest Renews His Attacks on Those Who Would Seek to Spare the Enemy by Stating That the Only Path to Victory Lies in Great Slaughter.

(Special Dispatch.)
LONDON, Saturday.

"Kill Germans if you would win the war" continues to be the slogan of the Rev. Bernard Vaughan, priest militant. Father Vaughan recently answered another clergyman who thought it was a pity to kill so many Germans by saying:—"In my blundering stupidity I had thought it a pity to miss so many of them."

In a late issue of Reynolds' Newspaper Father Vaughan returns to the charge with the following:—

There are two extreme schools of thought respecting this life and death struggle called warfare. The militarists and pacifists are poles apart in their teaching about war. On the one hand, while Prussian war lords make out war to be not only a "biological necessity" but also the "religion of valour" the Society of Friends, on the other hand, declares that nothing can justify the repelling of force by force. The German Bernhardi would turn ploughshares into swords, and the Russian Tolstoy would, on the contrary, crush swords into ploughshares. A plague on both your houses, say I. Between these optimistic and pessimistic views about the right to fight there is a third class made up of people like the Rev. Dr Meyer and the Rev. Newsham Taylor, who lead one under the impression that they regard the present European war as some international football match, with the betting on our side and with the hope that none of the players in the rough game will be badly hurt. They and their followers, in their solicitude for my welfare, keep on reminding me how ill becoming ecclesiastical lips it is to give the advice to kill Germans.

I suppose I am expected by this school of thought to exhort our troops not to kill them. Mr. Bernard Shaw has reminded me that there is another way of ending the war, besides that of killing Germans, and that is to end it by killing Englishmen. My attitude toward the war may be summed up in a very simple syllogism. It is this:—

Warfare means killing the troops fighting against you.

But the troops fighting against us are German.

Therefore the war for us means killing Germans.

About the major premise Mr. Shaw and myself are in complete agreement. It is with the minor premise that we seem to be quarrelling. It is not quite clear whether he puts Englishmen where I put Germans. No doubt the pro-German puts Englishmen where I put England's enemy. So that the conclusion to be drawn from the premises depends altogether upon which side you are in the fight. As it is as clear as noonday to me that we have entered into this devastating war with a clear conscience and clean hands, I am satisfied that we must go on killing Germans until we have reached the number that will entitle us to dictate to the enemy our terms of peace, and so save Europe from the tyranny, the kultur of the superman with his super-State. We have drawn the sword to protect the neutrality, independence and autonomy of the smaller European kingdoms, and it is our rooted determination never to slip that sword into its scabbard again till Europe is rid of its menace to liberty, justice and civilisation. To the militarist, then, who regards warfare as the highest expression of life I say it is the worst expression of physical evil; and to the pacifist who contends that nothing can justify war I reply that there are occasions when you must make use of the worst physical evil—warfare—in order to support some great moral cause. In other words, a just war means making use of physical forces to secure some great moral end.

Let us get to grips with this question about the rights and wrongs of warfare, and let me again remind you that there is a far greater evil than war, and that is sin. War in its most repellant aspect can never get away from its character as a physical evil only, whereas sin is the breast called moral evil. The founder of Christianity warns us not so much to fear him who can kill the body only as to fear him who can destroy the soul also. In as were wanted.

the eighteen millions of casualties recorded in the present scientific slaughter of the human race not a single soul has been necessarily hurt, though that number of bodies have been hit. Shot and shell have broken or shattered the soul's vesture of clay, but it has not touched the life within. To be candid, guns and bombs have ruined or spoilt the outer casement, while the priceless pearl within the shell has been unimpaired, untouched, no matter where has been the danger zone. I like to think that our losses here below on earth have been God's gains up there beyond in heaven. Listen to this from a young cavalry officer in the trenches, where later on he was blown to pieces. He wrote to me saying:—"If I am killed, as I expect to be, tell mother not to worry, because but for this war she would never have had me with her in heaven. This hell let loose in Flanders has brought me to my senses, and I have asked God's pardon." Multiply that incident ten thousand times, and you will come to see what I am driving at. God doesn't want evil, but He permits evil because out of it He can and does draw good.

I believe that this war, a terribly physical evil though it is, has sent heavenward souls innumerable who might otherwise have lost their way thither. Meanwhile I am satisfied that God in His good time will give to the Allies a great and lasting victory against a foe who, having started out to Kaiserise Prussia and Prussianise Germany, meant to Germanize the world. "World domination or downfall" was the cry. During the last eighteen months we have ...rated that pan-Prussianism in theory is nothing better than pan-paganism, while in practice, as seen in Belgium and Poland and Serbia, its right name is pan-brutalism. Like our Crusade forefathers of old, who went forth to rescue the sepulchre of Christ and the overthrow of the Saracen, we, too, forgetful of the claims of home, have rallied to the fight, ready to lay down our lives for the Gospel of Christ and for the suppression of Prussianism, which leaves no room for Christ. With a cause like this before us we may exclaim with our Captain King, even Jesus Christ, "O death, where is thy sting! O grave, where is thy victory!" My friends, when the shout of victory shall roll from Petrograd to Rome, from Paris to London, and Edinburgh to Dublin, we shall then add to our prayer, "Death is swallowed up in victory."

GERMANS INCREASING TRADE WITH SWISS

(Special Dispatch.)
PARIS, Saturday.

An editor of the Paris Temps who has passed some time in Switzerland tells of the increasing trade with Germany, which he fears will absorb all the external commerce of Switzerland in spite of the war.

Germany, he says, is exporting to Switzerland thousands of carloads of potatoes weekly. Of all kinds of merchandise he estimates that 900 carloads enter Switzerland from Germany every day, while only 150 enter from France.

He gives numerous instances of the business efficiency of the Germans. For instance, a Geneva newspaper bought a printing press in Germany. A mechanic arrived with the machine to set it up. Asked why he was not in the ranks, he said:—"I have just come from the front, where I have been since the beginning of the war. The house for which I work obtained for me a furlough of ten days to come and set up this machine in Geneva."

A Geneva bookseller had a call from a commercial traveller of Furth. Asked why he was not a soldier, he replied:—"I am a soldier, but the military authorities know that I am a commercial traveller. So for the second time in eighteen months they have given me permission to call on my customers in Switzerland and Holland."

Some of the writer's friends wanted to give a concert in Geneva and tried to get some French musical scores from Paris. No answer was received, and, the date for the concert being near, they wrote to Leipsig. Four days later the scores arrived, enabling the rehearsals to begin.

France absolutely prohibits the exportation of rubber. A Geneva house, being unable to obtain dress shields there, applied to a German firm and got as many

GERMANS PUT PRICE ON DARING FRENCH AVIATOR, DEAD OR ALIVE

"Corsair of the Air" Is the Principal Leader of Bombing Expeditions Across the Frontier, and Berlin Considers His Exploits so Dangerous $6,250 Is Offered to Any Man Who Will Capture or Kill Him.

(Special Dispatch.)
PARIS, Saturday.

On the head of one man in the French army the German government has put a price. This man has caused them damage of a grievous kind and with persistency which seems to know no limit.

The sum of 25,000 marks ($6,250) will be paid for Captain A., of the French aviation service, dead or alive. The French government has been very careful to avoid giving his name, and it is believed the Germans know him only by description.

It was Captain X. who three successive times went to bombard the German powder and ammunition factory at Rottweil, in Wuertemberg. On each occasion he performed an extraordinary feat.

The sobriquet of "corsair of the air" has been given to him. Some of his exploits partake of the ruthless vigor of the true pirate.

Captain X. is the principal leader of the French bombing expeditions, and he seems like a hero who has dropped out of a romantic novel. Danger is his very life, and he plays with it so that his adventures during the war have been almost fantastic.

He began by being made prisoner as a result of an injury to his motor which obliged him to descend in a neutral country, but he succeeded in obtaining his release. When he returned to France he was sent to the eastern frontier for active service.

Though he demands much from his subordinates, he sets a good example himself. When he goes out with them for a bombardment each of the machines carries a special sign. He takes his position about eight thousand feet above the object to be destroyed, while his companions are discharging their missiles.

Through his glasses he watches the results and notes the points which have been struck and the actual damage done and makes a record of it all in his notebook. When the others have completed their work the Captain descends in a spiral, aims with precision and delivers the final, and generally the most fatal, blows to the enemy property.

Guards His Flock.

He waits to judge the effects of his work and then he starts for home, escorting his men and acting as a faithful dog does to the flock, hurrying to the assistance of those who may need it. It is not without having run the most serious kinds of risks that he has become the terror of the Germans.

During one bombardment he fought with a large German aviatik armed with two machine guns. His whole machine was seriously damaged by shots, a number of important parts of the apparatus being cut and torn, but he continued on into German territory and went direct to a railway station and factory which he had set out to bombard, carried out his mission and returned safely to his base.

The first time he went to attack the powder factory of Rottweil was on March 3, 1915. The journey lasted five hours and twenty minutes. Ten minutes after he began the attack on the plant a conflagration was noticed beneath him, and he realised that he had destroyed at least an important part of it. He had brought four large shells with him and he descended very low in order to deliver his attack so that each of the shells struck home. One of them landed in the mixing basin of nitric acid and glycerine and the others fell on the buildings. Flames at once arose and the smoke made a column forty-five hundred feet high.

His next important bombardment was at the railway station which the French authorities indicated as V. To accomplish his task here he dropped down almost to the station roof.

Then came the second bombardment at Rottweil, on April 26, 1915. Ten four-inch shells were dropped on the powder factory and caused a fire and an intense black smoke which entirely hid the building from view. Captain X. remained for a quarter of an hour above his object at an altitude of five thousand feet, tantalizing the two vertical batteries which the Germans were aiming at him and the section of 77 millimetre guns which had been placed around the factory for its defence after the first bombardment.

Damaged Two Zeppelins.

The French officer returned to his camp with eleven shrapnel fragments in his machine. In the same month he dropped six shells in the great shed which harbored two Zeppelins, both of which were seriously damaged. The three special batteries placed for the protection of the sheds fired at him constantly, but failed to injure him, though they damaged his machine to some extent.

A few months later he bombarded railway station indicated as C. He started out at four o'clock in the morning with five other machines and in the afternoon he was back at his base, took up eight more shells and returned to attack the station for the second time in the course of one day.

The flight, in which more recently and for the third time he attacked the powder factory at Rottweil, was the most tragic which he ever carried out and at the same time the most successful.

Four other machines were to have started with him on that expedition, but one of them a few days earlier had attacked a train from only fifteen feet above the ground and the pilot was still ill as a consequence of injuries he had received. Another who was to have gone had trouble with his motor at the very beginning of the flight and had to return to the lines. There remained consequently only three. Besides the captain there were Lieutenant D. Corporal P.

The three started off together and followed the Swiss frontier to the Rhine and then entered the Black Forest and penetrated in the direction of the Wurtemberg plant. All had gone well until they were within a few miles of the latter, when several German chaser machines came out of the fog and spread themselves in fan shape to bar the way to the Frenchmen. The latter were carrying a ten hour supply of gasolene and a load of bombs and their machines consequently were slow and not easily manageable.

An Easy Target.

They offered a relatively easy target and could not defend themselves very satisfactorily. Mr. Jacques Moutane, who describes the incident, says the first to withstand the shock was the captain himself, who was attacked by a large monoplane of the type of Latham's Antoinette. Two men were on board and the machine was well known by the pilots who operated on the Alsatian side. The French officer replied with so much valor that the agressor judged it prudent not to insist and abandoned him in order to attack the machine of Corporal P.

The captain endeavored at once to go to the aid of his subordinate, but the adversary was much more rapid and after a short fight succeeded in bringing down the unfortunate corporal. During this time the captain was turning and swerving and did not lose a single point of the painful drama of which he was a powerless witness. But he decided to avenge himself.

After the fall of P. he started off on the way to the powder factory with the determined purpose of making the Germans pay dearly for the loss of his fellow aviator. He flew calmly, scorning the enemy who had gone above him in the hope of cutting him off and of attacking him, for the first success had encouraged the occupants of the big German machine.

Lieutenant D., who had continued his way without stopping, now saw himself surrounded by enemy machines. One of them brought him down, to the northeast of the town near the factory.

This death was considered a sad loss to the French aviation service. D. had distinguished himself several times in bombarding expeditions, often by night, and had been of a boldness worthy of his chief.

The Captain remained alone to accomplish his mission. Instead of turning back, as prudence might have dictated, for he still had a considerable distance to go before reaching his objective, he persevered all alone against the German machine and went and cast his eight shells slowly and with great care on the powder factory. All of them struck true.

His Sad Return.

A thick black smoke at once rose to the sky, the black smoke which this same bold pilot saw for the third time at the same place within a year. He remained, according to his custom, for ten minutes over the establishment, in order to make note of the result of his shelling, and then he started for home, along the same route by which he had come, not bothering to make a single detour to avoid enemy machines.

The alarm, however, had been given, and when he arrived over the Black Forest he perceived a veritable curtain of aeroplanes waiting for him. They all swooped toward him in the hope of bringing him down.

By clever manoeuvring he avoided half a dozen of them, and then he was obliged to engage in close combat with two, the second of which awaited him above L. The duel with the latter was particularly bitter and the Captain ended it by forcing his adversary to take to flight.

Quietly he resumed his way toward the French trenches, mourning the death of his comrades. Near the lines he perceived French chaser machines which were awaiting the return of his squadron.

One of them approached and made signs to inquire if the other aeroplanes were coming. The Captain with a gesture of desolation indicated that there was no one to wait for, as he was the sole survivor of the expedition. And a miraculous survivor he was, for when his machine was examined it was found that the top and nacelle were riddled with bullets; some of them had even passed between the Captain's legs. The supports were cut, the joints broken and the wings torn by shell fragments.

When they spoke to the Captain about these numerous injuries he replied simply:—

"Of course it was to be expected that they would wait for me on my return."

The following day the German official communication made this announcement:—

"Under Officer B. on his first trip succeeded in bringing down two enemy aeroplanes which were on a bombarding expedition. The third succeeded in escaping."

The German under officer, it is interesting to note, soon became a lieutenant and received three decorations, one being the Iron Cross of the first class, which was given to him for the above exploit.

Recently this German officer B. was flying in upper Alsace when his motor stopped, the machine fell and the pilot was killed. Captain X. gallantly regretted the nature of the accident to the German aviator and regretted still more that it had not been left to him personally to avenge the death of Lieutenant D. and Corporal P.

NEWS ODDS AND ENDS FROM THE WAR ZONES

A disastrous fire has destroyed the prison camp, Quartier Montplaisir, Lyons, France. There were, however, no casualties among the 1,000 German prisoners.

During the Russian invasion of East Prussia every library in the villages and towns were destroyed, so that the inhabitants were left without any books. In order to restore the books, the Berliner Goethebund has started a subscription, headed by Herr Krupp, who gave 5,000 marks ($1,250).

As the men of the Fire Department of Limbach, Germany, are all at the front, the Burgomaster has replaced them with boys, who are drilled daily to make them as efficient as possible.

German for French on Turks' Menu New "Frightfulness"

Government Decree Changing Language on Bills of Fare in Constantinople Exasperates Restaurant Keepers and Their Customers.

(Special Dispatch.)
PARIS, Saturday.

According to a recent issue of the Journal des Debats, restaurant proprietors of Constantinople are having great difficulty in readjusting their bills of fare as the result of a decree by the Turkish government that all foreign words except German shall be tabooed. As French for years literally has been the heart and soul of the restaurant menu, many of the chop house frequenters are annoyed.

Following the introduction telling of the abolition of Italian, Russian, English, French and other tongues of the Allied nations, the Journal des Debats goes on to say:—

"Between Germany and Turkey, however, there is quite a difference. In Berlin they have replaced the tabooed words by national idioms. In Constantinople however the forbidden words have been replaced by those from the German vocabulary. This change has been easily accomplished in a city where William II. has upward of twenty thousand subjects.

"The innovation, however, has not been made without some trouble. As the language of the French has been from time immemorial the language of the diplomatist and of the kitchen, the restaurant owners are finding themselves in hot water. A correspondent of the Lokalanzeiger relates that he was received there with open arms and received much credit because he was able to read and translate the bills of fare.

"Thanks to him the 'soupe a la Jardiniere' that we know nothing about, but which is supposed to be a favorite French soup, has been converted into 'die suppe nach landgut,' which literally means the soup of the landed property, or of the ...ounds, a correct version of it perhaps when the vegetables have not been thoroughly washed.

"Mayonnaise dressing is now called by this charming phrase, 'Tischgemenael mit Eierlunke,' a mixture of table sauce and eggs. German may be a beautiful language, but for the least things it has the most words. 'Poulet en Cocotte' has caused still more trouble. 'Huhn mit Gemeuse,' as it is called, is indeed very vague.

"One morning an eating house keeper approached the journalist with a very preoccupied air. He had received an order to make up a dinner. The host had invited to his table some German officers. He desired to have Turkish dishes, but he also desired that they be called by German names. The eating house owner wanted to know how in the world he was to translate 'Pilaf (puffed rice). The journalist suggested the word, 'Reis'; but rice alone is not puffed rice and the puffed rice is not made only of rice.

"The owner of the eating house was anything but pleased. He was exasperated when he ran down his bill of fare and came to 'Hunkia bejendi.' The writer offered as a substitution, 'Dem Kaiser hat's gefallen' (the dish that pleased the Emperor). But as this version of it would only tend to make the rest of the menu more difficult the owner asked for still another translation. The next one offered was 'Brei von Zerfruchten und kleingeschnitten Hammelfleisch' (hasty pudding of whites of eggs with steak of lamb mashed fine). The journalist had beautifully explained to his friend that 'fruit d'oeuf' in German signified 'ubergine.' He immediately saw, however, that this finishing touch was the last nail hammered into the coffin."

Mr. Sven Hedin Sends Copy of a Mother's Last Letter to Soldier

Found on Body of Youth Borne to Grave, It Tells in Homely Fashion of Care for Son Whom She Was Never Again to See Alive.

(Special Dispatch.)
BERLIN, Saturday.

Mr. Sven Hedin, well known writer and war correspondent, who has been on the Prussian front, tells a very pathetic incident of the horrors of the war, which he is embodying in a book that he now has in preparation, and which is printed in the Prager Tagblatt.

"On a little hill stands a small chapel with its churchyard," writes Mr. Sven Hedin. "There were many newly made graves there and in one of them a major was buried yesterday. Four soldiers were digging a new grave. Two peasants were bringing a dead Austrian soldier on a stretcher. He had a bullet hole in his forehead. They placed the body on the ground and returned to the valley. There they picked up another body and placed it on their stretcher.

"Meanwhile the soldiers had dug the grave still deeper. Presently the peasants returned with their new load. This soldier had received a bullet in his body. His pale, handsome face had a wonderfully peaceful expression. His body had lain for some time on the field in the valley with hundreds of other dead soldiers. In his pocket there was a letter from his mother, from Hirschberg, Bohemia. The envelope was missing. It read:—

"'Dear Alex:—To-day we received another post card from you, in which you again ask that we send you underclothing. We sent all this some time ago, but I suppose it has been delayed in delivery. It certainly should not take so long to reach you. Have you received our post cards and letters? How are you? Have the soldiers not yet received their winter underclothing? We have read in the newspapers that the soldiers have been provided for the winter. In what part of the country are you?

"'I am glad to know that you are with the men from Hirschberg. You can at least entertain one another. What do you mean by saying that the end may soon come? Your postcards always take two weeks to reach us. Just think what could happen in all this time!

"'How is the weather where you are? Take care of your health and follow my instructions. God will take care of you; place your faith in Him. He will protect you in all danger. We pray daily for you and for all the soldiers in the field.

"'We all embrace you and kiss you.

"'YOUR LOVING MOTHER.'

"They were simple but heartrending words. For the dead young soldier they were undoubtedly the dearest words of all in his last hours, for the letter lay near his heart when he died for his country. How they must have strengthened and encouraged him to the last! But now he is dead, and his mother will never see him again.

"There are millions of letters like this. How terrible is this war! Yet what a power and strength will such suffering and sorrow develop in a people which in future years can look back with honor to this awful time."

CAPTAIN DREYFUS NOT AT THE FRONT

(Special Dispatch.)
BERLIN, Saturday.

According to the German newspapers, Captain Dreyfus is not with the French troops at the front, as has been reported, nor is he a staff officer with the French Ministry of War. According to the Zurich correspondent of the Berliner Tageblatt, he is living peacefully with his family in that city.

"I see Captain Dreyfus very often," says the correspondent, always accompanied by a son or a daughter or other member of his family. He seems to be afraid to go out alone. He no longer has the appearance of a military man. He has the appearance of a man who is tired of everything and broken hearted. How different when I knew him in Paris before he ever dreamed of going through the horrors of captivity on Devil's Island! He is bent and prematurely old and seems to have lost all ambition."

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

THE CORPSE THAT KNEW THE LAW.

By F. A. MITCHEL.

David Wakefield was known in that far westerly region he inhabited for having as many lives as a cat. Thrice he was left for dead after altercations, and four times in illness the doctors gave him up. Once he tumbled off a cliff a hundred feet high, was caught on the limbs of a tree and landed on his feet without a scratch. But now Wakefield was dead. There had been altogether too much shooting in Paradise, and the people resolved to stop it. Wakefield was the next man to shoot some one, and the committee, wishing to make an example of him and fearing that if they looked into the matter they might run against a case of self defense or something of the kind, though they gave him a trial, did not take the trouble to summon witnesses for the defense. But, being law abiding men, they were very particular that the court routine should be observed even to asking the culprit if he had anything to say why sentence should not be passed upon him. He replied that he had been a lawyer in the better days and could clear himself, but what he wanted was rest in the grave.

And so he passed out. He was "hanged by the neck until he was dead," and papers were on file to show that he was physically and legally a corpse. The case would have been forever closed had not a young doctor who had reversed the usual course by beginning practice and studying afterward stolen him from his grave. Wakefield came to life in a warm room, sniffed a bottle, stimulated himself and when the doctor came back to cut him up was just setting the glass down on a table.

Wakefield, being "flat broke," offered for $100 to refrain from informing of the doctor's breach of the law. The doctor refused the offer, and Wakefield sued him for interfering with his lawful sepulcher. Since Wakefield was legally dead the committee did not see how they could deprive him of life. But they granted him a trial of his suit against the doctor, in which the claimant laid the damages at $1,000. About that time a lawyer came from an eastern law school and hung out his shingle. The doctor retained him. Wakefield stated his case in court thus:

"Your honor, I am legally a corpse, and this case must be tried on such grounds. Death, according to the law, separates a man from all his earthly possessions except his body. It is a maxim of common law that there can be no property in a corpse—that is, no one living can own it. My corpse is my own property"—

"I claim," interrupted the opposing counsel, "that the plaintiff is Wakefield's ghost. Since he places his case on technicalities I will do the same. Let him prove that he is not a disembodied spirit."

"It is not necessary," replied the plaintiff. "The law takes no cognizance of ghosts. When a man is dead the law says that he shall stay dead. His apparition has no standing in court, though his body has.

"It is the duty of the common law," the claimant went on, "to protect the repose of the dead.' The law holds that the corpse, being the owner of itself before death, possesses certain rights over itself after it becomes dead. Every corpse has the inalienable right to six feet of ground to be buried in and the right of being buried. The law holds the owner of the premises on which a man dies responsible for his burial. This corpse died on grounds under the jurisdiction of the courts. The courts buried it, and the courts are responsible for its being left untouched in its grave."

"Your honor," interrupted opposing counsel, "the law gives no civil remedy for the stealing of a body, for there is no property right in a corpse to give any one a right to recover in a court for violation of sepulcher."

"The learned counsel," pursued the claimant, "should insert the word 'living.' I admit that no living person has a right to recover for violation of sepulcher. That right is vested in the corpse. But in previous cases the corpse has not come into court to claim its rights. A civil action may be brought for breaking and entering a place where the body is buried, the same constituting a trespass, for which damages can be recovered. The law has often interfered to protect the rights of us corpses. And as no one can own any body except his own no one can remove a body without the court's permission, which can only be granted in behalf of the body itself.

"Having shown your honor that the defendant is only accountable to me, a corpse, and that he has willfully interfered with my rest in the grave, has brought me back to a life that is irksome to me, I ask that he be commanded by the court to pay me the damages claimed."

The judge looked at the defendant's counsel, but he was so dazed by the remarkable legal knowledge on the part of a corpse that he could not think of a single argument in rebuttal. He collapsed.

At this point a stranger in those parts arose and said to his honor:

"I am Judge Tatterton of the supreme court of —— and traveling in your county. Permit me to say that the points stated by the plaintiff are legally correct in every particular."

"Judgment for the plaintiff," said the judge, "and be sure to enter it in favor of the corpse of David Wakefield, together with costs."

Mike Was There Too.

"I was there," said the reporter, "and I know this is true.

"It was during the Spanish-American war. Most of the boys had enlisted in the navy, and there were more than a score aboard the converted cruiser St. Paul, commanded by the then Captain Sigsbee, who was commander of the ill fated Maine at the time she was destroyed in Havana harbor.

"We were slowly making passage out of New York harbor one bright, sunshiny morning, and several hundred of the crew were lined up along the ice rail of the main deck watching the various craft plying up and down the river.

"By and by a magnificent swanlike private yacht, owned by a prominent Philadelphian, steamed swiftly alongside of us, and when we were within easy speaking distance a beautiful and elegantly attired woman on the bridge called out in a clear soprano voice to the officer on our bridge, 'Is Captain Sigsbee aboard?'

"Before the man addressed could reply a huge, brawny coal heaver, with a voice that seemed to almost make the ship vibrate, shouted from the main deck, 'Yes, Captain Sigsbee is aboard, an' so is Mike O'Neill!'

"In the roar of laughter which followed even the fair inquirer after the captain joined, though the officer on our bridge turned purple with rage and mortification."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Capacity Limited.

To a swell cafe I led her, and on terrapin I fed her, yet methought I noted sadness in her eye. Then as we departed and for a street car started, she let out a large and soulful sigh. The Donkey's Head.

Among the most extraordinary pieces of symbolism known to have been used by the early Asiatics was a figure of a donkey's head used as a representative of the deity. There is no doubt whatever that the same emblem was once used among the Hittites, the Egyptians and one or two other nations as a symbol of their red god, Set. The superstition of the yellow donkey of India, the story of the swift ass of eastern Asia and the ass of Dionysius and many other marvelous ass stories are all survivals of that curious form of religious worship the adoration of the ass' head.

They Both Knew.

The fool said one day in the king's presence, "I am the king!" And the king laughed, for he knew that his fool was wrong.

A week later the king was angry because of an error he had committed and exclaimed, "I am a fool!" And the fool laughed, for he knew that his king was right.

Suffered From Nerves
Could Not Sleep

To the thousands of people who are tossing on sleepless beds night after night, or who pace the floor with nerves unhinged, and to whose eyes sleep will not come, Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills offer the blessing of sound refreshing slumber.

They restore the equilibrium of the deranged nerve centres, thereby producing peaceful, undisturbed, refreshing sleep, and will cause you to get up in the morning feeling that you have the strength and vitality to go through your day's work.

Mrs. Hollas Knox, St. John, N.B, writes: "I suffered greatly with my nerves, I could not sleep at night, nor work, and the least little thing worked on my mind and bothered me Last winter I thought I would go out of my mind, I would screech out, and my mother really thought I was going crazy with my nerves It was so terrible I would hold my head and cry. I tried two doctors, but they did not do me any good. I thought I would tell you that to-day I am perfectly cured by using three boxes of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, and I can recommend them to all sufferers from nervous troubles. You can tell everyone that they are the only thing that did me any good."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills have been on the market for nearly a quarter of a century, and are universally known as the best remedy for all heart and nerve troubles.

V.C. FOR SWIMMING

Unique Feat of British Lieutenant Saved Machine Guns

The most heroic act of the entire Kamerun campaign was performed by Lieutenant Butler, of the British army, according to an officer correspondent. "I was with the land forces at the time," he said. "We had placed two guns across the wide Sanaga River to repel what we thought was a small force of attacking Germans. These guns were left in charge of a native officer. All our boats had gone away, and we were surprised to hear a terrific fire across the river. The Germans were attacking in great force and we feared the native troops would abandon our guns. Our commander called for a volunteer to save them. Butler stepped forth, took off his uniform and plunged into the stream. The Germans had gained a vantage point on the opposite bank and saw him dive. When he came to the surface they riddled the waters in his vicinity with bullets. Butler dived and swam under water in a zigzag course. He had to come to the surface for breath and each time he showed his head the Germans fired volleys at him. How he escaped death is just one of those marvels which occasionally happen in war. He gained the other bank just as the native troops were about to abandon the guns. Amid another volley from the Germans he joined the gun crews, and turning their muskets toward the flanking Germans riddled them with shot. They retreated and the guns were saved. For his heroism Butler received the coveted Victoria Cross."

TAXICABS IN KAMERUN

Remarkable Campaign of Anglo-French Near the Equator

Fifty London taxicabs operating about one hundred miles from the equator played a most important part in the fall of the Kamerun country on the west coast of Africa, according to Mr. John H. Howell, sub-lieutenant of H.M.S. Astraea, who took part in practically all of the campaign against the Germans there, as it was waged by a British column from Duala. The capture of this country, which is nearly as large as Germany, was accomplished only after one of the most brilliant and perhaps least known campaigns by Franco-British troops. The capture accomplished only after a year of hard fighting in which individual sacrifice and courage such as is rivalled only by the feats of the allied armies in France and Flanders have been displayed.

LIBERAL WITH RECRUITS.

Hon. Dr. Pyne Provides for Students Who Enlist.

Hon. Dr. Pyne, Minister of Education, has issued regulations covering the enlistment of young men in High and continuation schools.

"The department will exempt for overseas service young men who are preparing for the examinations of next June for admission to Normal schools and faculties of education from said examinations, and will grant them the certificates based thereon."

Conditions for inspection are set forth, and it is stated that the students must attend until April 20, and must enlist before May 12, if they are to be passed.

"The Minister recommends the staffs to deal as liberally as possible with the claims of each candidate," adds the circular.

The water in which potatoes have been boiled will clean flat silver very well.

The war is likely to change the thermometers of the British Empire. An agitation is on foot in England to substitute the Reaumar thermometer (French) for the Fahrenheit (German). It certainly does seem more reasonable to calculate freezing point from zero rather than from 32 degrees above.

BAIT

LAST year in Fresno County, California, there were orders for over one hundred windmills sent to one mail order house alone. In each case the man who bought "long distance" had to pay the freight, haul the windmill out to his place and stand the expense of erecting it—WHEN, if he had been wise, he could have bought the same, identical windmill at his local dealer's for the same money, could have had it taken to his place and erected without cost or trouble and without the freight from Chicago to Fresno tacked on. "Fishing for suckers" may be good sport—for the other fellow—but it's hard on the suckers. Let us shun this "out-of-town" bait religiously.

SPENT COUNTLESS NIGHTS UNABLE TO REST OR SLEEP

Was Run Down and in Terribly Nervous Condition—By Using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food Gained Regularly

In this letter is told once more the story which comes from many thousands of women. It is the story of exhausted nerves, of a run-down system and of all the accompanying misery of sleeplessness, headaches and loss of energy and vigour.

But there is a silver lining to this cloud. There is the light of new hope and courage which comes with the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

This letter is so representative of the kind we are daily receiving that you can judge from it what you might expect from this treatment under similar circumstances.

Mrs. Conrad Schmidt, R. R. No. 1, Milverton, Ont., writes: "Two years ago last spring I was run down, had nervous prostration, and was in a terribly nervous condition. I could not sleep or eat. Could scarcely count the nights that I passed without sleep, and if I did eat, had sick headaches and vomiting spells. My limbs would swell so badly that it hurt me to walk. I would jump up in bed, awakened by bad dreams; in fact, I was so bad I thought I could not live, and started to use Dr. Chase's Nerve Food without much hope.

"It was not long before I began to improve under this treatment, and I can truthfully say it has done me a world of good. It took some time to get the nervous system restored, but I kept right on using the Nerve Food regularly, and gradually gained in health and strength. I have a fine baby boy now. He weighed 12 lbs. at birth, and though my friends were anxious after the condition I was in, I got over that fine, and now weigh 120 lbs. Before using the Nerve Food I was a mere skeleton."

You are not asked to expect miracles from Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. But if you are willing to feed back your exhausted nerves to health and strength you can depend absolutely on this great food cure to produce the desired results. 50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Ltd., Toronto.

MAY DIVIDE BIG ESTATES.

To Make Effort to Relieve Country From Outside Dependence.

Necessity brought on by the war bids fair to bring about laws for the redistribution of the land in England compared with which David Lloyd-George's plans before the war were mild. Although the first announcement of the Lloyd-George scheme six years ago seemed likely to shake England to its foundations and ultimately did lead to a change in the fundamentals of the constitution, scarcely a protest is to be heard against the new and far more radical plans in contemplation.

Where the Lloyd-George budget, by heavy increases in the taxes on unused land or land held solely for pleasure purposes aimed merely to make the holding of great estates of this description unprofitable to their owners, the present plan, already on the way of formulation into law by the Board of Agriculture, aims at cutting up these estates by condemnation proceedings and forced sales to the state, title to be retained by the state and the small holdings leased directly from the Government.

Yet this scheme, which in the opinion of many observers will prove the longest step yet taken toward state socialism, appears likely to become law with little or no opposition. There are several reasons for this.

Two years of war have taught Englishmen new things about the powers of the Government. Since the state has gone into the business of munition manufacturing on an enormous scale, taking over and operating private plants and industries right and left and extending its regulatory powers, the idea of the state as landlord does not seem so remarkable.

It is recognized now that the present absolute dependence of England on outside food supplies is a very real peril. Government officials have found that this dependence lies largely in the relatively small amount of open land under cultivation. Denmark, with a smaller area and denser population than England, exports food to England. The reason is that Denmark years ago broke up her large land holdings into small farms, which are skilfully and intensively cultivated.

Nature's Marvels.

Naturalists consider the elephant's trunk the most marvellous miracle of Nature. It contains over 4,000 muscles—a great many more than are found in the entire human body. By the aid of these muscles the trunk will uproot trees or gather grass, lift a cannon or a nut, kill a man or brush off a fly. It is as useful as a hand with all its fingers to supply the elephant with food, and, being hollow, is used as a suction pump. No other animal has a single member or organ so perfect and so useful as this.

A VOLCANIC MONUMENT.

Wonderful Old Balancing Rock Near Portland, Ore.

One of the most remarkable rocks in the world is that known as the "balancing rock," which stands on the bank of the Willamette river a short distance above the city of Portland, Ore. Rising from a broad base is a small column roughly round in shape. Just above this is a huge mass of rock bearing a tree on the summit, the total height of rock and column being about a hundred feet.

Although a great deal larger and heavier than the pillar on which it stands, the big rock is very accurately balanced. For how many centuries this odd freak has stood not even the wisest scientists are able to determine, but it has evidently been there for a very long period.

The entire rock is of a volcanic nature, and the most singular thing about it is the fact that the knob and pillar are entirely disjointed from one another. Wind and weather no doubt are slowly wearing the "balancing rock" away, but the process is so imperceptible that, failing some unforeseen catastrophe, the monument will probably endure for many centuries.—Wide World Magazine.

THE FLY ON THE PANE

It Will Crawl to the Top, but Will Fly Back to the Bottom.

A fly on a window pane will crawl to the top, fly back to the bottom and crawl up again. This order is seldom reversed—why no one knows. It is on record that a fly crawled up a window pane thirty-two times, returning each time a-wing.

Hens scratch for food with the sun behind them, the reason being that the rays reflect on the minute particles. A blind hen will pick grain and not miss a kernel.

Cats seldom lie with their feet to the fire. Usually they lie on the left side. Dogs lie with their fore paws to the fire.

A mouse will ignore a food supply sufficient for a meal and run great risks to nibble at a wholesale supply. It will hide at the source of food supply and not depart therefrom until actually disturbed. It isn't true that a mouse runs to its hole at the first alarm.

Find a harmless little snake the length of a lead pencil and provide a box for it in the house, visit it daily and at the end of three months it will crawl to you for food.

Goldfish usually swim around a globe to the right. They can be taught to take a fly out of the hand in six weeks' time. The presence of other fish in the globe is generally ignored by goldfish. Drop a piece of chip on the surface of the water and it will frighten a fish.

Sheep spend more time grazing than do cattle and horses. Sheep will eat for twelve hours out of twenty-four.—New York World.

FIGHTING NATURE.

What One Man's Patient Effort Wrung From a Desert in France.

In the southwest of France, between the rivers Adour and Garonne, are long stretches of pine woods, green and cool.

Where these pines now stand was a barren waste in the middle of the last century. Sun and wind vied with each other in making the land drier and dustier. Over the stormy bay of Biscay came winds that set up great sandstorms and sometimes buried whole villages. The whole region was one of hopelessness and despair. Fate was against it.

But finally there came a man who acknowledged fate only as something to be overcome. This man, one Bremontier, was an inspector of roads. He began fencing in the desert. He built a fence and behind it planted broom seeds. Behind the broom seeds he put seeds of the pine. The fence protected the broom seeds, and the broom grew. Then the broom in its turn afforded shelter to the delicate pine shoots.

Soon the pines spread, and their rough roots bound the sandy soil together. The first step was accomplished. Then canals were made to drain the wet parts and carry water to the dry.

Thus did one man by patient effort turn a dreary desert into a home for an industrious and healthy population. It was an instance of triumph over fate.—New York Tribune.

The Business of Life.

Life is a business we are all apt to mismanage, either living recklessly from day to day or suffering ourselves to be gulled out of our moments by the inanities of custom. We should despise a man who gave as little activity and forethought to the conduct of any other business. But in this, which is the one thing of all others, since it contains them all, we cannot see the forest for the trees. One brief impression obliterates another. There is something stupefying in the recurrence of unimportant things, and it is only on rare provocations that we can rise to take an outlook beyond daily concerns and comprehend the narrow limits and great possibilities of our existence.—Robert Louis Stevenson.

LOOK AT A CHILD'S TONGUE WHEN CROSS, FEVERISH AND SICK

Take No Chance! Move Poisons From Liver and Bowels at Once

Mothers can rest easily after giving "California Syrup of Figs," because in a few hours all the clogged-up waste, sour bile and fermenting food gently moves out of the bowels, and you can have a well, playful child again. Children simply will not take the time from play to empty their bowels, and they become tightly packed, liver gets sluggish and stomach disordered.

When cross, feverish, restless, see if tongue is coated, then give this delicious "fruit laxative." Children love it, and it can not cause injury. No difference what ails your little one—if full of cold, or a sore throat, diarrhoea, stomach-ache, bad breath, remember, a gentle "inside cleansing" should always be the first treatment given. Full directions for babies, children of all ages and grown-ups are printed on each bottle.

Beware of counterfeit fig syrups. Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," then look carefully and see that it is made by the "California Fig Syrup Company." We make no smaller size. Hand back with contempt any other fig syrup.

SINGING SANDS.

Peculiar Properties of These Curious Freaks of Nature.

The most notable of those curious freaks of nature, "singing sands," are those of the Hawaiian island of Kauai. When a small quantity of this sand is clapped between the hands it is said to give forth a sound so shrill as actually to resemble a hoot. Put into a bag and violently shaken, the sand emits a noise strangely like the bark of a dog.

Similar sands also occur in the Colorado desert, where also are to be found those curious nonsedentary sands that continually travel hither and thither over the vast plain of clay. Their movements are induced by the winds, and when a strong breeze is blowing the particles of which they are composed give out an audible humming or singing.

Under the microscope these sands show an almost perfectly spherical form, so that they roll upon each other at the slightest impulse, a circumstance that also accounts for the rapidity with which the sands travel over the desert. One theory advanced with respect to the "singing" of these sands is that it is due to an exceedingly thin film of gas that covers the grains. Gathered and removed from the desert, the sands lose their vocal properties.—Exchange.

Spelling the Tobacco.

Winchcombe St. Peter, in Gloucestershire, began the cultivation of tobacco in England toward the end of the sixteenth century, and the inhabitants are said to have derived considerable profit from it until the trade was placed under restrictions. An entry in Pepy's Diary on Sept. 19, 1667, concerning the coming of a cousin of his to town proceeds: "She tells me how the life guard which we thought a little while since was sent down into the country about some insurrection was sent to Winchcombe to spoil the tobacco there, which, it seems, the people there do plant contrary to law and have always done and still been under force and danger of having it spoiled, as it hath been oftentimes, and yet they will continue to plant it. The place, she says, is a miserable poor place."—London Globe.

Europe's Middle Classes.

In France is an organization called the Congress des Classes Moyennes. Translated, this means "Congress of the Middle Classes." The sharpness with which class lines are drawn in Europe continues to puzzle some Americans, although there are others who think we have class divisions without the names. The French middle classes correspond to the German "mittelstandt" and comprise the middlemen of the towns and the country and also many contractors, master builders and clerks. The organization has an annual luncheon, at which the most distinguished men of France are accustomed to speak.

SOOTHED THE SPIRITS.

A Preliminary to House Building in the Shan States.

House building in the Shan States is not such an easy matter as it looks. Mrs. Leslie Milne, author of "Shans at Home" tells how she arranged for the building of a bamboo house at Namkham, and, though the materials arrived, no progress seemed to be made with the actual construction:

"When I first spoke of house building I had been asked what to me seemed an irrelevant question—namely, the day of the week on which I was born. When I answered that it was late on Saturday night or early on Sunday morning I did not know that my reply was of importance. As time went on and the bamboos lay untouched, looking like long green snakes in the grass, I complained of the delay only to be told that until I could tell them my birthday they were afraid to begin work, as the spirits would be angry if the offerings for the proper day were not made.

"I suggested that the building should begin, I braving the anger of the spirits, but they thought the work too dangerous, as the risk was not only for me, but for the workmen as well. On consulting a wise man a way was found out of the difficulty. He decreed that an extra large offering to content the spirits of both Saturday and Sunday should be made. This was done, and the building commenced next day."

SAILORS DREAD JONAHS.

They Draw Only One Moral From the Biblical Story.

There is still firm belief in Jonahs at sea. Recently a sailor, who was prosecuted for failing to join a British admiralty transport, pleaded in excuse that he was known to seamen generally as Jonah, and that the sailors on the transport had threatened to throw him overboard if he did join.

Certainly if superstition ever could be rational, they had some reason for theirs. This sailor had served on the Titanic and the Empress of Ireland, both of which were wrecked, and on the Lusitania and Florizan, both of which were torpedoed.

It seems a pity that sailors should know the story of the prophet Jonah, since they get only one moral from it. The book was certainly not written to instruct seamen how to deal with Jonahs.

Yet it is unfortunately the only moral which sailors seem to draw. Jonah is probably the character best known to them in the Old Testament, and what they know about him is that he caused bad weather through his own fault, and was very properly dealt with by his fellow voyagers. They forgot, if they ever knew, that the sailors cast lots to discover who was the cause of the bad weather and that lot fell upon Jonah.

The Jonahs of modern times are not discovered by such means, nor do they ask to be thrown overboard. They are assumed to be Jonahs because they have been uncommonly unfortunate. Perhaps they are pitied as well as shunned for their misfortune, but have done something to deserve them, and then the superstitious fear of their fellows becomes cruel.

The worst of it is that a Jonah may himself share the superstition and may be unnerved by the thought that he is marked out for misfortune.

But even landsmen who believe themselves free of superstition are apt to be intimidated by a run of ill luck. It unnerves them, and the wisest of us, if unnerved, are prone to superstition.

If there were no such tale in the Bible, sailors would believe in Jonahs under another name or under no name at all. They would think that there was some reason for a run of ill luck and that it must continue unless by some means the curse, whatever it may be, is removed.

The worst of superstitious tales is that they are often true, that men do have extraordinary runs of ill luck in life as at cards. The superstition lies in the conclusions that are drawn from them. For in life as in cards a run of ill luck is against the average, and sooner or later the average will right itself.

Superstition always suggests that there is something wrong. That is the devilish cunning of our animal fears, and the only way to frustrate it is to be against superstition altogether, in small things as in great—in fact, to cultivate an almost irrational unbelief in all superstitious tales.

We need to be almost superstitious in our fear of superstition, as a reformed drunkard needs to avoid wine.

TO REDUCE YOUR WEIGHT EASILY AND QUICKLY

If you are overstout the cause of your overstoutness is lack of oxygen-carrying power in the blood and faulty assimilation of food. Too little is being made into the harder tissues of muscle and too much into little globules of fat. Therefore you should correct the malassimilation and increase the oxygen-carrying power of the blood. To do this go to any good druggist and get oil of orthine, only sold in original packages and in capsule form, and take one capsule after each meal and one at bedtime till your weight is reduced to what it should be on all parts of the body. The effect of oil of orthine in capsule form is remarkable as a weight reducer, and it is perfectly safe.—E. J. T.

Any druggist can supply you or a large size box will be sent on receipt of $1.00. Address D. J. Little Drug Co., Box 1240, Montreal, Canada.

GIRLS! THICKEN AND BEAUTIFY YOUR HAIR AND STOP DANDRUFF

Try This! Your Hair Gets Wavy, Glossy and Abundant at Once

To be possessed of a head of heavy, beautiful hair; soft, lustrous, fluffy, wavy and free from dandruff is merely a matter of using a little Danderine.

It is easy and inexpensive to have nice, soft hair and lots of it. Just get a 25-cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine now—all drug stores recommend it—apply a little as directed and within ten minutes there will be an appearance of abundance, freshness, fluffiness and an incomparable gloss and lustre, and try as you will you can not find a trace of dandruff or falling hair; but your real surprise will be after about two weeks' use, when you will see new hair—fine and downy at first—yes—but really new hair — sprouting out all over your scalp—Danderine is, we believe, the only sure hair grower, destroyer of dandruff and cure for itchy scalp and it never fails to stop falling hair at once.

If you want to prove how pretty and soft your hair really is, moisten a cloth with a little Danderine and carefully draw it through your hair—taking one small strand at a time. Your hair will be soft, glossy and beautiful in just a few moments—a delightful surprise awaits everyone who tries this.

ICELAND IN SUMMER.

When the Sheen of Sunset Greets the Golden Glow of Sunrise.

Iceland! The name itself is a barrier to tourist travel. But let the tourist ignore prejudice and embark at Copenhagen or Leith and he will find a delightful voyage over a smiling summer sea if he should go during June, July or August. He will be hardly more than two days out of sight of land—the farreaching rockbound coast of Scotland or the snow crowned peaks of Iceland—but the journey across will occupy about four days. For his amusement the dolphins will tumble, the whales will spout, the seal will swim and the sea birds will fly, and there will be glorious sunrises and sunsets, with hardly more than two hours of night intervening. When he finally reaches Iceland he will see the sun set about 11:40 o'clock and rise again shortly after 12 o'clock, the golden glow of the sunset mingling with the golden glow of the sunrise.

All these delights cannot be assured to the winter traveler to Iceland. In fact, he will be obliged to keep his lamp burning until 10:30 in the morning and then light it again at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.—Mrs. W. F. Crafts in Christian Herald.

GERMANS GAIN A FOOTHOLD AT VAUX

FRENCH ARE COUNTER ATTACKING FIERCELY

Two Fierce Attacks Give the Germans a Foothold in Vaux

French Forces However Are Counter Attacking and Expect to Recover All the Lost Ground Before Night--Holland and Spain Indignant Over German Submarine Activity ---Dutch Parliament to Meet in Special Session.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

PARIS (Official Statement), April 1.—After two fierce attacks in which they lost many men the Germans have gained a foothold in the Village of Vaux, but the French are counter-attacking and are expected with the aid of fresh artillery to recover all lost ground before night.

Says Germans Have Promised Investigation

Examiner Special:

WASHINGTON, April 1.—The German Government has promised an immediate investigation of the alleged renewal of the German submarine activities in the English Channel resulting in disaster to vessels upon which Americans were passengers.

Dutch Parliament To Hold Special Session

Special to The Examiner.

AMSTERDAM, April 1.—Both houses of the Dutch Parliament have been summoned by telegraph to meet in special session Sunday to consider the sinking of the Dutch liner Tubantia by a German submarine. The Dutch Government has commandeered all railway material, and cancelled all military furloughs. The situation is said to have grown more critical, following the meeting of the highest officials of the army and navy, who were in session all day yesterday.

MADRID, April 1.—The Spanish Ministry to-day voted to forward an energetic protest to Germany because of the deaths of Spanish passengers aboard the Sussex torpedoed in the English Channel.

German Guns Shell Verdun-Paris Railway

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, April 1.—The German artillery has opened a bombardment of the Verdun-Paris railway from Avocourt woods, six miles to the north, said a Paris despatch to-day. The bombardment is believed to be a prelude to a German drive southward toward the railway, and a general assault on French positions northwest of Verdun. The cannonade is being accompanied by hourly air battles. The German victory at Malancourt, it was emphasized here to-day, renews the menace to all French fortified positions on the west bank of the Meuse. The French only relinquished the position under a terrific assault.

LONDON, April 1.—The Norwegian steamer Momento, one thousand tons, has been sunk by a German submarine with the loss of one life.

TWENTY-EIGHT PERSONS KILLED IN ZEPPELIN RAID

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, April 1.—Twenty-eight persons were killed and forty-four injured in last night's Zeppelin raid on England in which 74 bombs were dropped, the Admiralty announced this afternoon.

One of the raiding Zeppelins, the L-15, one of the latest models, was wrecked and brought down off the mouth of the Thames, 45 miles east of London and her crew captured before she sank in the harbour. Arriving off the east coast at about 8 p.m., the airships divided into two squadrons, one moving eastward and the other taking a more southerly course in the direction of the Thames. A single Zeppelin directed its route to the northeastern tier of the counties. Thousands of persons say the L-15 damaged in the havy bombardment that preceded her collapse. Searchlights illuminated the raider completely from bow to stern. Her crew manoeuvred desperately in an effort to escape the glare of light while shells burst all about her and people in the streets below cheered wildly.

The Zeppelin, apparently damaged, finally swung about and steered eastward toward the coast. She disappeared in the darkness and was found riding the waves, at dawn today.

All accounts agree that the dirigibles taking part in last night's raid wer much larger than those that visited England on previous raids. In thirty raids on England, Zeppelins and German seaplanes and Taubes have killed exactly 300 persons and wounded 671, according to official figures from the Admiralty.

DAVIDSON COMMISSION TO SIT HERE

Will Investigate Contracts Made With Local Firm

The Davidson Commission, appointed to investigate into war contracts made by the Canadian government, will hold a sitting in Peterborough on Tuesday morning next, April 4, in the Court House. Among the contracts to be investigated will be those to the Auburn Woollen Mills for the supply of khaki cloth. A number of witnesses have been summonsed to attend the session.

One way to secure a form of rural credit is to fix up the buildings and grounds neatly.

CLYDE SOCIALISTS ARRESTED

GLASGOW, April 1.—Four Socialist leaders were arrested to-day, charged with inciting Clyde munition workers to strike. They were remanded for trial without bail. More munition workers returned to work to-day and it is believed practically all will be back on Monday.

BERLIN, Ont., April 1.—Among the important business passed last night at the regular meeting of the Berlin Board of Trade, was the following resolution relative to recruiting and punishment of those who have skipped the country to avoid enlistment: "That this board heartily endorses the resolution of the Hamilton Recruiting League," of March 7th, 1916, addin gas a rider thereto, the recommendation that legislation be passed to prevent young men of military age leaving this country during the war and to bring back those who have already left with the intention to avoid military service."

CHILD WAS LET OUT OF CUTTER AT HUNTER AND AYLMER STREETS

To Go to Her Home in Ashburnham With Heavy Bundle and Basket—Testimony Yesterday Afternoon in Children's Aid Society Case

TAKEN HOME BY EXPESSMAN

The preliminary hearing of the Children's Aid Society case against Mrs. and Miss Tully of Smith was continued yesterday afternoon before County Magistrate Langley. A further adjournment was made until Monday morning at eleven o'clock, when it is likely the case will be concluded.

Teacher Testifies.

Miss Robina Carter stated that her home was at Indian River, but she was at present boarding with Mrs. Tully and teaching school in the district. She had been there for two and a half years. The household comprised Mrs. Tully, Miss Tully and herself. No one else stayed there, except an occasional hired man. The little girl, Evelyn Glover, was there part of the winter. She didn't remember the date she came. She knew she was there on January 24th because she stayed with Mrs. Tully while Miss Tully attended the Harry Lauder concert that night. The Tullys keep seven cows and three horses. The little girl went to school nine days during her stay in the country. She started on the first of February. She went until her feet got so sore she couldn't walk the distance. She never complained of her feet, but Mrs. Tully one day made the remark, that Evelyn had said, "Wouldn't mother laugh if she knew I had corns?"

The school was three quarters of a mile from the house. She did not know what time the little girl got up. Evelyn slept in a room over the dining room. She had seen her bring in wood. She never saw her at work in the barn, but she believed the little girl was there in the morning and in the evening.

Witness attended the child's feet early in February. One day at school Miss Carter noticed the child limped. She told her to take off her moccasin and stocking while she looked at it. Her foot was sore and raw. She put some ointment on it and tied a handkerchief around it. Her clothes always looked comfortable. She never heard the girl scream from being whipped. From what she knew of Mrs. and Miss Tully she didn't believe they would beat her. She might have said that she didn't see how a child with feet like hers could get around.

To Mr. Gordon, witness said she saw Evelyn bathe her feet one night and Mrs. Tully poulticed them. She seemed a fairly bright child, although one didn't have a good chance to judge because she suffered so with her feet. While in the house the little girl never showed any signs of fear as far as the witness could tell. The bedroom in which Evelyn slept was heated by a pipe going through it from the stove downstairs.

Mrs. Ellen Brown.

Mrs. Ellen Brown, 204 Hunter street, said that she was passing along Hunter street on the 26th of February. She saw a little girl on Hunter street by Mervin's store between ten and eleven o'clock. It was a very cold day and blowing very hard. As witness walked east on Hunter street between Bethune and Aylmer streets she saw a woman and a little girl drive down from the north. At the corner the cutter stopped. The little girl got out and the woman handed her a bundle and a basket. The child had on a long toque and mits. She had stockings on. The child stood on the cor-

ROUSING APPEAL FOR RECRUITS MADE BY CAPT. WILLIAMS

Chaplain of 109th Battalion, Lindsay, Gives Stirring Address at Open Air Meeting at Market Square---Several Recruits Responded--Gunner Blanchard in Hospital ---To-day's Orders and General Military News.

Capt. Williams, chaplain of the 109th Battalion, Lindsay, delivered a rousing recruiting address to a big crowd in an open air recruiting meeting at the market square this morning. The 93rd Battalion marched to the market shortly after 11 o'clock and the men were drawn up on the street at two sides of the square while Capt. Williams made his appeal. The band of the 93rd provided music for the occasion.

Capt. Williams, who before his entrance into the ministry served for 18 years in the British navy, and who is at present secretary of the Navy League for Canada, is a most eloquent speaker and his address, although necessarily brief, was forcible and sincere. He briefly divided the men of Canada into three classes, those who could not go to the front, those who had gone and those who should go but who up to the present time have shown no intention of doing so. Naturally his appeal was directed principally to the third class and he drove his remarks home in a most effective manner. There was nothing of an abusive nature in his speech, which was simply a statement of the justice of Britain's cause and a call to the young men of Peterborough and district to respond to the call of duty. He pleaded for men to take up arms, not only to protect the Empire, but to protect the honour of their womankind, referring in no uncertain manner to the atrocities performed by the Germans in Belgium.

At the conclusion of his address Capt. Williams made a direct appeal for recruits and while the band played patriotic airs several young men came forward. In the meantime recruiting sergeants working through the crowd, succeeded in securing several more men for the 93rd.

There were several presentations at the armouries to-day. Sergt. A. Rutter of No. 2 platoon was presented with a splendid gold-headed cane and a fountain pen, coupled with an address from the members of No. 2 platoon, while the men of No. 11 platoon, C Company, presented Sergt. Wagstaff with a very handsome gold-mounted walking stick.

Captain.
Adjutant 93rd Overseas Battalion, C.E.F.

Notice—

Checks for the Band Concert in Victoria Hall to-night will be accepted in lieu of late passes.

The following is from the Ottawa correspondent of the Toronto News:

Complaints respecting the methods employed by recruiting officers are heard here as well as in other parts of Canada. No good purpose is served by abusing others as "yellow" and calling them slackers, shirkers and cowards. Too often these epithets are applied by the man who has but recently donned the uniform. It does not occur to him that if others are slackers now, he was himself a slacker six months or a year ago.

The Race For Commissions.

It was announced a few days ago from Militia headquarters that it was futile to send in further applications for appointments to overseas regiments. Some weeks ago, it was "notified" that enough applications had been received for the post of chaplain that a reverend regiment could be organized if a few would go as privates and non-commissioned officers. Another notification should go out forthwith that sufficient commissions have already been issued to officer a million men. The training

CO-OPERATION URGED FOR HYDRO SUCCESS

Hon. J. H. Ferguson at Last Night's Meeting Spoke of What the Tren System Had Cost, and Mr. Nickle Pointed Out the Way to Assuring Its Success.

MANY TOWNS REPRESENTED

The meeting held in the Market Hall last night, to signalize the acquirement of the powers and utilities of the Seymour Power Company, was attended fairly well, an audience of between three and four hundred, including some knitting ladies having been present. Perhaps the audience would have been larger if a more suitable hall had been selected—more accessible and better lighted. The lighting certainly reflected little light of credit upon the Hydro or upon the city fathers, and perhaps justified Mr Ferguson's unprintable characterization of it. Mayor Duffus presided with dignity and effectiveness. As will be seen below he had behind him on the platform a formidable array of delegates from the surrounding districts—townships, villages, towns and cities—from as far east as Kingston. Excellent and compact speeches were made by Mr. W. F. Nickle, M.P., Hon. G. Howard Ferguson, of the Ontario government, and others. Excellent as these addresses were, there was something missing, and that something, to judge by the applause that greeted every mention of Sir Adam Beck, was Beck. A Hydro meeting without Beck is a good deal like the play of Hamlet, with Hamlet left out. The audience was sympathetic, and the speeches optimistic. The people heard all about the purchase, which seems to have been a very advantageous one, and all about what was to come from the development of the water powers of this district. Mr. Ferguson was not, it is to be hoped, mistaken, when he tentatively predicted that the population of Peterborough and the district would be doubled in ten years. It was to be noted that Mr Ferguson touched the radial railways question rather lightly, his enthusiasm perhaps being dampened by the "throw-down"—"death blow," as Adam Beck said, it received at Ottawa a few days ago.

The Seymour power purchase was shown to be a very good thing, but the reflecting part of the audience would feel like agreeing with the sprit of Capt. Cuttle's remark—"the p'int of the saying is in the application on it." If the utilization of the powers acquired is promptly brought about—a little more promptly than Peterborough's hydro situation is settled—the benefits of the purchase will justify to a large extent, the optimistic predictions of last night.

On the platform were the following gentlemen: W. F. Nickle, M.P., Kingston, Hon. G. Howard Ferguson, M.P.P.; Capt. J. H. Burnham, M.P.; J. A. Sexsmith, M.P., East Peterborough; James Thompson, M.P.P., East Peterborough; Geo. A. Gillespie, M.P.P., Sam Clark, M.P.P., Northumberland and Durham; A. APPROACHING THE MOST FATEFUL HOURS OF GIGANTIC STRUGGLE

The Turn of the Tide Has at Last Begun —The Second Piece of Good News of the Week is the Absolute Unity of Spirit of the Allies As Revealed in the Great Paris Conference

BATTLE OF VERDUN

LONDON, March 31.—This has been a week of the keenest emotions since the beginning of the war. You can breathe in the very air the universal feeling that we are approaching, rapidly, the most fateful hours of the gigantic struggle. In England the feeling is accomplished by a growing and more universal sense that the turn of the tide has at last begun.

The situation at Verdun is most responsible for this feeling for it marks the end of all chance of Germany striking the terrific blow, which alone, by anticipating, could weaken the big simultaneous advance in the spring of all the different countries that are now determined to defeat Germany.

Chance is Gone.

Though the battle is proceeding, all chance of Verdun being turned into another Sedan has gone.

The more that is heard of the story, including the long, well organised German preparations and the somewhat imperfect French organization in the first days of the great battle, the more the admiration grows for the astounding bravery of the French troops

The second piece of good news of the week is the absolute unity of spirit of the Allies, as revealed in the great Paris conference and the certain prospect of more closely coordinated military as well as political action, which must evolve from these consultations.

The outstanding fact of the conference is the closer unity and the more resolute purpose of linking up all the forces of Italy on the side of the Allies, a fact that has been rendered more striking by the desperate attempts last week of the Italian pro-Germans to disunite the Italian effort.

Submarine Campaign.

The even fierce savagery of the new submarine campaign is regarded as indicating the growing desperation of Germany, for none but a nation reduced to despair could affront the opinion of all the civilized world by such wholesale slaughter and disregard of neutral rights as well as human life.

Here there is still some political unrest, owing largely to the desire of conscriptionists to force universal conscription. This again is another indication of the growing ferocity of the British mind to go on till German militarism is crushed beyond resurrection for at least half a century. It is also a sign of the times that everybody approves, including labour leaders, of the stern action of the Government against the little gang of pro-German syndicalists who have been upsetting the munitions works in Scotland.

In Ireland the people have at last decided to put down the subsidized crazy movement to divide the country Tillamore is but one instance of the indignation of the mothers, wives and sisters of our heroic Irish soldiers over the odious attempt to undo their work for Ireland and for civilization. But for the protection of the police these pro-German elements would be driven out of every Irish town. Redmond in the meantime has given the coup de grace to the insidious attempt to create another pro-German movement by a campaign against Ireland, paying its share of the war taxes. John Dillon has added his great and popular force to the denounciation of this dishonest campaign, and it is now practically dead and buried. Finally

PERFECT LENSES.

Improvements and betterments in glasses are just as frequent as in anything else. Until a few years ago all lenses were flat, because no one had thought of a better way to make them. To-day nearly 90 per cent. are Toric lenses. Try them. See Dr. Lacey, 419 George street. dtf.

HISTORY OF HYDRO MOVEMENT

The speeches in the Market Hall, last night were another demonstration of the great and beneficial results coming from the application of the Hydro-Electric principle. We know, because we can see what the results have been. Nearly every intelligent citizen has knowledge of what has been done; but few know the history of the movement—its beginnings and the various organization steps that have been taken. In this case a brief history will be of no little interest at a time when attention is specially directed to another step in the successful development of the Hydro-Electric, which is the principle of cooperation applied. It is not a political, or at least partisan, question, and could not have been the success it has become except for the common interest, sentiment and action of influential men of both parties.

If the Hydro-Electric "movement" has "got there" one important factor in its success is that it has not to any extent been a partisan or political movement, except in the broad acceptation of the word politics While circumstances, the accident of party success, have given the Conservative party or the government supported by the Conservative party, the executive action in the promotion of its interests, the Hydro-Electric principle has had strong Liberal, as well as Conservative, support.

From time to time some of the members of the Ontario Government and some of the Conservative journals supporting the Government have charged the Liberals with apathy or hostility to Hydro-Electric. Such charges were never justified, and the records of the House show, on the contrary, that the representative and influential men of the Liberal party have been as active and as effective as their place in the Opposition would permit.

The history of the movement shows that the Hydro principle owes its origin of advocacy to members of the Liberal party. This is borne out, not by pro-Liberal assumption, but by the history of the Hydro movement compiled and published by the Hydro Electric Power Commission, of which Hon. Adam Beck was chairman. This history relates that the first concrete step was that taken by the Toronto Board of Trade, of which the late W. K. H. Massey, a Liberal, was chairman, which, on April 25th, 1900, appointed a committee to consider the question of the utilization of Niagara Falls power. The idea was discussed and approved at meetings of the representatives of several cities, the Manufacturers' Association and Boards of Trade.

On June 9th, 1903, a meeting of the manufacturers of mid-western Ontario was held at Berlin. The chief speaker was Alderman Spence of Toronto, a Liberal, who suggested the municipalities asking for a government commission, with power to arrange for transmission of electricity from Niagara to the various municipalities.

At a meeting, held at Berlin, in July, of municipal representatives, a committee of four, who happened to be Liberals, was appointed. This committee prepared a report which was presented to a meeting of about 90 municipal and manufacturing representatives, as to the possibility of delivering Niagara power at practicable rates, which urged prompt action to get Legislative power to act.

Mayor Urquhart of Toronto, who happened to be a Liberal, moved a resoultion urging the Government, which happened to be, Liberal, to take action, which it did. An Act was passed on June 20th, 1903, by the Legislature of the Province "for the construction of municipal power works and the transmission and distribution and power."

Here is where Beck begins. Under the powers conferred by the Liberal Government legislation, at a meeting of representatives of the municipalities chiefly interested, money was voted, and a commission formed of four prominent manufacturers, among which was Adam Beck of London, with expert advisers. The commission prepared an elaborate report, which was published in March, in 1906.

Meanwhile the Liberal Government went out of power, Hon. Adam Beck, a member of the first commission, took the matter up with the Conservative Government, of which he was a member, with the result that on the 5th of July, 1905, a permanent Hydro-Electric Commission was incorporated by act of the Legislature.

The foregoing facts are taken from the history published by the Hydro-Commission, and are official. From these facts it appears that the movement for Hydro-Electric power development was a movement in the intrest of the municipal and industrial interests of the Province and non-political in its origin and development, though it is a fact that the pioneers in this movement were all Liberals.

It might be noted, too, that Sir Adam Beck came into the movement, not as a politician, but as a representative of the municipalities and was appointed under the Act passed by the Liberal Government in 1903.

As pointed out by Mr. Gillespie at the meeting last night, and also by Hon. Mr. Ferguson, the success of the Hydro-Electric movement has been due to the fact that it has received the support of public men, both Liberal and Conservative, and of the leading newspapers, both Liberal and Conservative; and its future success depends upon its being kept free from politics in its management and development; and especially free from manipulation and exploitation for personal or party advantage.

Hydro radial railways are a natural result of the success of the Hydro in other fields of usefulness. And here, again, it fell to the Liberals to do the pioneer, the originating work—to act as pioneers.

In the year 1909 the Globe, generally regarded as a Liberal journal sent a commissioner to the United States to investigate the development and operation of radial railways, and his reports, which were published in the Globe, are still regarded as the most valuable source of information on the subject.

In the session of 1913 Mr. Marshall, Liberal member for Monck, on behalf of the Liberal opposition, took the first definite action taken in the Legislature to promote the Hydro Radial Railway system. He introduced a resolution calling for action in promoting radial railways Though Hon. Adam Beck was strongly in favour of the principle of the resolution, yet since it was better for the people to go without a good thing than for the Government to recognize the bad political diplomacy of the Government of admitting that any good thing could come out of Nazareth—the Opposition—the resolution was voted down. But the Opposition kept the pressure on, and before the close of the session the Government introduced, and passed a bill, which the Liberals welcomed though they pointed out that more advanced legislation was necessary.

In 1914 the indefatiguable "Grit," Mr. Marshall, introduced a resolution which eulogised Hon. Adam Beck for his deep interest in radial railways, and provided for asking the Dominion Government to grant the same subsidy to provincial radial railways that is granted steam railways, which the Government accepted with emasculating amendments.

Mr. Marshall of Monk could not be derailed from the radial track. At the present session of the Legislature, evidently foreseeing the calamity—in Sir Adam Beck's opinion "a death blow to Hydro"—that was consummated at Ottawa this week he introduced a resolution, on March 8th, to memoralize the Dominion Parliament not to "GRANT THE RENEWAL OF ANY CHARTERS WHICH WILL INTERFERE WITH THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE HYDRO-RADIAL SYSTEM IN THIS PROVINCE.

In the debate that arose on this resolution many prominent Liberal members strongly supported the spirt of the resolution, and Messrs Sam. Clark, M.P.P., Cobourg, and Hugh Munro, M.P.P., Glengarry urged particularly the crying need of Hydro development in the Eastern part of the Province. Mr. Rowell Liberal leader, strongly endorsed the Hydro movement, and made a vigorous plea for provincial rights, especially in the matter of railway charters.

It is seen, from the facts presented, that no one party in Ontario has a monopoly of interest in the promotion and support of the Hydro-Electric movement. If there is any distinctive allocation of credit, to the Liberals belong the credit of initiative, pioneering, and urging, and to the Conservatives, through the accident of the possession of power, the legislative and executive action to give thef effect. To adopt the language of Scripture—the Grits planted; the Tories watered and merit giveth the increase.

.IS IT FAIR?

Have the Aldermen considered that in their laudable aim to achieve civic retrenchment they are doing something that has a strong family resemblance to unfairness? In reducing salaries they have been able to fractionally lower the rate, so that the great body of ratepayers are individually benefitted through the reduction of the tax bills by a few cents. To do this they concentrate a heavy burden of taxation. The reduction of ten per cent. on an $800 civic salary not only brings down the income to the level of the salaries that are exempt from reduction but virtually imposes a tax of $80 on the unfortunate official. He has to lose or pay—it amounts to the same thing—a sum equal to what seven or eight hundred ratepayers will collectively gain by the saving of a few cents each on their tax bills. Apply this to all the officials who have had their salaries cut down, and we may properly call them "gentlemen in reduced circumstances." Is it fair; is it high finance or low finance?

A NEW DEPARTURE FOR THE STAID OLD LONDON TIMES

On all sides it is being recognised that the interests of British Trade call for increased vigilance, both during the war and in the changed world after it, on the part of all those who can assist to promote its efficiency.

The war has not only created new conditions but also new problems in international commerce. It has intensified the determination of the British Empire to act unitedly under the inspiration of an Imperial policy.

It has opened the eyes of the British public and British manufacturers and merchants as nothing else could have done to the methods and results of German competition and the need of revising and strengthening our own business organization in many directions.

Believing that the first step towards intelligent national effort must always be the distribution of correct information, "The Times" has decided to publish a monthly Trade Supplement containing articles from its correspondents throughout the world, on the progress of international commercial competition, and prompt news of opportunities that may arise from time to time for British commercial enterprise.

This Trade Supplement will focus the opinion of representative commercial bodies, as well as of leading experts on questions affecting business men in every branch of industrial activity.

It will seek to promote a closer sympathy between Parliament and commerce and bring about such legislative and administrative reforms as business experience suggests.

It will endeavor, by the dissemination of accurate information, to break down, as between the traders of one country and the traders of another, the barriers created by ignorance of one another's language, methods and requirements.

The statistical and commercial matter officially collected and published will be analysed and made readily accessible in the Trade Supplement.

The world's commercial Press will come under review and new commercial books will be adequately discussed.

In short, it will be the object of the Trade Supplement to present in convenient form commercial intelligence of practical value to the business men of the British Empire, and at the same time to interest buyers throughout the world in the products of British and Dominion workshops and factories.

By these means it is hoped that a more enlightened public interest in our trade relationships with the Dominions, our Allies and neutral powers will be aroused, and the way cleared for the steady development of a national trade policy and the effective organization of commercial effort, thus placing the United Kingdom and the British Empire in an unassailable economic position—London Times.

HER DREAMS CAME TRUE

Life Unbearable from Indigestion Health Restored by "Fruit-a-tives"

MELLE. C. GAUDREAU

Rochon P.Q., Jan. 14th, 1915.

"I suffered for many years with Terrible Indigestion and Constipation. I became thin and miserable. I had frequent dizzy spells and became so run down that I never thought I would get well again.

A neighbor advised me to try 'Fruit-a-tives'. I did so and to the surprise of my doctor, I began to improve and As advised me to go on with 'Fruit-a-tives'. I continued this medicine and all my Indigestion and Constipation was relieved. Magistrates Ask For Straight Salary

A deputation representing the association of Police Magistrates of Ontario, visited the Government Wednesday with a request that magistrates should be put on salaries instead of being paid by fees, as the latter plan give many a small and irregular income which was hardly worth the time and trouble of earning it. They also pointed out that the change would make for a fairer handling of cases, as the magistrate would have no pecuniary interest in disposing of a case. The request is similar to that of the motorists of the Province, who recently complained that in some localities policemen and magistrates made a paying profession of summoning and fining motorists, while real criminals were practially disregarded, owing to the fee system.

Wash Away Skin Sores

To the many sufferers of skin disease D. D. D., the liquid wash, has become a household word. They know it is reliable and they can depend on it, they do not hesitate to recommend it to their neighbors. It has proved itself a remarkable remedy for all forms of Eczema. It is a germicide that is harmless to the most delicate skin, but still it is effective and quick in action. CO-OPERATION URGED FOR HYDRO SUCCESS

P.P., Prince Edward; Jos. Saunders, Peterborough; John Edgar, Peterborough.

Mayor Duffus.

In opening the meeting, Mayor Duffus, who presided, welcomed the visiting members from the Legislature and Parliament. He expressed the general satisfaction felt upon the announcement of the purchase of the Trent Valley power resources, and stated that the people were grateful to both sides of the government for the efforts they had put forth to attain the present position. He was sure that the future held great opportunities for all the municipalities in Eastern Ontario and that cheap power would also prove a boon to the farmers in these districts.

W. F. Nickle, M.P.

Mr. W. F. Nickle, M.P., Kingston, conveyed the regrets of the Hon. J. D. Reid, M.P., Minister of Customs and Acting Minister of Railways and Canals, who was prevented by a severe cold from attending the meeting. In a precise and scholarly address, Mr. Nickle elaborated upon the benefits that may be anticipated for Eastern Ontario through the purchase of the Trent powers, and emphasized the assertion that the ultimate success of the Hydro-Eletric scheme depends upon the co-operation of all possible users of electric power in this section of the province. In brief, since the Government, as representatives of the people, had purchased this power for the people, to make the venture a success they must use as much of it as possible.

When Sir Adam Beck fought in the Provincial House for the development of the Hydro-Electric idea he established the principle that the natural resources of the country belong to the people and should be used for their benefit, not exploited for private interests. From the enunciation of this principle Mr. Nickle reviewed briefly the steps leading up to the Trent purchase. The province now owns, he said, the assets of the Electric Power Development Company which the people hold as their own.

Incidentally Mr. Nickle referred to the sources of power in Eastern Ontario. The St. Lawrence river could be harnessed at Morrisburg, but the dam required for this purpose would seriously interfere with navigation. In the Ottawa river 6,000 h.p. are available, but the cost of transmission precludes the use of this power until there is a sufficient guarantee that enough of it could be sold to assume a profit on the investment. At Shaw Falls there is additional power. This site was purchased by the holders at $14,000 or $15,000 and they now ask the province to pay one million dollars for it. The question of this plant is now before the Ontario Municipal Board.

In view of the obstacles to the use of these power sources, Mr. Nickle said that Eastern Ontario must consider how the Trent water powers can be developed? He instanced what cheap power had done for Western Ontario. Not only had a large number of manufacturers grown up, but farm life was made pleasant by the many uses to which electricity can be economically put to lessen farm labour. Mr. Nickle spoke of a particular farmer who, with a 2 h.p. motor, was able to light his house and stables, cook the meals, milk cows and even heat the water for cleaning milk can. The same can be done here. Mr. Nickle remarked, and in that event there was no reason why farm life should not be made more attractive here. And farm life must be made more attractive not only for the present farmers, but for those returned soldiers who will prefer future work out doors.

High Average Load.

Mr. Nickle then turned to the principal factor in the success of the Trent hydro-electric system. There must be a complete co-operation of power users in order to secure a high average load. To this end all the municipalities should be linked to it and all the industries in these municipalities in order that the best possible use could be made of every kilowatt of energy. Mr. Nickle referred to the recent rapid and extreme advances made in the uses of electricity in the fields of chemistry, metallurgy and allied sciences and of the necessity of the government providing for electrical experimentation that the water powers acquired may be employed to their best and fullest advantage.

Hon. J. H. Ferguson.

"Smokestacks climbing to the skies," was the prediction of Mr. G. Howard Ferguson, Minister of Forests and Mines in the Ontario House. The speaker forecast a new era of prosperity in which Peterborough would participate. Included in this prophecy was the electrification of railways and such advantages to the farmers as would ensure the latter's co-operation in what Mr. Ferguson characterised as a "national" question. "It is only a few years since electricity came into popular use in Ontario," said the speaker. "This province is devoid of coal and it is only right that the creation of no man's genius and no man's hand should be at the service of the people. A few years ago the problem of working out the hydro policy commenced at Niagara. The Government of that day was fortunate enough to enlist the services of such an able administrator as Sir Adam Beck. In 1910, electricity to the amount of seven hundred and fifty horse power was being used in Western Ontario and five years later upwards of one hundred and twenty thousand horse power was being developed under the Niagara system. The development of one hundred thousand horse power means the saving of two million tons of coal, which represents a monetary saving of between five and six million dollars. The result of the investment in Western Ontario has demonstrated that the cost of electrical energy to the consumer can be cut in half under the hydro system.

One Operator.

"Similar advantages must be provided for Eastern Ontario," said Mr. Ferguson. "When we came to look around we found in this part of Ontario the Trent water powers. It is a field, conceded by engineers and others, for one operator only. It was also found that almost all the power was in the hands of a corporation. The Government agreed to pay eight million three hundred and fifty thousand dollars to get rid of the power monopoly. The bond issue of this corporation is nine and one half million dollars at five per cent. which calls for an earning capacity of four hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars. The Government bought out the corporation for eight million three hundred and fifty thousand dollars on a basis of four per cent. bonds and at the same time secured all the physical assets of the company, such as gas plants, street railway, etc. This means that only three hundred thousand dollars is required to be earned in order to carry the project. If the Electric Power Company earned sufficient interest to carry a bond issue of nine and one half million dollars at five per cent., then the Government was fortunate in getting a going concern at eight million three hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Forty Years' Credit.

Referring to the amount of horse power available, the speaker said that the present development amounts to twenty-five thousand horse power. The ultimate development is estimated at seventy-five thousand horse power, while the possible peak development is placed at one hundred thousand horse power. The expenditure of two and one half million dollars will provide for an ultimate development of seventy-five thousand horse power. Ten million dollars have been expended in Western Ontario for hydro power development and all they own is a transmission line, whereas in Eastern Ontario, the people will not only own the transmission lines, but the power plants lock, stock and barrel. "You will have forty years to pay for it," said Mr. Ferguson. "We will see a new area of prosperity in Peterborough and other towns and municipalities. Smoke stacks will be climbing to the skies. Farmers among others will share in the benefits. Mr. Ferguson claimed to be a farmer himself and a customer of a private company generating electrical energy in a district not penetrated by the hydro-electric system. Some day, continued the speaker, we will witness the electrification of the steam railways. The larger the system grows the cheaper will be the cost of the power to the people. Canada's undeveloped resources offers unusual advantages. Canada must be prepared to cope with the influx that will follow the conclusion of this awful carnage. The Government had this in view when dealing with the Trent power scheme. The Province of Ontario manufactures forty-six per cent. of everything manufactured in the Dominion. Why not maintain and increase our industrial position," said the speaker, in conclusion.

Geo. A. Gillespie.

Mr. Gillespie said he was in full sympathy with the plans and work of the Hydro-Electric Commission which had developed from an idea in the mind of some man to the gigantic undertaking it has reached today. Chief credit, he believed, must be given to the Hon. Adam Beck. Both parties have supported the scheme. It is non-political and its success depended upon its very non-political character. The cost of the project mattered but little so long as it reduced the cost of electricity and paid its way.

Mayor Duncan, Cobourg.

Mayor Duncan of Cobourg, remarked that citizens have been inclined to expect too great things immediately upon the government's purchase of the Electric Power Company's assets. He strongly counselled against such expectations. Some believed their light bills should be reduced at once about 100 per cent. On the other hand it was the duty of the Commission to make as great a success as possible of the scheme they have put under way in Eastern Ontario.

The "Wild" People.

Ex-Mayor Buller gave a stirring account of the initial efforts of the local authorities to introduce hydro-electric into this portion of the Province. "People in the country," he said, "were wild to have radial railways. We have two great propositions before us, one is the war and the other is hydro radials.

A Voice From Kingston.

Mayor Richardson of Kingston said that many platitudes had been expressed at the meeting. The water powers of this country were God given and man taken. We have lost the powers and now have to buy them back again. Mayor Richardson told of the efforts that had been put forth by Kingston to obtain an adequate supply of power at a reasonable price. He was glad to know that the representatives of the Government were seized with a desire to provide the people with an ample supply of power. "Kingston has long suffered in this respect and for some years has existed on the promises made by Sir Adam Beck and his colleagues," said the Chief Magistrate of the Limestone City.

J. A. Sexsmith.

Mr. J. A. Sexsmith, M.P., said he was in entire accord with the Hydro projet and expressed his satisfaction that the Trent power had been acquired for the people. He believed it would be but a short time until every city, town and village, and the farmers, too, in this district, would have cheap power at their doors and would moreover make every use of it.

Capt. Burnham, M.P.

Capt. Burnham declared that this was not his time of speaking. He had done his part in arranging for the meeting, which was the first of a series throughout Eastern Ontario, having as their object a full explanation of what the Hydro-Electric meant in advantage to the people and their municipalities. He said he wished to thank Mayor Duffus for the material assistance the latter had given, and he was glad the people of Peterborough had, by their presence, shown their appreciation of the opportunities placed before them.

FIRST WEEK OF THE CAMPAIGN

Meetings Conducted by Evangelist Sharpe Are Well Attended

The first week of the evangelistic campaign being conducted by Evangelist Sharpe in the Tabernacle has been most enjoyable as well as profitable, as those who have had the privilege of attending the services will no doubt readily acknowledge.

The big ex-bartender evangelist has been at his best. He has appealed to his hearers in terms that were devoid of doubt as to meaning. His delivery has been forceful and demonstrative and calculated to stir the hearts of the luke-warm Christians as well as the unsaved. A strong feature of the meetings has been the soul stirring singing led by a large chorus and in which the entire congregation has participated. The songs used are those of the famous "Billy" Sunday campaigns.

A Glorious Thing.

Here are a few sayings of Evangelist Sharpe, which have characterized his addresses during the week.

"It is a glorious thing to be a Christian, because the moment you are "born again" you become a child of God."

"It is a great thing to be a child of some great person of this world, but how much greater to become a child of God."

"I'd rather be a child of God than an angel." There is not an angel in Heaven I'd trade places with, for the angels are only created beings and do not know what it means to be redeemed."

"In Jesus Christ I'm more powerful than the devil, and the devil can't touch me unless God permits it."

"When we are born into God's family God's nature comes into us."

"While the judgment will be awful for the sinner it will be glorious for the believer."

"The sweetest thing about heaven that I know is the fact that Jesus will be there."

"Don't blame God if He isn't your Father. You're to blame."

"When God commands the sun to shine it shines, when God tells the stars to shine they shine, and when He commands the moon it gives light. Man only disobeys God."

"There are rewards in heaven and the man who works for God will be rewarded. If we are faithful we will wear a crown, but I not only want a crown but I want stars in it."

"Why any man will choose the devil as his father, the spirit of the devil as the tenant of his life and hell as his home, I can't understand."

"My brother if you are ever lost it will be because you have chosen hell instead of heaven."

Mr. Sharpe will speak to-morrow at 11 a.m. and 7 p.m. All are invited to hear him.

The services will continue throughout the week.

—The GREATEST Values ever produced in Canada

These new SERIES 17 Studebaker cars are without any exceptions, the GREATEST automobile values that have ever been produced in Canada. Made in Canada in the GREAT Studebaker plants at Walkerville, they represent the enormous resources and unequalled manufacturing facilities of one of the world's largest makers of motor cars. And dollar for dollar of the prices, they give more real, actual, tangible value than any other models on the Canadian market.

The 40-horse power, 7-passenger FOUR at $1225 absolutely dominates the 4-cylinder market in power, size and quality. And the 50-horse power, 7-passenger SIX at $1450 offers value that cannot be equaled in any other 6in within hundreds of dollars of its price.

We urge you to see these wonderful new SERIES 17 Studebakers before deciding on any car.

News of The Princess Pats

Many of the Men Are Now Being Given Commissions.

An officer of the Princess Patricias, now in a London hospital, gave to a representative of the Canadian Gazette a brief outline of the regiment's recent history. "After the second battle of Ypres," he said, "there were only four officers left and about 140 men. The regiment afterwards went to Armentieres, where it received reinforcements. Later it went to Houplines, and then to Frise, where it held the line from which the French have lately been obliged to retire. Then for a time the Patricias acted as an instruction battalion to the 3rd Army, which is composed of Kitchener's men. We had courses of machine-gun practice, bombing, etc. For a time we were made corps troops, and then in December we were made part of the 3rd Canadian Division.

"Since then we have been doing our share of the ordinary routine of life at the front. The hard part of life in the Princess Patricias comes in when the men begin to get commissions. Of course, from their point of view this is all right, and they make good officers, but looked at from the officers' point of view, it is heart-breaking to train men only to lose them when they have become efficient.

MEAT CAUSE OF KIDNEY TROUBLE

Take Salts to Flush Kidneys if Back Hurts or Bladder Bothers

If you must have your meat every day, eat it, but flush your kidneys with salts occasionally, says a noted authority who tells us that meat forms uric acid which almost paralyzes the kidneys in their efforts to expel it from the blood. They become sluggish and weaken, then you suffer with a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headaches, dizziness, your stomach sours, or is bad you have rheumatic twinges. or is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine gets cloudy, full of sediment, the channels often get sore and irritated, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night.

To neutralize these irritating acids, to cleanse the kidneys and flush off the body's urinous waste get four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy here; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days, and your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize the acids in the urine, so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

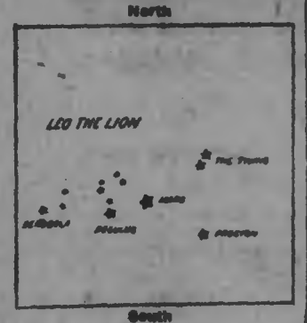
RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

THE KINGDOM OF THE SKY

(Continues from Tuesday's issue).



On earth we consider it as a mark of dawning civilization when a race begins to cook its food.

Can a race develop on raw food?

Sometimes we like to get around troublesome questions by saying: "These things may be entirely different on other spheres." But when we pause and consider the laws of nature, we find the same laws active everywhere.

Gravitation exerts its sway with equal and undiminished power exactly in the same way; from the centre to the circumference of the universe.

The materials forming the many stars in space differ only in development.

When astronomers discover a new element with the spectroscope in the sun or in some star, a closer investigation speedily discovers traces of the same element in our own earth. Because of the universality of physical laws, you can speak with more certainty of certain phases on Mars, than you can of almost contemporary history.

Mars is the smaller. It has cooled and hardened sooner than has the earth.

Mars has now arrived at the stage where its water has either gone or almost gone. Its atmosphere is very rare, so rare, that when the sun is not shining, its temperature must almost sink to the absolute zero of space.

When you take into consideration that the year of Mars is almost twice as long as ours, 686.95 days, the winter temperatures have full time to develop.

When the sun is shining the heat must be intense.

Our great envelope of air acts as a modifier of both heat and cold.

Mars is a vase desert of Sahara. Its barren sand wastes shine red beneath the rays of the sun.

However let us not be too dogmatic about the existence or non-existence of life on Mars. We know that life exists here under many adverse conditions. It is found in the deepest oceans beneath many atmospheric pressures. You will find it in the Arctic regions. Everywhere on earth you will find life.

Relying on the generality of this law, we may conclude that life is almost universal wherever conditions are at all possible.

However that may be, in the course of time, our earth, which is following steadily the same stages of development in which Mars has preceded us, will in some millions of years, arrive at the same goal.

If you look for them you will find even now a few gray hairs on the brow of old mother earth.

At one time, the desert of Sahara was as fertile as any garden, and the petrified forests found in the great desert in the United States amply prove their one time fertility.

Not only the earth but also the sun will burn out and become cold and dark, and then — not the end, but ever recurring evolution and revolution. Some astronomers maintain that the decaying spheres contain within themselves the power of starting a new existence, while others depend wholly upon gravitation being upset by the near approach of other large bodies.

The Weather In March

During the Month the Temperature Was Down to Zero on Eleven Days

Although March is usually considered a spring month, the weather during the first three weeks, at least, was of a more wintry character than any that preceded it. During the month the thermometer went down to zero or below on 11 days, as compared with 10 in February, and 5 days in January. The coldest day was the 18th, with 18 degrees below zero. Other cold days were the 1st, 15 below; 6th, 10 below, and the 11th, 7 below.

The warmest day was the 30th, 60 degrees.

The greatest variation of temperature in one day was on the 3rd, with 36 degrees. The least was on the 27th, with 2 degrees.

Snow fell on 10 days. The total amount was 27 inches. Rain on 1 day, .64 of an inch. Total 2.76 inches. The snowfall in March was greater than January and February combined.

Sleighing began on Dec. 8th and continued good until Jan. 21st. From that date to Feb. 25th it was either poor or non-existent. From Feb. 25th to March 25th it was good, when spring conditions prevailed. Robins first made their appearance (in numbers) on March 29.—W.P.

APPROACHING THE MOST FATEFUL HOURS ETC.

Ireland rejoices at the tribute paid to the bravery of the Irish troops at Gallipoli, which was delayed in the confusion that followed the disaster there.

The remarkable and abrupt incursion of Winston Churchill into the House of Commons' life will supply, not merely the chroniclers of to-day, but many years, if not many generations, to come, with one of the most extraordinary episodes of the war.

Winston Churchill.

Winston Churchill always reminds me of what the great French writer, de Tocqueville, said of France. "France," said the Frenchman, "may sometimes charm you, sometimes repel you, but she still always interests you." Winston Churchill sometimes attracts, sometimes repels, but always interests his countrymen. He is the man of men who has the art of unexpectedness. You never know quite where you will find him next. Beginning life as an ardent, and almost ferocious, Tory, he became in a few years an equally ardent and equally ferocious Liberal. He has managed to pack into his life as many varieties of experience as would fill the lives of three or even a dozen ordinary men. He has been a war correspondent, man of letters, politician, and as a soldier he has been in places as tight as the defence of an armoured train in South Africa and the Lancers' charge at Omdurman, and by some strange charm he has come out of all these things scathless. He is in many respects one of the most extraordinary combinations of apparently opposite qualities of any man who ever lived. I do not think his brilliancy as a writer has ever been appreciated at its proper value. He is a great lover of literature, like his father, is an omnivorous reader, like his father again has an extraordinarily retentive memory. It is also a curious instance that the favourite author of both father and son is Gibbon. I made an allusion the other night when dining with him to something from Gibbon. He looked at me with a smile and said, "I remember that passage very well."

Man of Letters.

The man of letters is usually the very entithesis of the man of action, but this extraordinary young man who has so brilliant a pen, is above all things a man of action. He has the power like all striking personalities, of inspiring equally violent affections and equally violent dislikes; and both feelings are inspired, a little by some misapprehension as to the real man who stands behind the public reputation. Like so many famous men he has great moments of self doubt and shyness.

Once I found him in Mr. Redmond's room in the days of the agonizing struggle over Ulster. He sat alone in the small apartment with Mr. Redmond, Mr. Devlin and myself. Of course it was three to one, and that was a disadvantage; but such was my opinion of the abounding self-confidence of the young man that I had expected that he would have tried to argue and even to talk us all down. On the contrary I found him rather abashed, and he turned to me, and with his characteristic candor, said, that it was only when in a small committee of men that he felt the least shyness, and that he felt shyness at that moment.

Dynamic Energy.

He is a creature of moods and nerves, very often overcast with hours of melancholy and of alarm about his health, for the lithe, slight frame which seems to be consumed with dynamic energy is not very strong; and I have heard it said of him, as I have of Mr. Lloyd George, whose family history for health is not very good, that a good deal of the feverishness of his temper and existence is explained by the haunting idea that his life will not be prolonged. I think that the apprehension in the case of Winston Churchill is exaggerated, and in the case of Mr. Lloyd George does not any longer exist, now that he is safely past his fiftieth year. But still that background of a human being's life must always be taken into account when judging characters and career; and it is my experience of men, that those who have such a background are always tempted to try to squeeze every bit of energy into every hour of their existence.

An Abnormal Life.

Since he went into the trenches Winston Churchill has been leading an abnormal life. He has to accompany his men to the trench across open ground, and every time he does this of course the stray bullet may catch him. The house in which he is billeted is, I am sure, quite familiar to the Germans, and nothing would please them—who regard him as one of their deadliest enemies — more than to finish his career. His quarters are therefore subjected, as every other building on the line of front, to shell fire by day and sometimes by night. He has seen men shattered to pieces by his side early in the morning as he was lighting his cigar. One of his attractive qualities is this perfect fearlessness; but such a life must be trying on the nerves, and when he returned to London, though there was not the smallest trace of personal apprehension or personal care, there was in his face a little of the tense look that comes to every man, however brave, when he is thus face to face with the prospect of death.

His own theory of life always has been that whether in Westminster or on the battlefield a man should always live for the hour quite reckless of what the next hour will bring; and when he went to the front he was not only conscious of this hourly peril, but also quite ready to meet it. At the same time he would be more than human if he did not feel that personality so powerful as his should not go out in humiliation and defeat. For of course he is still under the black cloud of the failure of Gallipoli, the initiative of which has been, by one circumstance and another, transferred entirely to his shoulders; and I rather think that he would be glad if a turn in political affairs might bring him back to the arena, where he certainly is much more useful than in standing up against the stray bullet and the shell.

Faith in Lord Fisher.

His intervention in debate was one part of a big campaign that has been going on underground in London for some weeks. There are many persons who still have immense faith in Lord Fisher, and who regret his departure from the Admiralty. Here again you come into one of those atmospheres of strong personal feeling which direct counsel in times like these. There is both in the Navy and in society a violently pro-Fisher and a violently anti-Fisher party, and while one section believes that Lord Fisher is the one man to give to naval construction the necessary impetus, there is another section that thinks the supercession of the existing Board of the Admiralty would create an immense amount of discontent in the Navy itself. I am unable to pronounce an opinion upon these conflicting ideas, for, as the world now knows, the people who know least of what is going on behind the scenes are the members of Parliament. But Winston Churchill, by adopting the side of Lord Fisher, lent an immense impetus to the campaign in Lord Fisher's favour. Mr. Balfour was able, by his brilliant dialectical qualities, to crush Mr. Churchill for the moment, and there was nothing left for him but to go back to the trenches. However, the end is not yet, and we may see some strange developments before the whole story is told.

Why Do Women Worry?

A Sign of Failing Health

Worry is a disease—and it's more—it produces other diseases, because it breaks down the nerves and saps the vitality of the body.

What a pity women don't realize that if they were well—if the blood was nutritious — if the nerves were strong—if all the organs were active—then the little things that irritate and prey on the mind wouldn't receive a moment's thought.

The woman who worries has a poor appetite—she sleeps poorly. If it only lasted for a day or two it might be of small consequence—but she grows limp, miserable, unhappy—worse day by day.

She needs Ferrozone which cures worry by curing the conditions that render worry possible. For nervous, weak women, no tonic is so good; thousands it has cured just like Mrs. M. F. Etherington, of Troy, who writes: "I am quit willing to give a public testimonial for Ferrozone, believing it to be a tonic of superior excellence and one that will rapidly build up strength and supply new energy to anyone not feeling well. Last spring I was in a very poor condition of health. I was nervous, felt tired, and completely worn out. No doubt it's quite a common complaint with ladies of my age, but I placed great reliance in Ferrozone, and took it for several weeks. It made me quite strong, and in fact I have been in better health ever since. I can heartily recommend Ferrozone."

This is why it gives color, clearness to the skin, buoyancy to the step, brightness to the eyes—because with good digestion and activity of the body in all its parts there's health. Price 50c per box at all dealers.

Keirstead of Toronto as preacher at the morning service, and Mr. Joseph Wearing, M.A., in the evening.

ARRANGE FORTY-SEVEN IN MEDICAL FRAUDS

PARIS, April 1.—Forty-seven persons, accused of issuing or receiving fraudulent medical certificates for exemption from military service or transfers from active to auxiliary branches of the army, were placed on trial before a court-martial to-day. The principals are alleged to be Dr. Lombard, formerly a Municipal Councilman of Ivy, a village near Paris, who was arrested several weeks ago; Dr. Labore, an assistant army surgeon, and Ilti Garfunkel. Various minor staff employees also are on trial.

BANISH BILE!

A bilious condition of the system is the result of inaction of the liver, often causing severe headache through the eyes and temples, culminating sometimes in nausea and vomiting, which is frequently followed by a bilious diarrhoea.

Abbey's Effervescent Salt, when taken as directed, stimulates the peptic glands of the stomach and increases the contraction of its muscles from above downward. This action is communicated to the intestines and increases the flow of the intestinal juice, thus stimulating the ducts of the liver to pour out the bile, when it can be carried downward by the laxative action of the Salt, instead of remaining to clog up the liver and flow back into the stomach.

Thus, if a person who is subject to Biliousness and Bilious Headache will use Abbey's Effervescent Salt, the natural action of the Stomach, liver and intestines will be kept up and no bile can accumulate in the system.

CRUSHING THE CO-OPERATION OF THE ALLIES

Arm-chair Critics Are Quick to Criticize the Many Moves or Lack of Moves by One or Another of the Allies

BATTLING FOR LIFE

There has been much and varied criticism of many moves, or lack of moves, by one or another of the Allies at what seemed, to the arm-chair critics, opportune times.

The ablest military critics in the world find tremendous and perplexing problems continually arising in this war, the like of which the world has never known. If we bear in mind the one cardinal point of unity among the Allies and co-operation among them, all striving for the single definite purpose—complete and lasting defeat of the Central Powers—a great many moves otherwise hard to understand become more clear. It can hardly be questioned that the military chiefs of each ally country are thoroughly informed of the intended moves of the others in practically every eventuality, each co-operating fully with the others. Thus, in those terrible first months of the war, with the German hordes rushing through Belgium and France to the very gates of Paris, and barely checked at an awful sacrific on their road to Calais, who compelled them to lessen their efforts? The Russian steam roller, all too poorly munitioned and equipped came rolling down from the north and Germany must turn in that direction. For months the genius of the Grand Duke saved the Russian army in that famous retreat. At the critical stage of that retreat the Allies on the west front drove through the German lines and compelled her to slacken her pursuit of the Russian army.

A Serious Menace.

Again, as the Turks in the Caucasus and Mesopotamia became menacing, the Grand Duke went to that theatre, broke down the Turkish aggression and is rapidly becoming a serious menace to European Turkey and the Central Powers, from that direction.

Germany in her desperation, has been battling for her life at Verdun. Russia has seized this opportunity to force matters in the region leading southeast from Riga and is rapidly forcing Von Hindenburg's army to fall back. This prevents the sending of any reinforcements to Verdun.

And so it goes, as the German attacks on one ally become serious, another ally forces the fight in another quarter.

Gradually, by this process, the Central Powers will be beaten to their knees and mighty glad to have peace on the Allies' own terms.

CHIEF IS DISMISSED.

BLENHEIM, Ont., March 31 — Chief of Police Rufus Earl was dismissed to-day and Solomon Fagan appointed in his stead.

The change follows the verdict of a Coroner's jury which found that Earl was not on duty, as he should have been, during last Sunday morning's disastrous fire at the Halfway Garage, when Lorne A. Wedge, a prominent young business man, sleeping in an apartment above, lost his life.

Butter and Eggs Closed Higher Than Opening Price

This morning's market closed considerably stronger than its opening, especially in butter and eggs, both of which were in good demand. Probably the roads were largely responsible for scarcely an average attendance. Farmers state that in some places the snow is still quite deep, although in the main they had no serious difficulty in reaching the city. But, whatever the cause, eggs opened around 21 and 23 cents, and sold at 25 cents at the close, with no offerings for the late-coming purchasers. It was the same with butter, which sold freely at 33 cents until the farmers realized that the supply was decidedly short. Towards the close the price went up to 36 cents, and was quite strong at that figure. Potatoes were plentiful at $2.00 a bag. In fact there was more than a sufficiency of this commodity. Pork at 16 and 17 cents was not as plentiful due to the approaching fine weather.

Increase for 1916—$421,305.09.

It will be noted that the month just closed continued the increase by the substantial margin of $17,844.76.

"Y" BOYS' ANNUAL BANQUET LAST NIGHT AN ENJOYABLE AFFAIR

Over 250 Boys Sat Down to Supper Provided by the Ladies' Auxiliary —Splendid Address by Capt. Lamb of 201st Battalion.

THE TOAST LIST

A sumptuous supper, plenty of song, jollity and speeches of a mature to interest boys, were the chief features of the annual boys' banquet at the Y.M.C.A. last evening. About two hundred and fifty boys sat down to the appetizing array of tasty viands, provided by the Ladies' Auxiliary of the Association. The tables were set in the gymnasium, and were attractively arranged. Too much praise cannot be given the ladies for the capable way in which the wants of the Assembly were supplied. To say that their efforts were deeply appreciated by the boys is putting it mildly, as was evidenced by the hearty way in which the toast to "the ladies" was honoured by them, following its proposal in a neat speech by Harold Copp.

Seated at the head of the table were Mr. P. M. McCarroll, chairman; Capt. J. W. Lamb of the 201st Battalion, Toronto, the speaker of the evening; Lieut. P. G. Might of the 93rd Battalion, Rev. R. G. Peever, Rev. Robt. Pogue, Mr. Meserve "Y" Secretary, the members of the Boys' department, who are in khaki Messrs. Jas., Connal and C. E. Bisson.

The Toast List.

After partaking of the many good things, Mr Arthur Lewis took his place at the piano, and the boys joined lustily in the singing of patriotic and popular songs.

Mr. P. M. McCarroll, who acted as toast master, then rose and asked the gathering to honour the toast to the King, which was done by the hearty singing of the National Anthem.

The toast to the Young Men's Christian Association was ably proposed by Reg. Brown, who, in a clear and lucid manner, paid glowing tribute to the attractions this institution possessed for the youth of any community.

Mr. Hugh Austin responded to the toast and in his remarks outlined the good work being accomplished by the National Y.M.C.A., especially in the present crisis.

The toast to the "ladies" was next honoured most heartily, leaving no leaving no chance for doubt in the minds of the fair sex as to the sincerity of their thanks. The toast was proposed by Harold Copp.

At this stage several announcements of interest to the boys were made by the Boys' Secretary, Mr. G. L. Galley, chief among which was the annual church parade of the "Y" boys to St. Paul's Church on Sunday evening next.

The Paths to Greatness.

Capt. Lamb of the 201st Battalion and formerly of the staff of Harbord Collegiate Institute, Toronto, delivered an address to the boys of timely interest, and full of sane advice to the growthing youth.

Capt. Lamb began by complimenting Mr. Galley on the splendid work he was doing among the boys. At no time was he happier than when among a bunch of boys. He referred to the crisis through which the country was now passing, when the young manhood of the country was called upon to fight for liberty and right. The boys of to-day, in the time to come, would have to take the places of many of these fine fellows who would fall in the service of their King. "You boys will have to fit yourselves," he said, "for the places that will have to be filled. If we are going to keep our ideals high we will have to cultivate our lives to overcome feelings of spite and hatred which we probably now feel towards our enemies. It will be necessary to be big men, to meet the problems that will have to be faced."

There were two paths of greatness to which the speaker drew the attention of the boys. The first was that of service. The greatest curse to-day was that of selfishness. He urged them to overcome this by helping the other fellow, setting forth such great examples of unselfishness as was shown by Lord Roberts, Mr. Gladstone and Sir James Whitney.

The other path was the way of Christ, the greatest example of service. Service alone will not make a man big, but the fellow who has Christ in his life will be able to accomplish great things. "Let Him be the ruling influence," he said, "and your lives will be full of true service."

At the conclusion a flashlight was taken of the gathering.

Famine Threatens The Fatherland Says Chronicle

LONDON, April 1.—The Chronicle has the following from Copenhagen.

It appears that the Germans are at last facing the facts of a threatening famine. New examples are daily told by travellers, especially by women Up to the close of February it seems that a greater part of the populathe rations had long been greatly di the rations had long ben greatly diminished, but in March a great change came, and a catastrophe is apprehended. A man who has lived in Berlin several years and just now is visiting Copenhagen, tells us that the situation throughout the country for the last three or four weeks must be considered very grave. It is impossible for poor persons to get adequate food, as a healthy diet would cost 10 or 12 marks daily. There is meat enough, but as it is roasted in sugar and water it does not strength en the constitution.

Have to Walk Slowly.

In a Danish journal, Gads Danske Magasen, March number, Doctor Edward Lehman, lately returned from Berlin, says everybody stays at home. It saves money and it saves strength. It is curious to see how slowly they move their feet. At first I thought it was depression, but I soon learned to walk slowly myself on account of the small rations of bread, and especially of butter. I had just finished a book where I had learned it is by the help of hydrates and carbonates that we are able to read; now I have learned they are also necessary for walking.

Meat Cards Next.

Berlin, March 31.—Within a few days meat cards will be added to the bread cards and butter cards, meaning that the consumption of meat throughout the Empire will be regulated from a central meat distribution office. This new office is supposed to know exactly how much there is in all Germany, and the portion to which every individual each day is entitled.

PRESENTATION TO MR. J. W. GARDINER

Well Known Resident of Cavan Township Removes to Millbrook

CAVAN, April 1.—Last evening, in the Methodist Church, a presentation of a gold watch was made to Mr. J. W. Gardiner, on the eve of his departure for Millbrook. For a number of years past Mr. Gardiner has been an active member of the choir, and has served on the official board. His removal from Cavan will be a distinct loss to the church. The presentation was made by a member of the Board, accompanied by addresses which were made by members of the choir and others. Genuine regret was expressed at Mr. Gardiner's removal from the activities of Cavan Methodist Church, which he has so long served. Rev. Mr. Butler, Pastor of the Church, was present.

A YEAR INDOORS.

"For thirteen months I was so bad with chronic indigestion that I could not go out of doors. Nerves were unstrung, the heart bad, and smothering feelings came on till I thought that I would choke. Doctors' treatment failed me so I began the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, which I thank for my present good health. I am now doing my housework and have a family of ten."

Throw Away Your Eye-Glasses!

A Free Prescription

You Can Have Filled and Use at Home.

Do you wear glasses? Are you a victim of eye-strain or other eye-weaknesses? If so, you will be glad to know that there is real hope for you. Many whose eyes were failing, say they have had their eyes restored through the principle of this wonderful free prescription. One man says, after trying it: "I was almost blind; could not see to read at all. Now I can read everything without any glasses and my eyes do not water any more. At night they would pain dreadfully; now they feel fine all the time. It was like a miracle to me." A lady who used it says: "The atmosphere seemed hazy with or without glasses, but after using this prescription for fifteen days everything seems clear. I can even read fine print without glasses." It is believed that thousands who wear glasses can now discard them in a reasonable time and multitudes more will be able to strengthen their eyes so as to be spared the trouble and expense of ever getting glasses. Eye troubles of many descriptions may be wonderfully benefited by following the simple rules. Here is the prescription: Go to any active drug store and get a bottle of Bon-Opto tablets. Drop one Bon-Opto tablet in ¼ glass of water and allow to dissolve. With this liquid bathe the eyes two to four times daily. You should notice your eyes clear up perceptibly right from the start and inflammation will quickly disappear. If your eyes are bothering you, even a little, take steps to save them now before it is too late. Many apparently blind might have been saved if they had cared for their eyes in time. The Valmas Drug Co., of Toronto, will fill the above prescription by mail, if your druggist cannot.

Optometrist Otto Feuchter, to whom the above article was submitted, says: "Bon-Opto is a very remarkable remedy. Its constituents are of the highest purity and strength. I can highly recommend it to any reader of this paper who wishes to preserve, restore or improve their eyesight and by so doing I can be relieved from any further duty in the matter. I have no hesitation in saying that it is almost every time."

The Warner Drug Co. fills many Bon-Opto prescriptions and will gladly fill yours.

Prisoner in Latest Confession Says He Gave Man $9,000 to Swear Falsely

USED ARSENIC

Waite Trying to Establish the Fact That He Is Victim of Dual Personality.

NEW YORK, April 1.—Detectives from the District Attorney's office went to Orient Point, L.I., in search of Eugene O. Kane, an embalmer, who, for the time being is the most important witness in the Peck murder case. Dr. Arthur Warren Waite, in the latest chapter of his serial confession, told the District Attorney that he had given Kane $9,000 to swear, if necessary, that he had used arsenic in embalming the body of John E. Peck for burial.

The use of arsenic in embalming fluid is against the law in New York State, and Kane several days ago was quoted as saying that no arsenic was used in embalming Mr. Peck's body. From this feature of Waite's revelations the authorities have concluded that at one time he was preparing for a plea of not guilty in the event of his arrest for the murder. The rest of the young dentist's confession, however, has convinced the District Attorney that he is getting ready to defend himself on a plea of insanity.

Part of New Confession.

Dr. Waite, in the course of conversations with representatives of the District Attorney's office, said that he had administered several varieties of disease germs to both Mr. Peck and Mrs. Peck. When the germs showed no results, Waite said, he followed ther in both cases with doses of poisonous drugs. In committing these acts, Waite declared that he was under the evil influence of a force which he personified as "the man from Egypt." Dr. Waite rambled on about the way in which the evil genius had compelled him to put the dipease germs in food served to Mr. and Mrs. Peck, and when these failed to take effect, to accomplish the death of Mr. Peck by putting arsenic in his soup, in tea, and in eggnog.

Medical experts have informed the District Attorney that there is nothing surprising about Waite's failure to obtain results from feeding deadly germs to Mr. and Mrs. Peck. It often happens, they say, that persons have such a strong natural immunity against disease that the bacilli attack them in vain. In any event, it is said the effect of germs administered in this way would be slow.

SKIN TORTURE WAS INDESCRIBABLE

Healed by Cuticura Trial Free

"I suffered from a bad form of eczema all over my face and neck. My face was completely covered with red patches which festered making my face sore, besides being so disfiguring. I could not sleep for the itching and it caused me to scratch. The torture was indescribable. "A friend advised me to try Cuticura Soap and Ointment. Now I am entirely healed." Major Walton At Temple To-morrow

Major Walton arrived on the 3.45 train from Montreal to hold a very special series of meetings.

This week-end is what is noted in the Dominion of Canada as Candidates' Week-End, and a very special effort will be made to secure candidates for officership in the Salvation Army.

The public services to-morrow will be of special interest at the Temple, as well as in the afternoon at Brally's School-House and at Byersville at night.

There will also be a rehearsal of the Boy Scouts and Girl Guards on Monday evening, presided over by Major Walton.

Brothers End Lives At the Same Time

CHICAGO, April 1. — Edward P. Cummings, Superintendent of Schools of Lansing, Mich., shot himself to death yesterday in the Stratford Hotel. At practically the same time, Dr. Herbert Cummings, his brother, swallowed poison in Grand Haven, Mich.

Nothing has been found to indicate a suicide compact. Dr. Cummings was not killed by the poison, but is very ill.

E. P. Cummings, who until last November was President of the State Teachers' Association of Michigan, feared he was losing his mind, according to his physician and close friends in Lansing.

schools are crammed with captains and lieutenants, who will be added to the large army of officers, who will never see service unless they consent to go in the ranks. Be it understood that few of the officers now in training will ever see France. The colonels and majors may get there if they go as captains and lieutenants, but not one subaltern in fifty will ever reach France in that capacity. These young men are courting disappointment who think otherwise and who are pulling wires with members of Parliament. Privates and non-commissioners, who have been in the trenches, have a prior claim and a better chance. It is all right to take an officer's qualifying course here, but it should not be allowed unless the candidate is to go over in the ranks. Vacancies will come fast enough then and the certificate will come in handy. A statement to the above effect from the Militia Department would save thousands of young men considerable disappointment, scores of M.P.'s considerable trouble, and the Department itself a lot of vexation.

As a family affair the 93rd Battalion in the opinion of The Examiner, holds the record. In the local detachment alone there are over thirty pairs of brothers, while there are twelve cases of father and son both serving in the battalion. The record is held by the Taylor family, of Chemong, with four brothers in line. There are three Windover brothers from Hall's Bridge, while there are two Peterborough trios, the three Russells and the three Tobins, all three of the latter in the Machine Gun Section. Pte. Sergeant J. Abraham has two sons, Sergt. Ernest and Bugler Reg. Abraham in the 93rd, while Bandsman W. Dyer also has two sons with him in the band. While two sons of Pte. Ecobichon are in the Signallers of the battalion. Armourer Sergt. Geo. Grange, Provost Sergt. J. Watson, Corp. J. Lemay, of the Military Police, Pte. Willshaw, Pte H. Chard, Pte. Jenks, Pte. Moore, Pt. J. Bradley and Pte. Cridland, each has a son in the battalion. The Examiner would like to hear from other battalions if they think they can approach that record.

The Lindsay Warder says: An edict has gone forth from the Militia Department to the effect that all battalions in the Dominion which are at present over-officered, must reduce the officers' list to the proper strength. That is, that officers lately taken on, will be reduced to the ranks as privates.

This order hits the 109th Battalion along with many others, as Lt.-Col. Fee was very successful in gathering together a splendid lot of officers. Some 12 or 15 will be reduced, and it is stated that already several have thrown off the officers' uniform of short overcoat, leather putties and stripes, and donned the private's dress.

The Belleville Intelligencer says: The total strength of the 155th Battalion (Belleville) is now 1,000. Of these 736 are born Canadians, 192 Englishmen, 25 Scotchmen, 14 Irishmen, 20 Americans, and 13 of different nationalities.

The Kingston Whig says: No one knows yet what distribution of the battalions will be made for the camp. The decision has not been made ready for publication. There are, however, numerous guesses being made which give what should be the reasonable plan. There are now the following battalions in the division: 77th at Ottawa, 80th at Belleville, 93rd at Peterborough, 109th at Lindsay, 130th at Perth, 136th at Port Hope, 139th at Cobourg, 146th at Kingston, 154th at Alexandria, 155th at Brockville, 156th at Picton, 207th and 224th at Ottawa.

Ottawa will likely have one of the battalions for Rockcliffe camp; the 109th might camp at Sturgeon Lake but this is extremely doubtful, four will go to Petawawa and the remainder to Kingston.

Mrs. W. H. Blanchard has received official word that her son, Gunner George Blanchard, 2nd Brigade, C.F.A., has been admitted into No. 20 General Hospital, Etaples, France, suffering from influenza. A few days ago Mrs. Blanchard, who has a husband and two sons at the front, received a card stating that her son was ill. On communicating with Ottawa for particulars, the Militia authorities cabled to France, with the result that the above word was received. Gunner Blanchard left here with the 93rd Battery, but was transferred to the 2nd Brigade.

Sapper Albert Chrow, of the Canadian Engineers, Halifax, is home on a visit to his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Chrow, Sophia St., Ashburnham.

The Lakefield News has the following interesting news of the Lakefield detachment of the 93rd Battalion:

The local squad are taking full advantage of the good weather by drilling on the Government dock. Next week they expect to drill on the Market Square.

The members of the local squad were inoculated for the first time on Tuesday. The boys had sore arms for a few days in consequence.

Pte. Edward Tighe enlisted this week and has been added to the strength of the local squad.

Eleven Indians are now drilling at Chemong. It is expected that the number will be increased to twenty-five in a few days.

C Company is now 175 strong. 50 more recruits are required to bring it up to full strength. Capt. Bygott expects to secure that number during the coming month.

During the past two weeks Capt. Bygott secured twenty-five recruits for his company.

The Indian squad at Chemong took a route march to Lakefield on Friday morning, returning in the afternoon. The distance is about eight miles and good time was made on the march.

The members of the local squad had their first football practice on the Market Square on Friday.

It is expected that the 93rd Battalion Band will give a concert in the Town Hall here some evening in the near future. The band will arrive on the noon train and entertain our citizens with music during the afternoon.

Pte. L. Markwick of No. 7 Platoon wishes to challenge any light-weight boxer in the 93rd Battalion to a five-round bout, to take place at Tuesday night's smoker.

An interesting whist game took place in the Sergeants' Mess yesterday, when the Bandmaster and Armourer-Sergeant succeeded in "upping" the Battalion Sergeant-Major and the Sergeant-Major of B Company. The game caused a sensation in the mess, as the losers have been "top dog" for some time.

VITAL STATISTICS FOR THE MONTH

A Total of Forty Deaths During the Month—Building Permits Increased

A total of thirty-nine deaths occurred during the month of March. This is one less than for a similar period last year. The vital statistics for the month are as follows.

	1915	1916
March
Births	49	38
Marriages	11	17
Deaths	40	39

Building Permits.

The building permits for the month of March represented a valuation of $6,266 as against a valuation of $5,717 for a corresponding period of last year.

Bribe Money Found Buried Under Tree

NEW YORK, April 1st. — Buried near the trunk of the tallest of a grove of trees at the very tip of Long Island, a detective late yesterday found a roll of bills which Eugene Oliver Kane, the embalmer, asserted was forced upon him by Dr. Arthur Warren Waite in an effort to induce him to swear there was arsenic in the embalming fluid used on the body of Waite's father-in-law, John E. Peck, of Grand Rapids, for whose murder the young dentist was indicted yesterday. The roll, which Waite told District Attorney Edward Swann contained $9,000, totalled only $7,800 when it was found by the detective. Kane said he never counted the money and, therefore, did not know whether Waite's count was accurate.

Authorities Fear Attempt at Rescue

German Stowaway, Who Captured Matappo, Sent to New York.

LEWES, Del., April 1.—Ernest Schiller, the German stowaway who captured the British steamer Matappo, was taken from jail here last night by detectives and hurried across country to Harrington in an automobile. From this, it was said, he would be taken by train to New York. The detectives said they had received information that attempts would be made to rescue Schiller and with the consent of the local authorities they decided to take him to New York.

Schiller insisted that he was a German spy; that he had been sent to England by the German Government and had succeeded in being enrolled on a British ship. There are many Germans, he says, in the British navy. Doubt is entertained regarding his story of his exploits, and he is being examined as to his mental condition.

Temporary Changes Made on G.T.R. During Illness of H. F. Coyle

Recent temporary appointments in this division of the G.T.R., taking effect to-day, will be of interest to many Peterborough citizens. Mr. H. F. Coyle, superintendent at Belleville, has been granted indefinite leave of absence on account of ill health. Mr. J. D. McMillan, who has been trainmaster at Lindsay, has been appointed acting superintendent at Belleville, taking Mr Coyle's duties. Mr. R. E. Orr, who has been train despatcher at Belleville, taking Mr. Coyle's duties, Mr R. E. Orr, who has been train despatcher at Belleville, succeeds Mr. McMillan as acting train master at Lindsay. These appointments will remain in effect until Mr. Coyle resumes his work.

PLEADS OWN CASE; ACQUITTED.

Frankfort, Ky., April 1. — Fourteen-year-old Roland Lee made an effective personal plea before a jury in the Federal court here and secured an acquittal for himself and his brother, Joshua Lee, twenty, charged with using the mails to defraud. The lad fearlessly presented his defence to the jurors, who were out but a few minutes.

The Canadian Ford Company has Spent Over a Million Dollars on New Equipment Since the Beginning of War

To increase the efficiency and the capacity of the Ford Canadian plant and its service stations—to produce even a better car at a lower cost of manufacture, thus to sell at a lower price, the Ford Canadian executives have put over a million dollars into new equipment since August, 1914.

That this expenditure has been made since war began indicates most emphatically the unquestionable belief of the Canadian Ford Company in the present and future prosperity of Canada and the triumph of the Empire. In fact the Ford Canadian executives are so firmly convinced of this that they are governing the entire policy of a great ten million dollar Canadian Company in accordance with this belief.

Since the beginning of war they have spent approximately a million and three-quarters in new buildings, twice reduced the price of the car by $60 ($120 in all) and reduced the price of spare parts $147 per car—all in addition to this million dollars worth of new equipment.

But, in turn, it has been this new equipment that has been responsible in great part for these reductions in prices. Marvelous new labor saving machinery installed in the recently enlarged two-acre machine shop has effected big savings in cost of manufacture.

For instance three drill presses that formerly were used to turn out 600 parts a day, now have been supplanted by three punch presses that turn out 3000 parts a day, and there is absolutely no sacrifice in quality of work.

At a cost of $40,000 three truly wonderful milling machines were installed that mill 43 Ford engine cylinders at once with perfect accuracy.

Perhaps the most wonderful of all are the new gear cutting machines that are a source of amazement to those acquainted with gear cutting methods in vogue several years ago. Then there were only two or three shops on the continent where gear cutting could be done at all and it was a slow and most exacting process. But in the Ford Canadian plant there are no less than 46 wonderful automatic gear cutting machines that turn out gears cut absolutely perfect in one-twentieth the time without the touch of human hands except for putting in the blank and taking out the finished gear.

When the machine has finished the work it notifies the operator by ringing a bell. One man can operate two or three of these machines, a fact which gives some indication of the great saving in labor that this new equipment has made possible and which also plays a very important part in reducing the manufacturing cost and the selling price of Ford cars.

Again, think of the great saving in labor, as well as time, effected by the remarkable Ford drilling machine that bores 43 holes in a cylinder casting in four directions at a single turn.

Do not assume from this, however, that the number of employees has been decreased. On the contrary, the Ford staff has been increased by 900 men since war began. Furthermore when the present Ford schedule of wages went into effect in April 1915, the wages of these employees were increased $50,000 a month.

If it were not for the exceedingly substantial economies made possible by this new equipment, it can be readily understood that the price of the Ford car, built as it is today of the finest materials procurable, would be very much higher.

No firm that did not have the immense quantity production of the Canadian Ford plant could possibly afford to install such equipment as this and consequently could not sell a car as good as the Ford at anywhere near the Ford prices.

In addition to the equipment told of above new engines were installed in the power plant at Ford, Ontario—650 horse power gas engines specially designed by Ford Engineers.

Also the four new Ford Branch buildings at Montreal, Toronto, London and Winnipeg, each of them as large as many automobile factories, had to be furnished with machinery and appliances. Each one of these branches is so thoroughly equipped as to be able to build a Ford car complete. Each one forms a still further perfection in the already unrivalled Ford Service to Ford owners.

And the fact cannot be overlooked that a policy that dictated the expenditure of such a great sum of cold cash as this during the progress of the war must have been prompted by a very practical and sincere belief in Canada's prosperity—in her future and in her people.

On Monday night, at 7.30, there will be a game between two picked teams of five men each, and after this game the bowlers will close their season by having a banquet in the Y.M.C.A., at which all the members of the different teams are requested to be present.

SPORTING COMMENT

Hugh Ambrose Jennings, general manager of the well known Detroit firm of Ty Cobb and Company, will be forty-six years old on Sunday. The coming season will be his tenth as pilot of the Tigers, and only twice in all that period has the club finished in the second division. In spite of the fact that several other American League clubs look a lot stronger on paper this year than they did in 1915, Hughey isn't visibly worried. He declares that the Tigers will, barring accidents, be in the race with both feet. Last year the Detroit team led the Johnson circuit in batting, and in the biff department the champion Red Sox had to take their dust. Jennings has a solid foundation for his confidence, for any club that includes Ty Cobb has to be reckoned with. It is true that the Georgia Peach has to have some assistance, but the reports from Waxahachie indicate that Jennings is going to have a good, well-rounded team.

Jennings has earned his living in professional baseball for a quarter of a century—and a very comfortable living it has been. He has added to his income by practicing law in the winter months, and he is said to be as classy a legal luminary as he is a baseball pilot. Jennings is probably one of the wealthiest men in the pastime, for while not a tightwad he has never been reckless in financial matters.

Jennings started his baseball career in the mining district of Pennsylvania. He was born on April 2, 1870, in Pittston. As a youngster he played ball in Manch Shunk, Lehighton, and other towns in the coal region. In 1891 he was catching for a semi-professional club in Lehighton. One June day in that year young Jennings got a letter from Jack Chapman, manager of the Louisville club in the old American Association, which was a major league. Chapman enclosed a hundred dollars in his epistle, and ordered Hughey to climb aboard the Colonels' band-waggon. Chapman had been tipped off by a friend who had great confidence in the future of the red-haired Irishman, and he acted on the advice without losing any time.

To jump from a semi-pro outfit to a major league club seemed appalling to Hugh, and he was filled with misgivings as to the result, but he had the hundred bones and he figured that at worst he would have a free trip to and from Kentucky, and a little experience. Chapman didn't need a backstop. He had acted on the spur of the moment in buying his mail-order recruit, and when he got him he scarcely knew what to do with him. Soon after Hugh's arrival Taylor, the first baseman of the Colonels, was put out of the game, and Jennings was perched on that sack.

Hugh gave a very fair imitation of a first baseman, but was soon switched to shortstop. It was as a swatter, however, that he made his big reputation. In his second game he got three safe hits out of four times up, and he finished his first season with a batting average of .386. In 1892 Louisville was admitted to the National Leagu. Hugh continued to play shortstop and batted .232. The following year he temporarily lost his batting eye, and was traded to Baltimore. He batted .332 for the Orioles in 1894, .386 in 1895, and .392 in 1896. In 1899 he went to Brooklyn, where he batted .300. In 1901 he went to the Phillies and remained there two seasons, when he landed in Baltimore. He played shortstop and second base for the Eastern League club until 1907, when he was drafted by Detroit, and became the bench manager of the Tigers.

A BIG PROGRAMME FOR TUESDAY'S SMOKER

The smoker under the auspices of the Sportsmen's Patriotic Association in the armouries on Tuesday night is for the purpose of securing funds for the 93rd Battalion and should be largely patronized. With the assistance of the famous string of boxers who are wearing the uniforms of the 109th Sportsmen's Battalion, a programme of great interest has been arranged. Pte. Hanson and Pte. Feltmatte of the 109th will meet in a bout at 158, Pte. Danny Johnston, the welterweight champion of Canada, will clash with Pte. Ted Picton, another famous welter, and Pte. Donovan and Christie, both well known lightweights, will also come. In addition two singers from the Sportsmen's Battalion will assist in the programme, while the 93rd Battalion will provide a couple of bouts, and some other interesting features. The band of the 93rd will also be on hand. Either Lt.-Col. Greer of Capt. Flanagan of the Sportsmen's Battalion, will talk on the work of the Sportsmen's Association a branch of which has been formed in Peterborough. The admission will be a popular priced one, 25c. to all parts of the armouries.

"WITHIN THE LAW"

A Coming Attraction at the Grand

Theatre is Bayard Veiller's "Within the Law," which ran for an entire year at the Eltinge Theatre, New York City, and which will be seen here on Saturday next for two performances. This is the melodrama treating of modern conditions in New York life, which has caused a sensation not only in the metropolis, but throughout the country; for it has provoked editorial comment and praise from such eminent Americans as Rev. Chas. H. Pankhurst, who wrote of the play, "All employers of labour, who underpay their women employees, should go to see this play for the lesson it will teach them"; and the Bishop of Wyoming, who said, "I shall never forget the lesson it portrayed." "Within the Law" is in four acts and as many scenes. It will be given here by well-known players who have scored individual hits in their respective roles.

A Decline in New Laid Eggs

Butter Market Has Improved During the Week—Comment on the Market Situation

The following comment on the market situation as regards food stuffs appeared in Canadian Grocer this week.

One of the main features of the grocery market this week has been the decline in new-laid eggs. These prices have got on the toboggan and are definitely lower by about 3c. during the last week. This knocks on the head at any rate for the time being, the influx of eggs from Chicago which was assuming large proportions. It has been pointed out in these columns previously that as long as Ontario shippers neglected to deliver eggs in any quantity and as long as there was a surplus of some magnitude in the States, United States eggs would get the business in preference to home products. This, indeed, was actually the state of affairs for the last three or four weeks, but for last few days at any rate, the production and delivery of Ontario eggs has speeded up and consequently prices have declined. They are now at such a point that Chicago eggs cannot compete, with profit. It is not expected that any material advance will be seen, but rather, on the other hand, prices will be easier or virtually the same.

Butter Market.

The butter market is interesting inasmuch as a condition which has obtained or the past month is now altered. For some time there has been a noticeable lack of strength in the butter market, notwithstanding fact that it was soaring in the States and there appeared to be no reason why it should be other than firm at any rate here. This condition, however, has vanished and the tone of the market is much stronger this week. This is chiefly due to fact that make of creamery is lighter, and it is rumoured that owing to the dearth of skilled labour it is possible that the cream will be shipped into the market as cream instead of as the finished product, this being the easier way. Whether this projected condition will actually materialise or not must be left to the future. t any rate, the rumour of it, coupled with the unusually light make of creamery has added strength to the butter market.

Sugar has advanced 10c. again, this making the basis unusually high heretofore out of all comparison with previous war levels. The lack of raw seems to be the fundamental condition which has caused the advance and another reason is fact that refiners have only got supplies for fragments of the time ahead for which they are already actually sold. The market remains firm even at new levels and a further advance still is not unlikely. Any dullness or easiness appears to be of the question at present. In fact one refiner advanced 40 cents per cwt. on Tuesday last instead of the 10c. above referred to, and many predict the others will do the same.

Married Men Called To Join Colours

LONDON, April 1.—Nine groups of married men who attested for service under the Derby plan are to join the colours on May 5. The groups concerned are numbers 33 to 41, consisting of men from 27 to 35 years of age.

It is the calling out of these men before all eligible single men have joined the army that has caused so much agitation throughout the country. In consequence of this feeling an earlier summons issued to these men was cancelled.

Prussian Lords Unable to Share Governments Views

BERLIN, via Copenhagen to London, April 1.—The Prussian House of Lords is unable to share the Government's views as expressed in the Norddeutsche Allgemine Zeitung, on February 13, that only the Reichstag is competent to discuss the Empire's foreign affairs. This declaration is set forth in a statement issued in behalf of both factions in the house.

The House of Lords, it is added, recognizes, however, that any such discussion must take into consideration the military situation, and limits itself accordingly. Particularly must the line be drawn at matters affecting the Emperor's power to command.

The Lords declare that, while fully recognized the extraordinary difficulties of the problems presented, they hold the view that "mistakes have been made in various directions in the internal policy."

The declaration mentions especially the desire for an improvement in measures affecting the nourishment of the people, and continues:

"It is also regretted that the censorship has been limited without adequate ground to discussion of war aims, where patriotic sentiment demanded an extension of German might. The House of Lords expresses the expectation that in the future consideration will be granted to these widely held sentiments so far as this can possibly be done with due regard to the war situation."

The members of the socialist party, who recently seceded, have issued a short declaration in reply to the party's pronunciamento issued Wednesday, denying charges of disloyalty and breach of faith and requesting the members of the social-democratic party "to work further along the lines laid down by our party statutes and to fulfil the duties to the party imposed by membership."

The declaration asserts that the voters will approve the stand taken by the seceders, and that the secession, instead of weakening the party in the eyes of foreigners, will strengthen it.

The Prussian House of Lords consists of the elder princes of the royal house nominated by the King, ninety-eight heads of noble families and 20 members nominated by the King for life.

300 Per Cent. Advance in Wool is Quoted

As an indication of the advance in the price of wool Mr. T. C. Elliott stated that an English traveller quoted six pound lots at $12.32, for which only $4.00 was paid but a short time this ago. A shipment of wool forwarded to the Elliott store was on a vessel which was submarined but managed to float until her cargo was transhipped. The loss of that supply would have been of serious moment to Mr. Elliott.

30,000 Suggestions of Names For Berlin

Prince Edward Islander Sent Tip on Closing Day in 1,100-word Telegram.

BERLIN, Ont., April 1.—Yesterday was the last day for receiving suggestions of a new name for the city. Over 12,000 letter were received by City Clerk Millar, containing over 30,000 suggestions. Among to-day's suggestions was one from Prince Edward Island, which was sent by wire in a message containing over 1,100 words. A letter had been sent, but was delayed owing to storms along the eastern coast. A committee of the elective bodies of the city will likely make the final selection of the name after the special bill is reported favourably by the Private Bills Committee next week.

NEWFOUNDLAND

Written for the Business Man and Student Illustrated with Drawings and Photographs

This is the Subject of the March Number of a Series of Studies in Economic Geography

now appearing regularly in

JOURNAL OF COMMERCE

THOUGH Economic Geography has been much neglected in Canada, no subject is of so full of interest and value to the business man who is looking for markets and other commercial information, or to the student who is on the alert for openings and is trying to determine intelligently to what field he shall devote his life's work.

Already two studies on this broad subject have appeared, namely: One on "The Canadian Mining Industry" in January, and one on "The Iron and Steel Industry" in February. Following the March article on Newfoundland, we shall take up, each a month, such subjects as "The Canadian Mining Industry," "The Pulp and Paper Industry," "The Textile Manufacturing Industry," "Canada's Grain Crop and How It is Handled," "The British West Indies," "Canada's Shops and Foundries," etc.

A Subscription to the "Journal of Commerce" at $3.00 a year will secure you the whole series of 12. In addition to the regular matter in the 52 Weekly Issues of this Authentic Trade and Financial Paper—at your call for the 12 Economic Studies, in a binder, for $1.00.

Each $3.00 Subscriber also receiving a Free Copy of a 320-page Volume, entitled "Canadian Industry, Commerce, and Finance," just issued, revised to date and bound in hard cloth cover.

New York Stock Market

Summary of To-day's Activities on the New York Stock Exchange

NEW YORK, April 1.—Several of the leaders showed gains at the opening of the stock market to-day. The trading was entirely of a professional character. The general tone of the market seemed bullish and coppers and other Mexican stocks showed particularly strong.

Army Requisitions Fodder in Britain

All Available Hay, Oats and Wheat Straw Have Been Secured.

London, April 1.—An army council notice issued last night says that "all hay or oats or wheat straw, threshed or unthreshed, now standing on farm or other premises in bulk in Great Britain," is requisitioned by the War Department. Farmers and stock dealers are authorized to use a normal quantity of straw for their live stock. The amount allotted for private consumption is to be restricted to the monthly average of the preceding three months.

Passengers Rescued From Stranded Liner

Tokio, Saturday, April 1. — The Toyo Kisen Kabushiki Kaisha confirms the report that all the passengers on board its steamer Chiyo Maru, which grounded off Hong Kong Friday morning during a fog, were saved by a British warship. The vessel carried 220 passengers, mostly Americans, and among whom was a party of Boston tourists.

A YEAR FOR PERJURY.

BERLIN, Ont., April 1.—Michael Christ, a Macedonian, was found guilty in the Police Court of perjury in the obtaining of a marriage license and was sentenced to one year in the Ontario Reformatory. He informed the licensee that the young girl he proposed to marry was nearly nineteen years of age, whereas it was proved that she was under 16.

To-morrow Night's Recruiting Rally

Prof. Keirstead, of McMaster University, Will Speak at the Armouries

The usual Sunday evening recruiting rally will be held in the armouries to-morrow evening. The committee has been fortunate in securing the services of a very noted speaker, Professor Keustead of McMaster University, will give the principal address. Peterborough people should not lose the opportunity of hearing Prof. Keustead. The band of the 93rd Battalion will be in attendance and there will be an interesting programme.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Mr. and Mrs. John Nugent, Brock Street, have returned from an extended visit in Toronto.

Miss Esther Thornton, Harvey St., left this morning for Campbellford, where she will be the guest of Miss Nevin for a few days.

The many friends of Mr. Oscar Bulmer, Perry Street, will regret to learn of his removal to Nicholls Hospital to undergo an operation for appendicitis.

Lieutenant W. E. Schuster and Lieut. Geo. Butler of the 224th Overseas Canadian Forestry Battalion, are at the Empress to-day. Lieut. Schuster was at one time in charge of the Rathbun Lumber Co. in Peterborough.

Mrs. T. W. H. Young and Mrs. E. Mason were the hostesses at the 57th Chapter I.O.D.E. tea rooms, Thursday afternoon in the Turnbull building. The tables looked quite dainty with their white covers and ample supply of tasty home-made cooking. The assistants were Mrs. Comstock, Mrs. W. H. Hill, Miss Robinson, Mrs. C. E. Jamieson, Mrs. Hamilton and the Misses Rubidge, Mrs. Loch poured tea and Mrs. Gemmell acted as cashier. There was, as usual, a very large attendance.

WEDDING BELLS

McCONNELL—CALVERT.

A pretty wedding took place at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Calvert, of Ennismore Township, when their second daughter, Miss Florenda, was united in marriage to Mr. Pennington McConnell, of Emily. The ceremony was performed by Rev. James, of Omemee. The bride entered the drawing-room, supported by her father, and took her place under an arch, which was beautifully decorated with evergreens and flowers, to the strains of the Lohengrin Wedding March, which was played by Mrs. John White, of Omemee, cousin of the bride. The bride looked charming in a gown of white silk, trimmed with silk net, and pearls. She wore a wedding veil, caught up with orange blossoms, and carried a bouquet of white carnations. Her only ornament was a beautiful pendant, set with pearls, the gift of the groom. The couple were unattended. After the ceremony the party sat down to a table which was well prepared, after which a very pleasant evening was spent in music, games and dancing. The bride's going away suit was navy blue poplin, with white satin hat to match. The young couple left amid showers of confetti and all good wishes for their new home at Pleasant Valley Farm, Emily, where Mr. and Mrs. McConnell will be at home to their friends after April 15th.

OBITUARY

JAMES JANES.

One of Port Hope's most respected citizens, Mr. James Janes, passed away this morning after a brief illness from pneumonia. Mr. Janes was for years an engineer on the G.T.R. but of late years has lived retired. By his quiet, genial and courteous manner he made a wide circle of friends who will receive this sad news with profound regret. His widow and one son, Frank, of Rochester, survive and to them is extended heartfelt sympathy in their sudden and irreparable loss.—Port Hope Guide, Saturday, March 25th.

Mrs. Janes is at present staying with Mrs. Jobbitt, 506 Charlotte street.

Matthews-Blackwell Had $100,000 Shipment of Bacon on "Cecilia"

Six hundred thousand pounds of bacon, worth $100,000, shipped from the Matthews-Blackwell Co., with London (England) its destination was lost when the liner Cecilia was submarined a short time ago. Mr. T. F. Matthews stated that the shipment was partially covered by insurance. Much of it had been produced from the Peterborough factory and the remainder was supplied from others of the Company's plants.

Guelph Mayor Hurt By Flying Concrete

Dynamite Explosion Sent Piece Flying Against his Ankle, Breaking it.

GUELPH, April 1.—Mayor Mahoney was the victim of a most painful injury about five o'clock yesterday afternoon, when a piece of concrete from the dam in the river, which was being dynamited, struck him just above the ankle on the left foot. The result was a compound fracture of the limb. The City Engineer has had a gang of men at work for three days and nights trying to save the bridge at Huskisson Street. When the water started to rise this afternoon it was seen that the dam or a portion of it would have to be removed to let the water out. A boat was taken out and let down above the dam by means of a rope, and a charge of six sticks of dynamite was placed in cracks along the cement work. This was exploded by a battery on the shore. The Mayor was on the west side of the bridge, and about sixty yards from the point of explosion. With a tremendous roar the dynamite exploded. Only one stray piece was seen to travel sideways. It struck the Mayor on the leg and he fell to the ground immediately. With a splendid nerve Mayor Mahoney made an attempt to straighten out the injured member, but it was soon seen that it was a bad break. A doctor was immediately called and loss of blood was stopped, and he was removed to the General Hospital.

When making muffins, drop scones, etc., dip the spoon in water or milk. The batter will not stick to the spoon, and the cakes will be more even in size.

A TRENCH FOR HORSES. ON THE MACEDONIAN FRONT.

To keep horses from wandering away to look for a grazing place, where there is none, the French artillerymen have devised an ingenious method of "digging the horses in." Trenches are cut into the earth and the horses driven into what is not unlike a stall. This stall, besides keeping the animals from wandering away, is a great protection for them from the biting winds.

DE LAVAL Cream Separators

Buying a Cream Separator is a good deal like hiring a man to work on your farm. A hired man that does poor work, and is lazy, is an expensive proposition, no matter how little you pay him. A cream separator that is hard to turn, hard to keep clean, and doesn't skim close would be expensive, even if you got it as a gift.

CREAMERYMEN AND DAIRYMEN ALL OVER THE WORLD RECOGNIZE THE SUPERIORITY OF THE DE LAVAL.

About the only reason why any one ever buys any other cream separator is because they can get it a little cheaper. Then they soon find out they have lost ten times as much from separator inconvenience, poor skimming, and a machine that quickly wears out, as they saved in the beginning.

Remember that a De Laval will soon pay for itself, and if you have no separator now, or an inferior machine, you can buy a De Laval on such terms that it will pay for itself while you are using it.

The best cream separator is the cheapest Let our nearest agent call and prove it to you on your own farm, or write us direct.

SOONER OR LATER YOU WILL BUY A DE LAVAL.

Heavy Fighting Continues in Verdun Area

Enemy Attacks About St. Eloi Have Been Repulsed Says British Post

Considerable Aerial Activity on Both Sides in the Region of Souchez—Violent Artillery Engagements in Dvinsk Region

LONDON, April 3.—British report Saturday night on the western front says considerable aerial activity took place on both sides in the region of Souchez and enemy attacks about St. Eloi are repulsed.

PARIS, April. 3.—Yesterday afternoon's official statement reports a violent bombardment of French positions in Avocourt woods, but no infantry attacks. No event of importance took place during the night on the entire front.

CONSTANTINOPLE, April 3.—An enemy cruiser opened a violent fire on the Dardanelles. No change is reported in the Tigris region.

PETROGRAD, April 3.—Very violent artillery engagements are reported in the Dvinsk region. Russians successfully shelled an enemy train at Tourmant and brought down a German aeroplane.

LONDON, April 3.—Two more Norwegian and one Swedish ship were sunk by the Germans Saturday.

LONDON, April 3.—Public clamour for trial of a captured Zeppelin as baby killers and as murderers of women and children.

MONTREAL, April 3.—Captain Shaughnessy, son of Sir Thomas, president of the C.P.R., has been killed in action.

ROME, April 3.—Renewed fighting has taken place on the Austrian front.

BERLIN, April 3.—Serbians interned in Austria will be allowed to return to their homes.

Three Zeppelin Raids In As Many Days On Scotland and England

Result of the Third One is Unknown But Casualties in Two Previous Ones Were 225—Chief Turkish Port on the Mediterranean Destroyed

LONDON, April 3.—The coast of Scotland and northern and south-eastern counties of England was raided by Zeppelins Sunday night, making three raids in as many days. Casualties for two previous raids total 225 persons. Result of third is unknown.

LONDON, April 3.—The chief Turkish port on the Mediterranean was destroyed after a bombardment of three hours by British war craft.

PARIS, April 3.—Heavy fighting continues in the Verdun area. Between Douaumont and Vaux the enemy made gains but they were recaptured by the French.

LONDON, April 3.—Greece notifies Germany to cease Salonika raids or war will be declared.

PARIS, April 3.—French airmen successfully raid enemy bivouacks and entrenchments. Seven German aeroplanes were felled.

Greek Government Officials Sharply Criticise Allies for Exposing Salonika to Attacks

BERLIN (by wireless to Tuckerton, N.J.,) April 3.—"Athens reports that at least two hundred Anglo-French soldiers were killed by the air attack," says the Overseas News Agency in an item given out for publication today. "Twenty tons of explosives were detonated and numerous barracks were burned. Twenty-seven Serbian railroad cars with war material and an ammunition shed in the city were destroyed.

"Greek public opinion sharply criticises the proceedings of the Entente Allies, which have exposed Salonika to attacks, as their headquarters and military establishments are in the town. The refusal of the Entente governments to pay damages caused by the air attack has caused much bitter feeling in Greek circles."

Salonika Is Safe, General Declares

Allied Officer Does Not Believe Austro-Germans Will Undertake Offensive.

ATHENS, April 3.— "I do not believe the Austro-Germans seriously intend attacking Salonika," said an Entente general to-day. "They have an ecellent intelligence service in Macedonia and are fully aware of the great strength of our positions. I do not think they will throw away men needlessly in trying to take it, especially after the Verdun experience.

"In respect to a possible offensive by the Entente Allies, it is impossible to say anything. I believe Salonika to be absolutely impregnable."

Baby Owl Saved By Soldier Fed By Its Parents

LONDON, April 3.—Amid the horrors of the war there now and then appears, like a nosegay in the desert, some slender and beautiful phase of the struggle that strikes a responsive chord in sympathetic hearts. This is particularly true in regard to the attention and care given to dogs and cats and horses that have been found by the British and the French on the battle fields or in the bombarded ruins of cities, and now Bird Notes and News tells about the rescue of a baby owl which shows the tenderness of heart of British soldiers.

This owlet was found by a young artillery man in a small cage in the the house where he was billeted. The soldier tells the story himself in a letter which he wrote home. The little creature had fallen from its nest in the belfry tower somewhere in France, and thus was condemned to slow death by its owner. The Englishman pleaded for the bird to be given to him, and nailed the cage up on the church wall.

Next morning he found the remains of three mice and two sparrows in the cage, and the owlet in recovered health and spirits. It developed that each night the parent bird fed the youngster, and before the battery received marching orders the baby was able to fly and take care of itself, and the young soldier had the satisfaction of releasing it from its cage and setting it free.

SILK HATTED INSPECTORS.

Councilman Kelly, of Liverpool, England, recently expressed the opinion that it was silly for the municipality's 22 market inspectors to wear tall silk hats while nosing over pig and sheep carcases, sides of veal and the like. Councilman Kelly quickly learned that to Englishmen things done until they become custom are never silly, the City Council having passed the hat bill without a single tremor.

DISCRIMINATION IS BLAMED FOR FOOD RIOTS IN GERMANY

ROTTERDAM, April 1.—Favoritism in the distribution of foodstuffs is declared on German authority to have had more to do with recent disorders in the Fatherland than any actual shortage. The accusation is not made alone by radical publications like Vorwaerts. The Grenzzeitung of the military zone, discussing the riots at Dresden, relates the following:

It appears that the market authorities in that town have for months past been doing a thriving trade in cornering vegetables and cereals, which were intended by the municipality to be distributed at a nominal charge among the poor. Before long, proof was forthcoming that the names of customs and town hall officials, wholesale business firms and first-class boarding houses, were carefully noted in the market authorities' books. These favoured customers were supplied secretly with all the articles they needed at prices only slightly in excess of those fixed as payable by the poor.

"The consequence was that on scores of occasions hundreds of poor women, after standing for hours in front of the market stalls, pushing and trampling one another and tearing one another's clothes off their backs, in their struggles to obtain the desired food, were sent away either empty-handed or given a paltry half pound of peas or beans while well-paid officials or rich merchants were supplied with 20 pounds at a time, delivered free at their houses."

THOUSANDS WERE PROSECUTED FOR SMUGGLING GOODS

THE HAGUE, April 3. — The Dutch minister of war, reporting in the second chamber of the Dutch Parliament, says that 32,870 persons were prosecuted for smuggling goods into Germany last year. Forty thousand soldiers were employed to prevent smuggling, but because of the 600 miles of frontier they had to patrol, many of the smugglers were able to do a brisk business with the people across the border. The wiles of the smugglers are many, and the ingenuity which they bring to their trade, it is said, would fit them for all the higher reaches of diplomacy.

Leather was smuggled inside barrels of mussels, balls of rubber inside the outer shells of onions and bags of meal got up to represent sleeping babes were sent over the border. Hundreds in the lighter forms of the prescribed after the beginning of the war engaged in the lighter forms of the prescribed traffic. Bribery of the frontier guards is said to have been the method tried most frequently.

The strip of country along the various frontiers is now declared in a state of siege and the military commanders order the whole life of the community. They have resorted in some regions to banishing all undesirable persons. The number thus deprived of their right of residence last year is 1,397.

A bill passed recently limits supplies for the border towns to quantities that were normal before the war.

The authorities carry out the anti-smuggling laws in a most drastic way, realizing that the traffic was endangering the country's overseas supply by awakening the distrust of the allies.

Russians Fighting For Flood Islets

Berlin Asserts Drive is Doomed to Failure, but Petrograd Reports Steady Advance.

PETROGRAD, April 1.—The Russians do not at present propose to try to drive the Germans out of Courland for the reason that before the impenetrable rows of the enemy's wire entaglements and trenches could be forced the Spring floods must put a stop to all operations.

The Germans know this, and their one object is to hold little Ararats, amid the flood, so that when the waters subside they may repopulate their temporarily abandoned lines. The Russians are trying to clear these little Ararats of the Germans now so as to secure the first opportunity in the contest for the repopulation of the submerged spaces.

This means certain assistance to the French front because the probability is that the Germans, trusting in the late Russian Spring to raise between themselves and the Russians a broad watery barrier, would feel secure here and concentrate their forces in a continued attempt to break the western front or at any rate forestall an advance of the Allies there. The attention of the Germans has been distracted from the western front at the critical moment.

It is very important for them in view of a possible summer offensive against Riga and Dvinsk that their present positions should be securely sentineled by command of scattered knolls during the Spring floods. It is very important to the enemy that the Russians should be held off the Vilnay Railway by that line of lakes south of Dvinsk which during the Spring floods will be a still more effective barrier. Then during the early western Spring they could use all their aggressive force on the western front, and if they succeeded in weakening the Allies' aggressive potentialities they would use the four short Summer months for an advance on Riga and Dvinsk.

But the present Russian advance upsets their time-table, for if the Russians succeeded in securing commanding points in the flooded area all the laborious winter preparations of the Germans will go for nothing, and the anticipated advance on Riga and Dvinsk will, place at best to a stubborn struggle for the recovery of the positions they gained last Autumn, and at worst to resistance to a Russian advance, for Russian success would mean laying bare the chief natural defenses of the Germans in Courland.

Praise Neutrals For Prison Relief

BERLIN, April 3., (by Wireless to BUCKERTON).—A representative of the government outlined to the Reichstag today the situation as regards German prisoners of war in Russia and Japan. He reported that the activities of a delegation representing Red Cross commissions of neutral countries had resulted in greatly improving conditions for the prisoners, and he voiced appreciation of the important services thus rendered.

As regards conditions in England, the situation of war prisoners was not unfavorable, the Reichstag was told, while in France conditions were rather the reverse in many cases, there being complaint of insufficient food supplies at several places where prisoners were kept.

HORN BROS. TO BUILD FACTORY

Big Proposition Off—Small Factory To Be Erected

LINDSAY, April 3.—After due consideration and deliberation those interested in the Horn Bros. factory proposition have decided to drop the big proposition and Horn Bros. have decided to build and operate a small factory on their own account.

It appears that the proposition to erect a larger factory than the one recently destroyed by fire has fallen through, owing to the people failing to suscribe for stock. This being the case those interested have practically decided to go ahead on a small scale, that is the Horn Bros., will erect a small factory (about half the size of the former factory) and will build in such a shape as to be able to extend the factory at any time.

Horn Bros. will in all probability appear before the Town Council Monday night and ask for fixed assessment, or exemption from taxes.

CANAL CONDITIONS BETTER.

PANAMA, April 3.—In spite of the official prediction by the War Department at Washington that the Panama Canal would be open for traffic on April 15, shipping concerns are flooding Lieut. Col. Harding, Engineer of Maintenance, with cables asking for a positive statement whether the canal will be ready for reopening on that date. Colonel Harding invariably informs these persons that conditions in the Gaillard Cut justify the prediction.

Conditions in the Gaillard Cut are improving daily, the channel is being deepened and broadened, and generally put in a state for the navigation by the larger ships. There are now five vessels at Balboa and three at Cristobal awaiting transit through the canal, while others are reported on their way to the terminals.

SPLIT IN GERMAN SOCIALIST PARTY

BERLIN, April 3. (by wireless to Tuckerton, N.J.)—The socialist party in a pronunciamento has read the seceding members out of the party. A resolution which was adopted by a vote of 30 to 6, declares that the seceders have formed their own organization, are receiving party dues and purpose to oppose the socialist party. It says that a special socialist organization cannot operate and that whoever works with it or becomes a member of it places himself outside the socialist party.

The Executive committee of the socialist party in another resolution declares that it has been impossible to hold the party together during the war and that therefore it is the committee's duty to deal with the seceders.

10 CENT "CASCARETS" BEST LAXATIVE FOR LIVER AND BOWELS

Don't Stay Constipated, Headachy, Bilious, With Breath Bad or Stomach Sour

No odds how bad your liver, stomach or bowels; how much your head aches, how miserable and uncomfortable you are from a cold, constipation, indigestion, biliousness and sluggish bowels—you always get relief with Cascarets.

Don't let your stomach, liver and bowels make you miserable. Take Cascarets to-night; put an end to the headachy, biliousness, dizziness, nervousness, sick, sour gassy stomach, bad cold, offensive breath and all other distress; cleanse your inside organs of all the bile, gases and constipated matter which is producing the misery.

A 10-cent box means health, happiness and a clear head for months. All druggists sell Cascarets. Don't forget the children—their little insides need a gentle cleansing, too.

Deep Fat Frying with CRISCO
The Purity Shortening
Crisco Flavor
Made at Hamilton, Canada

Without exception, cooking authorities agree that deep frying not only is more healthful but more economical than shallow frying.

You can fry many foods in deep fat which you now fry in the pan or skillet.

With Crisco there is no smoke in the kitchen because Crisco reaches frying point without smoking. Test for proper heat with a bit of the food you are about to cook.

Use plenty of Crisco—about 3 lbs. on an average, so that the heat will not be reduced when the raw food is added bit by bit. There practically is no absorption if plenty of Crisco is used and the temperature kept high.

There is a great saving, because of the small amount absorbed and because you may use the same Crisco over and over. In fact, you can fry fish, onions and potatoes all in the same Crisco. Strain out the food particles after each frying.

A crisp, brown crust forms almost instantly. Then the inside bakes instead of soaks. Because of this fact and Crisco's vegetable origin, fried foods now are most wholesome.

OUR SERIAL STORY

"Flower of the Gorse"

BY LOUIS TRACY

"It is the box that did contain it at one time," came the vexed rejoinder.

"Do you mean that the case is not there?"

"Yes. Someone has stolen it. I care nothing about the diamonds; but the pearls were given me by Mr. Carmac, and cannot be replaced."

"But—forgive the question—why did you say you do not blame me?"

"I blame no one, you least of any, as you are the one man who was never near my cabin since I quitted it."

Raymond advanced farther into the room. After one sharp glance at the flustered sailor, he gazed again at the limp collection of garments on the floor, from which a light haze of steam was curling lazily, as the temperature of the apartment was many degrees higher than that of the wet and closely packed lingerie and dresses.

"This is a very serious matter," he said slowly. "Unfortunately most of the Stella's crew have left Pont Aven."

"My men were not thieves, Mr. ——" broke in Popple fiercely.

"I am not even hinting that they were," said Raymond. "I only mention the chief obstacle in the way of a search for the missing gems—granted the almost incredible thing that any man on board the Stella stole them in the belief that he could win clear with his loot before Mrs. Carmac discovered her loss. Do you mean to end for the police?" he continued, addressing Mrs. Carmac. "And—that reminds me—what of the money Mr. Carmac carried in one of his trunks? Is that gone also?"

Mrs. Carmac snapped that she did not mean to trouble the police. The sooner she was out of Pont Aven and free of its oppressive atmosphere the better she would be pleased. Then, apparently ashamed of her petulance, she explained the mystery of the open lock.

Raymond tried to be helpful. He frowned judicially. "Where did you actually place the jewelcase?" he asked.

"In those straps," she said, pointing to the slings attached to the inside of the lid.

"Then isn't it at least possible that you did not actually lock the box, though believing you had done so? In this event the case, being heavy, may have fallen out, and be now somewhere in the locality where the box was found."

"No," said Popple. "The diver had his orders. He searched pertic'lar." His tone was gruff, even hostile. He would be hard to convince that the secretary's reference to the departed members of the yacht's company was not meant as a slur on their character.

Raymond ignored Popple's curtness. "Still, as you yourself said, Captain, the sea acts in a curiously uncertain way at times," he replied blandly. "There will be no harm in making a fresh search to-morrow. Weather permitting, I shall accompany you, if for no other reason than a wish to see once again a place where some of us—not all, unhappily—were so providentially rescued."

Mrs. Carmac rang for Celeste. "Take these articles, and give them to Mademoiselle Julia for distribution among the poor women of the village," she said. Her attitude was eloquent. The pearls were lost irretrievably. She dismissed the subject.

"Mais, Madame," cried the dismayed Celeste, "much of the linen is veritably new, and only requires washing."

"Do as I bid you. I shall never wear any of those garments again. Captain Popple, here is the key you want. I leave you to deal with the customs people. Will you help Celeste to remove the box? Thank you. Mr. Raymond, you have just returned from Quimperle, I suppose? Did you have a cold journey?"

Raymond took the cue, and said nothing more of the theft. When Popple and the maid had gone he explained that during the run to Quimperle he decided that it would be more discreet to telephone Duquesne than send Yvonne's telegram. He was lucky in reaching his friend without delay, and was thus able to give him detailed instructions, including a full description of Madeleine's appearance. Duquesne had promised to meet the train at the Gare St. Lazare. In fact, he was so eager to serve that, failing Madeleine's arrival at the specified hour, he would meet the next train, and the next. In any case he would telegraph the result early in the morning.

In a word, Raymond had acquitted himself admirably. He had forgotten nothing, left no stone unturned. Yvonne was more than ever grateful.

Mrs. Carmac was tired, almost peevish; so the girl did not remain much longer.

She agreed readily when Raymond asked to be allowed to see her home, and did not demur on reaching the bridge at an unexpected request that she should walk with him a little way down the road to the harbour.

"The hour is not so late," he said deferentially, "and I wish to lay before you a very serious matter. I may surprise you greatly. I may even distress you. But I do want you to believe, Miss Yvonne, that in baring my heart to you I am not swayed by unworthy motives."

The girl was certainly astonished by this portentous opening; but the secretary's action with regard to Madeleine had completely dissipated a sense of restraint and dislike that she was usually aware of when in his company. Thinking he had some news from Paris that he did not wish to reveal in Mrs. Carmac's presence, she hastened to assure him that he might speak with the utmost candor.

"That is good and kind of you," he said; "but it is only what I expected to hear from your lips. But I am sure you will forgive me if I tread warily. I have that to tell which may find you unprepared, and I think you will thank me afterward—no matter what view you take of what I may call an astounding revelation—if I do not blurt out what I have to say like some frightened child. My nature is a cautious one, and I shrink from even the semblance of inflicting pain. Such characteristics may be commendable in their way; but they have their drawbacks in a case like this, when a man who would willingly undergo any suffering for your sake is forced, against the grain, to utter unpleasant truths."

Yvonne was more and more bewildered. She realised intuitively now that he meant to discuss her mother's affairs, since Madeleine could not possibly have reached Paris yet, and any tidings he might have obtained with regard to Rupert Foadyke's schemes hardly warranted such an alarming preamble. So she strove to make him comprehend that he was treading on dangerous ground.

"If you are referring even indirectly, to Mrs. Carmac," she said frankly, "I must warn you instantly that I cannot listen to anything concerning her. Until she came to Pont Aven I was not even aware that such a relative as an aunt existed. When she leaves this place—though I shall see her often, I hope, in the future—the relations between us will be rather those of good friends than of aunt and niece. You ought to understand, then, Mr. Raymond, that if your confidences deal with her I refuse to hear them."

Raymond sighed heavily. He seemed to be at a loss for words. In reality Yvonne had said exactly what he anticipated, and he counted on a well judged delay as calculated to increase her agitation and weaken her defenses.

"Please don't render an ungracious task harder," he said, as though nerving himself to a supreme effort, when Yvonne, after walking a few paces in silence, was about to tell him that she would go no farther. "I meant to prepare you by some vague comments that would clear the air. But your highly strung and generous temperament will not permit any display of what I have described as my methods of caution. Well, then, if it must be so, let us get to the crux of the matter at once. Mrs. Carmac is not your aunt, Miss Yvonne. She is your mother! She deserted him and you, got an American divorce, and was married to Walter Carmac in England. I believe that the second marriage was not a valid one. It is terrible to have to say these things; but they are true, and it rests with you to save her from exposure and ignominy. I beseech you to credit my good faith in this matter. To whom can I appeal if not to you, her daughter? It is manifestly impossible that I should go to your father. He could not help her if he would. Her future happiness, her very means of existence, are in your hands. Can you then reproach me if I ask you to bear with me while I endeavour to show a way out of a situation bristling with difficulties for all of us, alive with real danger for your own mother?"

In the first shock of this disclosure Yvonne was minded to rend the man with a few quiet words of scorn and disdain, and then leave him. Twice she essayed to break in on his measured utterances, and twice she held back. She could not know that Raymond had forged his thunderbolt with no slight skill. He could not hope to achieve the final effect he aimed at by merely revealing a secret that was no secret. Close observation had shown that the girl was well aware of the relationship she bore to Mrs. Carmac, and, although she might be a prey to terror and dismay at finding the knowledge in possession of a comparative stranger, she would hardly do other than resent his interference, resent it too with a good deal of spirit and hot indignation.

He contrived therefore to combine innuendo with fact. He had counted the cost. He was playing a desperate game. During the next five minutes he must have in Yvonne either a determined opponent or a subservient if unwilling ally. There could be no half measures. If his suit was spurned, he would attach himself forthwith to Rupert Foadyke's fortunes. If Yvonne wavered, or was cowed, he would strike a telling blow through her mother. No matter how the issue tended, he was secure of a thumping reward.

Once again the hazard of the hour seemed to be with him. Yvonne, almost tongue-tied and wholly bewildered, could only falter brokenly, "Having said so much, you cannot stop now. What do you mean when you say that Mrs. Carmac is in danger?"

(To be continued.)

Stomach Was Bad.

Could Eat Hardly Anything.

When the stomach gets out of order the whole system seems to become affected in one way or an other. The breath becomes foul, the tongue furred, the appetite becomes disturbed, nausea and vomiting occur, there is a rising and souring of food caused by the acidity of the stomach, and the stomach and bowels become distended causing flatulency. Unless these symptoms are met with immediately, dyspepsia or some other serious trouble is liable to follow as a consequence.

That grand old remedy, Burdock Blood Bitters, has been on the market for the past forty years, and we claim, without any fear of contradiction, that there is not another medicine on the market to-day that can compare with it for the cure of all disturbances of the stomach.

Miss Lillian E. Phillips, Plumweseop, N.B., writes: "My stomach was so bad I was in pain and misery. I could eat hardly anything. I had been treated by skillful doctors for it, but they did me no good. I was giving up in despair when I happened to hear of Burdock Blood Bitters. You can't think how fast it helped me, for I had only taken two bottles before I was better. I will recommend your medicine very highly to all my friends and sufferers."

Burdock Blood Bitters is manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

6 BOXES CURED PSORIASIS

Mrs. Nettie Massey, Cannboro, Ont., writes: "Three doctors described my trouble as psoriasis, and one said could never be cured. The disease spread all over me, even on my face and head, and the itching and burning was hard to bear. I used eight boxes of Dr. Chase's Ointment and am entirely cured—not a sore to be seen. I can hardly praise this Ointment enough."

Wonderful Hats.

On one occasion Lincoln was presented with two fine hats, each by a different hatmaker, neither knowing that the other had made such a contribution. In the course of events they called upon the president, and it so happened that both called at the same time. When both found themselves in the presence of the executive they asked how he had liked the hats they had sent him, and, taking advantage of the opportunity of securing a statement of superiority of one or the other make, the president was asked to state his preference. To many men such a question would be very embarrassing, but to Lincoln not at all. He took the hat, one in each hand, and then replied gravely, but with a mischievous twinkle in his keen eyes:

"Gentlemen, your hats do mutually surpass each other!"

An Honored Pig.

A four footed discoverer is honored in the town hall of Luneburg, Prussia. It is a memorial to a pig that breathed its last 300 years ago. This consists of a handsome glass case inclosing a ham in excellent preservation, and underneath a black marble tablet with the following inscription in gold letters: "Passersby, here you behold the mortal remains of the pig which acquired for itself imperishable glory by the discovery of the salt springs of Luneburg."

AN IMPORTANT LETTER FROM NIAGARA FALLS.

Niagara Falls, Ont.—"I was miserable, tired out and dragging around. My legs could scarcely support me. My husband had read about 'Favorite Prescription' and he got me to use it. I used four bottles and the results were surprising. I got stronger, was less nervous, my appetite improved and I felt like a new person. It is the best medicine for women I have ever heard of."—Mrs. A. C. Brown, 30 Clifton Ave., Niagara Falls, Ont.

There is nothing that will bring comfort and renew hope to the invalid so surely as good news. When the vital forces are at a low ebb and everything seems useless, a ray of joy and assurance will stimulate the weary body to new effort and energy. A letter from a loved one has turned the tide in many a siege of sickness.

Doctor Pierce, of the Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., has good news for every suffering woman. Write him to-day and tell him your troubles, and he will send you just the right advice to restore you to health and bring back the roses to your cheeks, and without charge. His "Favorite Prescription" has been the means of thousands of suffering women. Many grateful patients have taken Dr. Pierce's advice.

Mothers, if your daughters are weak, lack ambition, are troubled with headaches, lassitude and are pale and sickly, Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription is just what they need to surely bring the bloom of health to their cheeks and make them strong and healthy.

It is not a secret remedy because its ingredients are printed on wrapper. Sold in either tablet or liquid form.

THE M.O.H. of London ENGLAND says:

"I take Abbey's Salt regularly every morning, and it keeps me in the best of health and spirits. It only needs to be known to be appreciated." Dr. W. H. Wright, Medical Officer of Health.

If you don't know Abbey's Salt, now is the time to find out for yourself how beneficial it is in relieving Constipation, clearing the whole digestive system and toning up your appetite.

Quite unlike dangerous cathartic drugs—its action is gentle, but sure and invigorating.

Abbey's has no deleterious ingredient—being composed solely of the medicinal salts extracted from pure, fresh fruit juice. A spoonful of the granules in a glass of water taken night and morning for a week or ten days will give you a new understanding of the delight of perfect health. Try Abbey's. 25c. and 60c. bottles at all druggists. Made in Canada for over twenty years.

PREDESTINATION A BLESSING TO WORLD

God's Entire Plan Was Prearranged.

Church Foreknows From Before the Creation of the World — God Foreknew the End From the Beginning—Our Heavenly Lord the Second Adam—The Church to Mother the Entire Human Family —Predestination Greatly Misunderstood in the Past—Elect to Bless the Non-Elect—Character Conformation to God's Dear Son.

[The matter under this heading is supplied by the Pastor Russell Lecture Bureau, who conduct the Brooklyn Tabernacle (unsectarian) Bible Studies, and who have arranged for its publication.]

New York, April 2.—Pastor Russell delivered a very interesting and logical address at the New York City Temple, W. 63rd St., near Broadway, this evening, on a subject which has greatly confused people in the past. His text was, "For whom He did foreknow He also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of His Son, that He might be the First-born among many brethren." (Romans 8:29.) He said in part:

It seems very wonderful, dear friends, that our great Creator should so long ago have planned not only the blessing of the world, but also the High Calling of the Church. He foreknew us before the world was created, before we had come into existence. He knew the end from the beginning, as we on a small scale often do to-day. If a man would put up a great building, he would employ an architect to draw up plans and specifications, and in the plan everything would be arranged for beforehand. The size and the location of the various rooms, the character of the material to be used, etc., would all be foreknown and forestated, so that whoever would read the specifications, and see the architect's drawings, would know exactly what kind of building was to be erected. Just so our Creator is a great Architect and Builder; and His entire Plan for mankind was prearranged before the foundation of the world.

God has had a special purpose in everything He has made, has had a blessing in view of all His intelligent creatures. He has not been working in a haphazard manner, doubtful of the outcome of His plans and purposes, as once it seemed to us in our ignorance. It is very comforting to know that our Heavenly Father has infinite Wisdom and Power, as well as infinite Justice and Love; and that His glorious purposes cannot be thwarted or even delayed, but are grandly progressing to their completion. No opposition of man or demons can interfere with the glorious outworking of His great Plan of the Ages.—Isaiah 55:8-11; Ephesians 1: 9-12.

At one time many of us thought that the Devil had come into competition with God, and so opposed the Divine plans that the Almighty did not know just how to get around the matter, but tried first one way and then another. We supposed that somehow God would finally get His few children out of Satan's clutches, but that everything and everybody else would be burned up with literal fire, the unsaintly being confined in a place which we called Hell, to be tortured eternally. Now we see that we had very crude, confused ideas, especially when we tried to connect this thought with the Scriptural declaration that God had foreknown all this from before the foundation of the world. We are very thankful that all this darkness is scattered; and that we can now see why God has permitted evil, and how He will overrule all things in the end for the good, not only of the Church, but of the world.

The Second Adam and Eve.

According to the Bible our great Creator predetermined first the creation of various ranks of angels and then the creation of man. All this was accomplished through the Logos, our Lord Jesus Christ in His prehuman state, as the Father's Agent. God knew that man would fall into sin. He knew that at the proper time He would send the Logos, His well-beloved Son, to redeem man. All this being known to God, He also foreknew that He would issue a special Call for a Church class to be associated with His Son as the Bride of Christ, for the judging, instructing, and restoring of the race which that Son died to redeem.

We perceive that our Lord Jesus, now supremely exalted because of His obedience unto death (Philippians 2:8-11), is to be the second Adam, the second Father of the human race. He is to make good where the first Adam failed, and to recover him and his posterity—as many of them as will—to all that was lost in Eden.

Thus the Bible presents before us a beautiful picture—a second Adam and a second Eve, the new Father and Mother of the race. The father is the one who generates the life; the mother nourishes the life that is generated by the father. So the work of the Church when completed and glorified with Christ will be to care for, to nourish, and to uphuild the human family, who will be recreated by Christ Jesus, their Redeemer. Step by step she will raise them up to perfection. What a marvelous Plan—a Plan by which the Heavenly Father's likeness shall be restored to the human race. Oh, how glorious it is to have a God like this; One who is working all things according to the counsel of His own will. We can rest securely by faith, assured that our God knows what He is doing; and that His plans are all good, wise, and benevolent.

At first we could take only the A, B, C lessons; but as we have grown in love and in intelligence concerning our God we know Him better, and are beginning to see lengths, breadths, heights, and depths of His Love and Wisdom which surpass all human understanding. "When He did foreknow," says the Apostle, "He also did predestinate." At one time that word "predestinate" had a terrible sound to us. We said, "Oh, yes; Calvin taught that God predestinated a few saints to be saved to Heavenly bliss, but that everybody else He predestinated to go to eternal torment."

But, dear friends, God has never predestinated anything of that kind. There is not even a hint in our text regarding a predestination of the world. Our text refers only to a predestination of the true Church, a company who after they were called would by faithfulness to the terms of their covenant make their calling and election sure. God has predestinated a certain class, to be composed of a definite number, for a special purpose. Whoever would be of this class must meet the required conditions.

The Bible Predestination.

This class is predestinated to be conformed to the image of God's dear Son. This is a grand predestination. It rests with us individually whether or not we shall thus conform ourselves. In this same Epistle the Apostle says to the Church, "Be not conformed to this world; but be ye transformed, by the renewing of your minds, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God." (Romans 12:2.) Nobody will be in that elect class who does not become conformed to the character-likeness of God's dear Son. This Church of Christ is almost completed. The predestinated number—144,000—is about filled up. Every one of them will surely be a copy of Christ in character.

Since God has foreordained that He will have such a company, it follows that all of our experiences from the time that we have come into the Church will work favorably to us if we continue loyal. But if any who have been numbered amongst this class should become tired of the narrow way and should walk out of it, their names will be dropped, and others chosen to fill their places. There is absolutely no Scriptural authority for the doctrine held by some that none of the Elect can fall; in other words, "Once in grace always in grace."

When we consecrated ourselves to the Lord through Christ Jesus, when we made our covenant with God (Psalm 50:5), we were accepted through the merit of our great Substitute. Our Lord Jesus became our High Priest. We were begotten of God's Holy Spirit, and then became New Creatures. (2 Corinthians 5: 17.) To all such God guarantees that so long as they abide in Christ they shall be kept; and that all things shall work together for their good. If we remain faithful unto death, we shall have part in the First Resurrection, Christ's resurrection, as members of His glorious Body. (Revelation 20:6.) If we keep our Covenant of Sacrifice, if we keep our sacrifice upon the altar until it is fully consumed, we shall surely win the crown of life—glory, honor, and immortality. Keeping our covenant means to walk daily in the narrow way, to walk in the footsteps of Jesus.

The attainment of the character-likeness of Christ is a gradual work, an education. We cannot get it all at once. When first we are accepted into the family of God, we enter the School of Christ to receive daily lessons along this very line. By the Word of God and by the providences of life we are taught. Being imperfect, blemished by the fall, we cannot render perfect service to God, as did our Master; but we are to do our best to follow our great Pattern. Our loyalty is demonstrated in our wills, our hearts; and our wills are manifested in our works up to the point of our ability. Any shortcoming, any mistake or sin on our part could not be an act of the New Creature; for it cannot sin, being begotten from Above. The wrong-doing would be of the old nature, the fallen flesh.

Trials Essential to Development.

The new mind, working in us to will and to do of God's good pleasure, grows stronger day by day, hour by hour, and makes us more and more copies of His dear Son. But in order to have this new mind grow stronger, TRIALS are necessary. How could we know that we are developing, if we had no trials to demonstrate the matter? As we pray for patience, meekness, love, and various other fruits of the Holy Spirit, we are sure to have trials along these lines, to demonstrate our growth and to develop us further in each of these directions. Only by continued and earnest effort, only by struggling and prayer and the study of the Word of God, can we grow as New Creatures in Christ.

God answers our prayers for more of His Holy Spirit by giving us experiences whereby we may have a larger measure of the likeness of Christ. And we should rejoice in this: for by no other means can we be developed and proven. We need patience, meekness, gentleness, faith, long-suffering, brotherly kindness, love. It takes time to develop these qualities. We desire to be fitted for the Kingdom. But what kind of characters will be acceptable? The Church is to govern the affairs of the world for a thousand years; and how could anyone be qualified for such a work who had not learned the necessary lessons? Those, and those only, who have developed the necessary qualities will be fitted for so exalted a position. We must learn patience before we shall be able to teach patience to others. We must become loving, kind, and meek before we can teach these graces to the world.

Trials Summed Up Under Two Heads

We might sum up all of our trials under two general heads: faith and loyalty. Faith in our Lord Jesus is one of the great tests—not merely a belief that He was the Son of God, but a different kind of faith from that of intellectual assurance. We must develop faith in the precious promises of God and in His loving care. Our Lord Jesus assured us that if we are faithful in that which is least, we shall be faithful in much. In all our experiences with the brethren, in our business affairs, and in our dealings with the world we are to learn the required lessons.

We are ever to recognize God First; and to remember that we have given ourselves to Him. We are to recognize His hand in all the affairs of our life and to believe His promise that all things are working together for our good. Whoever has this faith will have a rest of heart and mind. When difficulties arise, his first thought will be, "What lesson has God for me in this experience?" The Lord's people are not to think, "This person has opposed my plans and has brought me this trouble;" but they should say to themselves, "My Father knows all about this difficulty, and has permitted it for my good. He will overrule it all."

If circumstances so shape themselves that we are obliged to change our residence, we are not to feel, "I do not wish to make this change. I prefer to continue just where I am." Rather we are to think, "If the Lord wishes me to make a change, it is all right; for I know that His way is best, and that this experience will work out for my good." Our Lord Jesus always recognized the Father's will and gladly bowed to it, whether He understood it or not. We are to be followers of Christ; we are to have His mind. There is no lesson that the Lord's people need more than this lesson of implicit trust in God.—1 Peter 1:12-14.

Let us never forget that nothing can come to us unless it is permitted by the Lord. Let us look beyond our environments and say, as our Master did, "The cup which My Father hath poured for me, shall I not drink it?" He did not say, "Why do the people treat me so? Why do the rulers scheme against Me?" On the contrary, He accepted all His painful experiences in perfect faith and trust, as the cup which the Father had poured for Him to drink.

The Golden Measuring-Rod.

Now what about your loyalty? The loyalty of the New Creation is loyalty to God. This means loyalty to the principles of righteousness, for which He stands. The first of these is justice, the very foundation of His Throne. The Master gave us a beautiful picture of justice when He gave us the Golden Rule; "As ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise." (Luke 6: 31.) This is indeed a Golden Rule. We could not properly represent God unless we practised the Law of our great King—the Ruler of the Universe. This is His first requirement—loyalty to the principle of justice.

In Revelation 11:1 St. John was given a reed, or rod, with which to measure the Temple of God. That Temple, which is the Church, is now being measured by the Golden Rule, here called a reed, a rod. If we are earnestly endeavoring to apply the Golden Rule in every affair of life—in the home, in the Church, in dealing with the world, then we are practising the principle of justice. Each of us is to do the measuring for himself. We are not to measure one another. Only in an extreme case is the Church to do the measuring. (Matthew 18:15-17.) We are to judge, or measure, our thoughts as well as our conduct by this rule; for "as a man thinketh in his heart, so is he."

Our battle is the good fight of faith against the weaknesses of our own flesh. We are to strive to bring ourselves into a condition where we can glorify God in every act, word, and thought. If we keep our heart and our thoughts right, we shall be able to control our words and doings to the glory of God. This is loyalty.

Special Blessings of Church To-day.

This predestinated class, the Church of God, has been in process of preparation for more than eighteen hundred years; and now we have come to the close of the Age. The Church of to-day has had wonderful favors from God. None others have been so favored. We have Bibles and Bible Helps such as were never possessed by the Church at any previous time. We have various translations of the Scriptures, good lights to read by, shorter hours of labor, so as to give us more time, etc. In this season of special blessings and advantages we have correspondingly more trials, however, as we should expect.

Moreover, we are favored with a fuller understanding of God's great Plan—with its times and seasons of fulfilment—than the Church has ever before had. This understanding is necessary for this time. We should be better able to use skilfully the Sword of the Spirit than were any of our brethren of an earlier day; and surely the Church of to-day, if ever, should have on securely "the whole armor of God." (Ephesians 6:12-18.) We need every piece, that we may be able to stand.

If you have not on that armor, put it on—the helmet of salvation, an appreciative understanding of the Divine Plan; the breastplate of righteousness, justification through faith in the precious blood of Christ. Have that confidence in God and His promises, that "all things are working together for good to them that are the called according to His purpose," thus making a large shield of faith. Then take the Sword of the Spirit, the Word of God. A great fight is on now, at the end of this Age. We need Heavenly wisdom to use aright the Sword of the Spirit. There is much contention against "the faith once delivered to the saints." We must not only stand ourselves, but help others to stand also. Thus shall we be conformed to the image of God's dear Son, and fitted to bless the whole groaning creation.

A REMARKABLE STATEMENT

Mrs. Sheldon Spent $1900 for Treatment Without Benefit. Finally Made Well by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Englewood, Ill. — "While going through the Change of Life I suffered with headaches, nervousness, flashes of heat, and I suffered so much I did not know what I was doing at times. I spent $1900 on doctors and not one did me any good. One day a lady called at my house and said she had been so sick as I was at one time, and Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound made her well, so I took it and now I am just as well as I ever was. I cannot understand why women don't see how much pain and suffering they would escape by taking your medicine. I cannot praise it enough for it saved my life and kept me from the Insane Hospital."—Mrs. E. SHELDON, 5057 S. Halsted St., Englewood, Ill.

Physicians undoubtedly did their best, battled with this case steadily and could do no more, but often the most scientific treatment is surpassed by the medicinal properties of the good old fashioned roots and herbs contained in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

TOMMY'S LETTERS NOT FULL OF ELOQUENCE

Humor, Modesty, Grumbling and Boasting Found by the Censor

A British regimental chaplain in the field writes the following description of the censoring of the soldiers' letters: Fifty the padre in the leaky postal wagon, knee-deep in picture postcards, love letters, brief acknowledgments of parcels, and stolid accounts of doings too epic for the written word! As postal censor we parsons often relieve keen, combatant subalterns who would otherwise be fretting and poring over the pencil scrawls which Tommy produces by the hundred thousand. Each letter is carefully read for inchoate revelations, unreasonable grousing, and matter "calculated to alarm or depress" folks at home if published. Our soldiers know what not to say. What is more, they know they are better looked after than soldiers ever were before.

Heavy Mails Disliked

The man to be chucked is the "lonely soldier" who is after creature comforts and—such is public kindness—succeeds in coaxing a perfectly monstrous mail from home—to the fury and disgust of the postal section of our Royal Engineers. So we clip the lonely soldier. He may be a good sort, and share the booty, but any extra stress thrown on our Field Post Office is very properly resented at Headquarters. Then there is the too fluent amorist—a real nuisance to the censor, loaded (and bewildered) with five "darlings" and "ducks" to get safely back into the right envelopes; together with acres of heroics, screaming shells and V.C. deeds (entirely unrewarded), which I know took place miles from the firing line!

Very sad are unfinished letters of the dead. "Well, Sue, we are parading in a minute. Good-bye, and the dearest kiss. To be continued to-morrow." Alas, there was no to-morrow! "The padre will censor this," I read again. "'Look up to Heaven,' says he last Sunday."—I said no such thing. "We did—and bang! came bombs from an Aviatik! 'Consider the fields,' says he—and up went a mine under our feet! 'There is victory in the air,' says he—but all we could see of it was poison gas from a new shell!" In the main, Tommy's letter is stolid enough, or gay. Hal and Jim have little gift for self-expression, whereas French soldiers translate their deep emotions into real prose. I've read their letters, so I know. Yet our men's poverty in this way reveals their real strength. You can't impress or depress a lad who tells his mother: "We need more grofind to bury these tinhats!"

Here is Modesty

In the winter to leave a trench was called "going ashore"; and the waddle of frostbite drew "Quack-quack" from the victim himself. "Dear Mother," wrote the rustic private, "Yesterday a shell burst and tore my trousers. I shall dror compeashun." I knew that "shell." You could hide a bus in the crater of it! One man was never seen again, even in bits. He whose breeches were "tor" was blown up a tree where he hung dazed and mute, with his rifle swaying on a still higher branch. For two days the lad could neither hear nor speak.

POKER PLAYER WAS SLOW.

This case was heard in a Chicago court:

"I held four aces, judge."

"A consummation devoutly to be wished," remarked Judge Williams.

"But the guy next me flang five kings."

"Then what?" asked the court indignantly.

"He won of course. Then I held another four aces. But he was a lucky guy. He had five kings."

"What did you hit him with?"

"I didn't hit him. I had a third set of four aces. But that fellow spread five kings again."

"And then you belted him," said the court, as one who anticipates the story.

"No. Then I went home and stole $94 from my roommate, Anton Pedous, to pay him with."

On the promise of John Brat to make restitution the court permitted him to go free, as a living example of the most long suffering man.

HAIG: KITCHENER'S MAN

Dashing But Persistent Commander is Famed as Lucky

"Lucky Haig" they call the Commander-in-Chief of the army in France and Flanders—the largest ever led by a British general. Still, it is not by luck alone that General Sir Douglas Haig has "won through," but by sheer merit and hard "slogging." "The energy and vigor with which Sir Douglas Haig handled his command show him to be a leader of great ability and power"—thus wrote the former Commander-in-Chief in one of his despatches. Since the beginning of hostilities Sir Douglas has proved himself the strong man of the war, as witness his stern fights at the Aisne, his defensive in the huge struggle for Ypres, his important victory at Neuve Chapelle.

In war, as in love, Lo has proved himself a man of prompt action. He had wedded the beautiful daughter of the third Lord Vivian a fortnight after first setting eyes upon her, and had the almost unique distinction of being married from Buckingham Palace; he rose from captain to major-general in the astonishingly short space of eight years.

Sir Douglas is a Scotsman—a great leader from a race that breeds strong leaders. Born in June, 1861, Sir Douglas entered the 7th Hussars at the age of twenty-four. If the medical examiners of that day had had their way Haig would not be leading Britain's soldiers to-day, for he was "turned down" for color blindness! Refusing to submit to rejection, young Haig consulted many oculists, urged and argued with the military authorities, and at last appealed personally to the Duke of Cambridge, who gave a special order for his admittance to the Staff College. "Haig's way," it would seem, won through even then!

Soon the young officer, by his outstanding merit, became one of that chosen band known as "Kitchener's men," and served with "K. of K." at Atbara, Khartoum, and in South Africa. "Haig never misses a chance, does he?" a Staff officer said one day to Lord Kitchener. "No," was the dry response, "not half a chance!" High praise from "K. of K."

KHAKI THRONGS EGYPT

Globe-trotters Displaced by British Convalescent Homes

Tourists who know their Egypt would be surprised to see the change in those resorts they have been wont to frequent on the Nile or in Upper Egypt, where the tourist is now the little in evidence. At Luxor the transformation is even more complete than elsewhere. The leading hotels, formerly the resort of large crowds of fashionable travellers, have now been converted into vast convalescent hospitals. Here, khaki holds the fort in all its varieties. Soldiers are coming and going all the time, there being accommodation for over 2,000 officers and men who quickly recover in the splendid air which has so long been the happy hunting ground of invalids. The result of all this is that the civilian visitors very few in number, are huddled into corners wherever room can be found for them and are obliged to walk out to Karnak to see the ancient temples and to climb the Pyramids if they have the courage. A "movie" show is all there is to while away the monotony of the evenings.

England Spending Mush

A visitor to London in war-time writes: Everywhere in England and perhaps most in the great manufacturing centres you are struck by the evidence of the abounding prosperity of all classes. Everybody is making money and the prosperity has permeated even to classes where one would scarcely expect to find it. That this abounding prosperity is merely temporary and that very hard times are to come when the war is over is possible, but it is very difficult, not to say impossible, to convince those who are enjoying it that it is at once fictitious and evanescent, and that the day of reckoning cannot be indefinitely postponed. Warnings, however, are not lacking either in the daily press or in the magazines, but they make slow impression on the mass of workers who are now in receipt of incomes such as they had never dared to dream of.

"Maria," said Mr. Rawlins, laying aside his hat and overcoat and rubbing his hands gleefully together, "you know that for years we have been wanting to buy a building lot in Kennedy's subdivision, but couldn't afford to do it on account of the high prices they ask for land out there. Well, I've just learned that Quinton, who owns one of the best lots in that entire neighborhood, will sell it for half what it cost him if he can get the cash. He needs the money and can't get it any other way. I have a great mind to buy it tomorrow morning. It comes easily within our means."

"I don't think you ought to do it, Joshua," said Mrs. Rawlins.

"You don't think I ought to buy it? Why not?"

"It would be taking advantage of his necessities."

"But, Maria"—

"Besides, I have just learned of a splendid opportunity to buy some furniture that we need. Important Internal Changes Are Predicted in Britain At Close of European War

Correspondent Says Land Reform is Certain, While England Will Inevitably Cease to be a Free Trade Country

BY CHARLES P. STEWART
(United Press Staff Correspondent).

LONDON, March 18 (By Mail).—Europe will have to do one of two things after the war:

1. Accept a far lower standard of living than heretofore, or,
2. Cancel all war debts and start afresh with a clean slate.

It is impossible to calculate, for instance, what England's war debt alone will be, because nobody knows how much longer the war will last. Certainly, however, the figure will be be so enormous as to stagger imagination.

Even if the struggle should end before 1917, the English would have to pay annually, in interest, more than the total of their government's ante-bellum expenses.

Taxation was high before the war. How is the country going to stand a burden more than twice as heavy?

For one thing, economists say, production will have to be greatly increased.

This, they expect, will be accomplished by the use of improved machinery, by a higher degree of efficiency than in the past, and by the employment of great numbers of women who were not industrial factors before the war broke out.

These economists themselves, however, do not pretend the difference will be made up thereby. Taxes must be much heavier to cover the deficit.

The only conclusion is that industrial England will be compelled to work more than twice as hard as before the war, for less pay.

Possibly because they are themselves heavy investors in the Allies' war loans, the English propertied classes, even the small fry, generally strongly oppose a wiping out of the war indebtedness and insist that whatever new and harder conditions may come, should be accepted cheerfully.

But will they? Apparently there is considerable room for doubt.

The creditor element, though influential, is in a hopeless minority, of course.

There are plenty of hints that the majority will not respond enthusiastically to the suggestion that the masses accept, after the war, even shorter commons than they had to make the best of before the war's outbreak.

It is fair to say that some enlightened Liberals, including a number of men who have subscribed liberally to the war loans, are disposed at least to consider the idea of cancelling these obligations.

They do not use the word "repudiation." They say the country's foreign indebtedness which, however, is small compared with what Englishmen have loaned to their own government, must be paid. But it may prove expedient, they admit, to regard loans made to the national war chest by the English themselves as contributions from those best able to afford them.

Some take the position that England's loans to her Allies should similarly be wiped out.

Adoption of such a scheme obviously would mean the unique situation of a war burden falling on the rich instead of the poor.

At the same time that it would mean a heavy loss for the "classes" it would also mean a gain for the "masses," a levelling-up process historically unprecedented.

QUESTION OF TAXES.

Higher taxes!

Before the war the average English skilled workman made from $8 to $11 weekly. The corresponding workman in Germany made from $6 to $7.

For a man with a family it might seem as if these figures were pretty near bed rock, that he couldn't reduce his standard of living without starving to death.

As a matter of fact, the workers in Spain, Portugal, Russia and Turkey are not so well off as the English and Germans; and a coolie's wages in China amount to about 70 cents, American money, for a 7-day week.

So, after all, there is a good deal of room for European labour to be worse off after, than it was before the war.

The creditor classes' suggestion of "a lower standard of living" isn't by any means an impossibility, if the producing classes will submit to it.

Will they? Nobody knows yet.

LAND REFORM.

In England, land reform appears to be a certainty.

It is not contended that the British Isles would support their population, agriculturally, except perhaps with the closest pinching. It is maintained, however, that a just distribution of land would check the tendency toward such an intense concentration in the cities, with its consequent disorganization of the labour market and frightful conditions of unemployment which characterises ante-bellum days.

It is an old complaint that, with millions of the English on the verge of starvation, huge areas of land have been held as game preservations and parks, in as primitive a state of uncultivation as at the time of the Norman conquest.

Still other vast tracts have been farmed only by tenants who, while doing all the work, were allowed only the most meagre livelihoods, that the landlords might get the lion's share of the country's products by virtue of nothing but their monopoly.

In the cities conditions have been and still are the same as in the country, with only such variations as necessarily go with urban life.

A GENERAL CHANGE.

All this, it is generally agreed, will have to be changed with the soldiers' return home at the war's end. It is recognized that hundreds of thousands of men who have had a taste of a broader existence than the old one, will not tolerate a return to the former order of things.

The suggestion most frequently heard is that the landlords will be forced to dispose of their great holdings at reasonable prices, on some such basis as the one already prevailing in Ireland. Others favour a more or less close approximation to the single tax.

Taking into account the relief this will affect in labour congestion in the industrial centres, and the fact that there undoubtedly will be a heavy emigration to the colonies, it seems fair to predict an immense betterment in the masse's lot in Post-bellum England.

DEATH OF FREE TRADE.

England, probably will cease to be a free trade country after the war.

Reciprocity will prevail between the mother country and her colonies. It may include all the present allies.

The tariff's purpose will be, partly, revenue. More particularly it will be for protection against Germany. The English policy is not, in general, for protection against neutrals, but it is hard to see how it can be avoided in this case, as Germans might otherwise establish their factories in neutral countries, get their raw material from home and set the protection programme at nought.

Already plans are under discussion for preventing the employing class from getting the benefit, to the workers' disadvantage, of the higher prices it is expected this tariff will mean.

One suggestion is for a minimum wage. This is not very generally favoured, however. Its opponents say it is too inelastic a method to work satisfactorily. It is unlikely it will be adopted.

Another proposition looks towards a profit sharing system, so scientifically worked but that price increases will automatically mean correspondingly larger incomes for workingmen.

A still more radical scheme contemplates government control, or even government ownership, of all manufacturing industries.

Inasmuch as the tariff will have to be imposed with labour's consent and aid, there is no question that labour's interests will have to be duly considered. Indications are that the results form may be more or less socialistic.

INTERNAL CHANGES.

It is a pretty safe prediction that the war is going to be followed by important internal changes in most, if not all; the belligerent countries.

Perhaps these changes will be for the worse. Obviously there is far less liberty in belligerent and even in neural Europe to-day than there was before the war. If this condition should become chronic, of course the war's result can be set down as entirely bad.

If plutocracy succeeds in getting a still tighter strangehold on the people than it had before, things will be all the worse.

The people seem to realize this, however, and are pretty watchful.

So it looks as if the odds favour changes in the line of improvement, a big improvement and soon, at least in spots.

PEACEFUL REVOLUTIONS.

Are revolutions likely? Peaceful economic revolutions? — Yes, very likely indeed.

But an overturning of government? Of some, maybe; not all.

There is hardly a suggestion of such a thing in England. The situation is said to be the same in France.

British officials believe that a complete governmental overturning is a distinct possibility in the case of the central powers, perhaps so soon as to shorten the war. The Italian government's position was notoriously precarious long before the war began. There is no reason for believing it is less so to-day.

Curiously enough, the Russian regime, supposedly the most popular with the people of any in Europe, appears to have been enormously strengthened by the world struggle. All accounts indicate its post-bellum methods, largely with the ruling class approval, will be greatly liberalized.

Love In the Kitchen.

Among the domestic servants of a Germantown woman is a very pretty Irish girl, not long in this country. Now, Bertha had not been at work more than a couple of months before she became engaged to a plumber's apprentice. She confided to her mistress, however, that she had no intention of marrying at an early date but wished instead to save her money and incidentally afford the apprentice time to become a regularly registered plumber.

The mistress good naturedly assented to the girl's request that the lad be allowed to visit her in the kitchen. It was observed that on such occasions only the voice of Bertha could be heard coming from the kitchen.

"Your sweetheart doesn't seem to be much of a talker," said the lady of the house to Bertha.

"No, mum," said Bertha: "leastways not yit, mum. But he'll do better as time goes on. He's too bashful yit, mum, to do anything more than eat."—Philadelphia Press.

A Handy Man.

"Why so sad?" queried the young man, looking at her fondly.

"Oh, nothing special, only I have troubles of my own," said the frail young thing, sighing.

"I insist in taking a hand in them," he said, nobly, a dainty palm that was wasting its time in her lap.—Boston Globe.

NAUTICAL RHYMES.

The rollicking spirit of the Navy in the old days is reflected in the ancient nautical epigrams and verses, a collection of which is published in the 1,000th number of The Syren, and from which we have made the following extracts.

A sailor who had the misfortune to be thrown upon the neck of his horse while riding one day provoked this tragi-comic verse:

Spectator, cease your cruel glee,
From taunting jests refrain;
Sure, 'tis no wondrous thing to see
A sailor on the mane!

The following is equally entertaining:

"A leak, a leak," the sailors cry,
The vessel heaves and rolls,
And ev'ry heart with dread beats high,
All seem despairing souls.

Except one fellow, short and fat,
A Welshman, I suppose,
Who cried, "A leak! I'm glad of that,
Oh, bring it to my nose.

"No vegetables have we had
For many a tedious week,
Oh! look you now, her heart is glad;
There's nothing like a leak!"

The courageous spirit of the ancient British mariner is demonstrated in this short and witty epigram entitled, "A Carpenter Before a Surgeon:

A cannon ball, one fighting day
(Sirs, doubt it not, I beg),
Came in a merry captains' way
And took away his leg.

Cries one, "A surgeon bring with speed,
The fracture let him view."
"No," said our merry friend, "indeed,
The carpenter will do."

Spoofing an Editor.

There are tricks in every trade, and a story told by Mr. Malcolm Stark, in "The Pulse of the World—Fleet Street Memories" (Skeffington) illustrates the subterfuges which have been employed by journalists of Fleet Street.

Such was the interest taken in the execution at Newgate of Wainwright, the murderer of Harriet Lane in Whitechapel in 1874, that a provincial newspaper determined to issue a special edition giving an account of the last scene—a remarkable piece of enterprise in those days.

"The representative of this journal," says Mr. Stark, "arrived in London on the eve of the execution, but to his dismay found a ticket of admission to the prison had not been obtained, and it was too late to make an application to the Lord Mayor. An ingenious friend said he thought he could solve the difficulty.

"The latter forthwith proceeded to a haunt of the 'Mohs.' He soon discovered that one of the fraternity was in possession of a ticket. It was sold for two guineas, coupled with the condition that a descriptive report would be furnished to the 'liner,' who had engaged to do it for a country paper. The ingenious friend returned in great glee to his companion.

"The special edition was a veritable triumph; and a young man, who was not in Newgate at all, prepared an elaborate descriptive report for the other paper! Three days after the 'liner' told me in a fit of laughter that he had received a most cordial letter declaring that his account was the best that had appeared in any journal."

Not a Bite of Breakfast Until You Drink Water

Says a glass of hot water and phosphate prevents illness and keeps us fit.

Just as coal, when it burns, leaves behind a certain amount of incombustible material in the form of ash es, so the food and drink taken day after day leaves in the alimentary canal a certain amount of indigestible material, which if not completely eliminated from the system each day, becomes food for the millions of bacteria which infest the bowels. From this mass of left-over waste, toxins and poisonous poisons are formed and sucked into the blood.

Men and women who can't get feeling right must begin to take inside baths. Before eating breakfast each morning drink a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it to wash out of the thirty feet of bowels the previous day's accumulation of poisons and toxins and to keep the entire alimentary canal clean, pure and fresh.

Those who are subject to sick headache, colds, biliousness, constipation, others who wake up with bad taste, foul breath, backache, rheumatic stiffness, or have a sour, gassy stomach after meals, are urged to get a quarter pound of limestone phosphate from the drug store, and begin practicing internal sanitation. This will cost very little, but is sufficient to make anyone an enthusiast on the subject.

Remember inside bathing is more important than outside bathing, because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood, causing poor health, while the bowel pores do. Just as soap and hot water cleanses, sweetens and freshens the skin, so hot water and limestone phosphate act on the stomach, liver kidneys and bowels.

Influence of College Men.

As educated men filter through the community reforms are obtained that twenty years ago seemed millennial. The separation of local from state sources of revenue, the separation of local from national elections, the treatment of a franchise as valuable property, the discriminating between ordinary industry and natural monopoly, the practice of scientific charity and penology, the concentration of responsibility in government—these and a score of other good things which once seemed as far above popular comprehension as four dimensional space have come to pass, thanks chiefly to the radiations from the classrooms.—Century Magazine.

The Twelve Jurymen.

A prisoner is tried by twelve of his fellow countrymen. This custom is a thousand years old, and we get it from the vikings. The vikings divided their country up into cantons, which were subdivided into twelve portions, each under a chieftain. When a malefactor was brought to justice it was usual for each chieftain to select a man from the district over which he ruled and compel him to try the prisoner, the verdict of these twelve men being declared by the judge to be final.

Poison in Young Rattlesnakes.

Observations on live rattlesnakes show that the poison glands become functionally active as soon as the snakes begin to shift for themselves, which must be very soon after birth. Experiments on the young ones six days after birth proved the presence of venom in small quantities. Experiments made three months after birth showed that considerable venom is secreted, as a pigeon inoculated at this time died in two hours with the usual symptoms of poisoning.

Nerves Were So Upset Could Not Endure Noise

Neuralgic Headaches and Extreme Nervousness Caused Keenest Suffering—Lasting Cure by Use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food

When the nervous system gets 'run down' everything seems to tend to make it worse. You worry over your condition, are unable to get the required rest and sleep, noises excite and irritate you and the future is most discouraging.

The nervous system does not get the proper nourishment from the food you eat, so you must have something also to lift you out of the run-down condition. You may find that your experience coincides with the writer of this letter and be encouraged to put Dr Chase's Nerve Food to the test.

You will make no mistake in employing this food cure, for, acting as it does hand in hand with Nature, it is bound to do you good.

Mrs. Jas. Jensen, Gwynne, Alta., writes: "About ten years ago I was troubled with severe attacks of neuralgia and nervousness, and was for several months so bad that I could not get a night's rest. I used several medicines recommended by the druggist. My doctor also prescribed but nothing he gave me brought any relief. Instead I got worse and worse until I could scarcely do anything or bear the least bit of noise. My nerves were all upset.

"My husband read about Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and got me some. Although I had no faith in it, I began its use, and after a few doses began to sleep well and the neuralgia left me entirely. I used six more boxes and have never had any trouble from neuralgia or the nerves since.

"This is to certify that I know Mrs. Jensen and believe this statement to be true and correct. Fred Freeman, J.P."

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

LADY'S NEGLIGEE.

By Anabel Worthington.

7052

A negligee is a garment that we want only a little while at a time, but when we want it there is none other that can quite take its place for comfort and that will look the part of the negligee. It is of necessity made of material soft in texture, and the more attractive the color scheme the more fetching this comfort giving garb. As a rule a woman prefers to make this very personal part of her wardrobe and, there being no skill required to cut from a pattern, the occupation is a delightful one. In the illustration:—

No. 7,052.—A lady's negligee having a four gored skirt is shown. It is built upon a slightly raised waist line; the shoulder fronts of the waist part are gathered with the short length above the kimono style of garment is carried out. The broad collar, which leaves the throat and neck bare, is of solid collar material and scalloping is used as a finishing touch. The closing is at the front. Long sleeves with a band cuff may be substituted for the short if preferred. Banding of ribbon is used to conceal the joining of the waist and skirt and to finish the front edges of skirt gores.

Pattern comes in sizes 36, 40 and 44 bust measure. For size 36 the material 36 inches wide, 4½ yards will be enough, with ⅜ yard for collar and 5½ yards banding or ribbon.

You may obtain this pattern by sending 10 cents to the office of this publication.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

"FAGGED-OUT" WOMEN

Will Find a Helpful Suggestion in This Letter.

Overworked, run down "fagged out" women who feel as though they could hardly drag about, should profit by Mrs. Carter's experience. She says: "I am the mother of six children, and I got so weak and run-down that I couldn't eat anything and it seemed almost impossible for me to get around and do my work. I tried different doctors' remedies without benefit. I saw Vinol advertised and decided to try it and received so much benefit from the first bottle that I continued to take it, and it has built up my strength and made me strong and well. I consider Vinol the best medicine I have ever taken, and advise all weak, run-down women to try it." Mrs. Bessie Carter State Road, N.C.

If all the tired, overworked, run-down women in Peterborough could only realize how our delicious cod liver and iron tonic, Vinol, supplies the vital elements necessary to build up blood and strength, we wouldn't be able to supply the demand.

SAGE TEA DANDY TO DARKEN HAIR

It's Grandmother's Recipe to Bring Back Color and Lustre to Hair

You can turn gray, faded hair beautifully dark and lustrous almost over night if you'll get a 50-cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound" at any drug store. Millions of bottles of this old famous Sage Tea Recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, are sold annually, says a well-known druggist here, because it darkens the hair so naturally and evenly that no one can tell it has been applied.

Those whose hair is turning gray or becoming faded have a surprise awaiting them, because after one or two applications the gray hair vanishes and your locks become luxuriantly dark and beautiful.

This is the age of youth. Gray-haired, unattractive folks aren't wanted around, so get busy with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound to-night and you'll be delighted with your dark, handsome hair and your youthful appearance within a few days.

This preparation is a toilet requisite and is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

French Make a Successful Counter Attac

GERMAN OFFENSIVE WAS HALTEI

VIOLENT FRENCH COUNTER ATTACK BRINGS FOE'S ASSAULT TO A HALT

German Offensive Delivered by a Force of 20,000 Completely Checked When the French Delivered Their Blow ---Germans Were Attempting to Surround Fort Vaux Which Has Resisted Many Attacks.

OTHER GERMAN ATTACKS ARE STOPPED

PARIS, April 3.—By successful counter-attacks the French troops gained ground last night in the Caillette woods southeast of Fort Douaumont, the War Office announced this afternoon. Fighting continued all night in the Verdun region east of the Meuse, between Douaumont and Vaux. West of the river a bombardment was carried on near Haumont without effect. The statement says that in yesterday's fighting the Germans lengthened their front of attack to about two miles. The counter attacks were of great violence and brought to a halt the German offensive delivered in this region by a force estimated at twenty thousand men. The Germans apparently were attempting to drive southward planning to surround Fort Vaux, which has resisted successive massed attacks by the Germans since the early days of the Verdun fighting.

Further south near Vaux village, the Germans' charge was met by a sheet of fire that brake th grey ranks in confusion. The French shattered the German front with artillery and machine gun fire from behind redoubts on the highway leading westward from Vaux.

Evidence That The Germans Are Guilty

Examiner Special:

WASHINGTON, April 3.—President Wilson is rapidly accumulating evidence tending to blame Germany for the recent attacks on unarmed vessels in the English Channel. New affidavits have reached this country, it was learned. The additional evidence materially increasse the strength of opinion prevailing in Administration circles that a German submarine was responsible for the attack on the Sussex, and other vessels jeopardizing American lives. The situation to-day was once again described as "very serious," the cabinet will meet to-morrow to take up additional proofs received by the State Department.

Two More Steamers Sunk By Subs.

Special to The Examiner.

LONDON, April 3.—The Holt liner Achiles, seven thousand tons, was sunk by a submarine Friday without warning.. Four of her crew are missing and believed to have perished. Her commander and sixty-two others have been landed.

The unarmed 653-ton Glasgow steamer Perth has been sunk with the loss of six lives. She carried no armament.

"Baby-Killers' Succeed in Ten More Murders

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, April 3.—Ten persons were killed and eleven injured in last night's Zeppelin raid on the Scottish coast, the War Office announced this afternoon.

Though a Zeppelin threw dwn 101 bombs on the eastern counties of England, there were no casualties.

Six airships took part in the raid. Fifty-three bombs were dropped in Scotland. Several hotels and dwellings were damaged, but no military damage was done.

Three of the ten persons killed were children. Of the eleven injured two were women and four children. The total casualties in the Friday, Saturday and Sunday night raids on England and Scotland, according to official reports, was sixty-nine killed and 177 injured.

German Spy Tried To Make His Escape

Special to The Examiner:

NEW YORK, April 3.—Ignatius T. T. Lincoln, former British M.P., and self-confessed German spy, now held in Brooklyn for forgery, and awaiting extradition to England, carefully arranged a second attempt to escape Saturday night, but one of his confederates "squealed," and Lincoln got only as far as the prison door, where he was confronted with the revolvers of forty detectives. He is now in solitary confinement.

The Clyde Workers' Strike Now Over

Special to The Examiner:

GLASGOW, April 3.—The strike of the Clyde munition factory workers, which threatened to hinder seriously the manufacture of big guns, was practically ended to-day. The committee from the workers voted to recommend to the men that they return to work at once.

Zeppelin Raid On French Seacoast Town

Special to The Examiner:

PARIS, April 3.—A Zeppelin raided the French seacoast town of Dunkirk last night dropping eight bombs, it was officially announced to-day. Two persons were killed and four injured.

BERLIN, April 3.—Zeppelins again raided the English coast Saturday night bombarding large iron works and industrial establishments at Middlebrough and Sunderland with great success, the Admiralty announced to-day.

LONDON, April 3.—British official statements declare Zeppelins were never near these places. This shows how weak are German claims that they bombed munition factories, not women and children.

LONDON, April 3.—The Admiralty this afternoon issued denial of German wireless report that a British warship of the Donegal class has been sunk.

LONDON, April 3.—The British Foreign Office declared this afternoon that there is no foundation for the rumour that Holland's warlike preparations are due to any threat by the Allies to violate Dutch neutrality.

LITTLE GIRL TELLS THE STORY OF HER ILL-TREATMENT

Evelyn Glover Testifies in Charge of Neglect and Abandonment Brought By Children's Aid Society Against Mrs. and Miss Tully of Smith

HER TESTIMONY

When the case of the Children's Aid Society against Mrs. W. J. Tully and Miss Edith Tully of Smith, was resumed before County Magistrate Langley, this morning, the first witness called was Evelyn Glover, the little girl with whose neglect and abandonment the accused were charged, was the first witness called. Constable Archie Moore carried the little girl into the court room and fixed her comfortably in a chair before the Magistrate.

After questioning the little girl as to the nature of an oath, Magistrate Langley administered the same to the witness.

In answer to the examination by Crown Attorney Hatton, the little girl said she was eleven years old on the fourth of next May. She remembered going out to the Tullys with Miss Tully. She drove out. She was there seven weeks. She didn't go to school until the last two weeks she was there. Miss Tully drove her to school three mornings. She walked the other days. Mrs. Tully used to call her in the mornings. She didn't work before breakfast. She had to aqi os poy aiom ypiqa aiduinj ino oows.

Here Mr. Gordon objected to the evidence, it being anterior to the day of the charge. The same was noted by the Magistrate.

Had to Clean the Barn.

Continuing, witness said that after cutting turnips she had to clean the barn. She used a fork and a wheelbarrow. She also had to clean the stable where three horses were kept Mrs. Tully fed the horses and watered them. Witness said she slept upstairs. Her bed was never made. A lantern was left on the stairs for her when she retired. She said her prayers every night, but no one heard her them.

Mrs. Tully gave her a night-gown and an apron. She was also given a dress and a pair of boots. They were not new. The boots were too big. When she went to school she wore moccasins and one pair of stockings. The weather was cold. Her feet were sore before she started to school. She told Mrs. Tully, who put a poultice on them once. Miss Tully never did anything for them. Her clothes were never changed while in the country. She never had a bath out there.

Feet Too Sore to Walk.

The little girl stated that she came home because she had asked to be allowed to do so, three or four times

A Grand Programme For To-morrow's Smoker

No sporting man in Peterborough should miss the Smoker under the auspices of the Sportsman's Patriotic Association in the Armouries to-morrow night. Word was received last night that both Lt.-Col. Greer and Capt. Tom Flanagan of the Sportsmen's Battalion, along with ten boxers and singers from the Sportsmen's will be here. With local features added, and music by the 93rd Band, the programme will be the biggest thing of its kind ever held in Peterborough. It s not often that Peterborough people get the opportunity to see champion boxers in action, especially at a 25c price, and there is no doubt that there will be a record crowd present. Lt.-Col. Greer and Capt. Flanagan were the moving sprits in the Toronto Sportsmen's Patriotic Association, and they will give some interesting information, a branch of which was recently formed in Peterborough. It will be a big night's amusement and should appeal to every man in Peterborough.

MANY BOUTS WILL PROVIDE BIG NIGHT'S SPORT FOR CITIZENS

In Addition to Exhibitions by Visiting Soldiers, 93rd Men Will Put On Number of Boxing and Wrestling Bouts ---Recruiting Starts Off Well This Week--To-day's Orders and General Military News.

In addition to the ten boxers and singers from Toronto who will take part in the smokers under the auspices of the Sportsmen's Patriotic Association in the armouries to-morrow night, there will be a number of other interesting features. Pte. Herbert Guest and Pte. M. S. Moodie of the 93rd Battalion, 256 pounders, will meet in a wrestling bout, best two out of three falls. Other bouts provided by men from the 93rd Battalion will be as follow:

135 Pounds—
Sergt. Jay vs. Pte. Geo. Lilly.

125 Pounds—
Pte. Roots vs. Pte. Running.

145 Pounds—
Pte. King vs. Pte. Emery.
Pte. Markwick of the 93rd also has a challenge to meet any lightweight

In addition to musical numbers by Sergt. Newman and Pte. Baker of Toronto, the 93rd Band will contribute to the programme several cornet solos being included in their work.

It promises to be one of the most popular events of the season. The citizens generally are asked to make the first effort of the Sportsmen's Patriotic Association a striking success. The admission is only 25c. to all parts of the armouries.

TO-DAY'S ORDERS.

Following are the Battalion orders by Lieut.-Col T. J. Johnston, Officer Commanding 93rd Overseas Battalion, C.E.F. Number 79. Headquarters Peterborough, April 3rd, 1916.

J. E. R. MUNRO, Captain. Adjutant 93rd Overseas Battalion, C.E.F.

There will be a red hot game of football in front of the armouries at 5.30 o'clock to-night, when No. 8 platoon and the Battalion cooks will clash. The teams will line up as follows:

No. 8		Cooks
	Goal
Hartman		Griffin
	Backs
Mather		Cridland
Hawkins		Robinson
	Halves
Smithet		Scott
Rummary		Norman
W. Jones		Green
	Forwards
Irwin		Rowberry
Rootes		Hardie (Capt.)
E. Johnston or Cullen		McKinlay
Arkill		Hardman
G. Harris		Jackson

The good feeling existing between officers, noncommissioned officers and men of the 93rd Battalion is constantly being illustrated. For instance this morning No. 5 platoon, B Company, presented Lieut. F. S. Dupuy their platoon commander, with a very handsome cigarette case, a match safe and a fountain pen. At the same time Platoon Sergt. W. Jones was presented with a splendid floating compass, also b ythe men of No. 5 platoon.

Sergt. F. Barnes of the 93rd Band, who was ill last week, had recovered sufficiently to allow him to take part in Saturday's concert at Victoria Hall.

For some time there has been a misunderstanding among some of the men of the 93rd Battalion in connection with the wearing of riding breeches. The latter are not part of the authorized infantrymen's garb, but many of the men fancy they look more dressy and accordingly have purchased the "breeks." Saturday the battalion orders contained an announcement to the effect that riding breeches were not to be worn by any unmounted N.C.O. or man. Unfortunately the Examiner rather added to the confusion by the compositor omitting the all important word "not" from the order. The correct order is republished to-day as follows:

Dress—
Riding breeches must not be worn by unmounted N.C.O.'s and men of the 93rd Battalion, C.E.F., either on or off parade. Lanyards will be worn only by the N.C.O.'s and band. The band may wear white lanyards for dress order, but will wear brown for marching out order.

A Peterborough of the 8th, C.M.R. writes of an interesting coincidence. It seems that in the winter of last year he saw a film comedy at one of the local moving picture shows. When the 8th moved to Ottawa he saw the same picture there. Later they moved on to Kingston and going into a picture house one day he was confronted with the same film. When the regiment was training in England he was greatly surprised to find the same old picture displayed in a cinema he visited. The worst was yet to come. Back in the reserve centres in France and Belgium there are moving pictures for the benefit of the men and after coming out of the trenches not long ago the Peterborough man stopped in for the pictures, much to his surprise there flashed on the screen the same picture he had already seen in Peterborough, Ottawa, Kingston and then in old England.

THE ZEPPELIN RAIDS AROUSE INDIGNATIO

Anger of British People There ly Stirred by the Last Three Attacks — Demand Extr Punishment for Captured "K Killers."

CASUALTIES HEAVY

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, April 2.—A great w of indignation swept Britain following the third Zeppelin raid heavy loss of life among women children in 72 hours.

Demands of extreme punishment the crew of the Zeppelin L-15 cap ed off the mouth of the Thames Saturday, were heard on every The newspapers exercised the gre restraint in discussing the possible of the prisoners. In the clubs, the tals, and on the street they were nounced as "baby killers" and it urged that Government should an example of them. Reports that Z palin officers are being served f British officers' mess table, with vant assigned to each, partic aroused the public's anger. It certain that the Government will interrogated on this point in Par ment.

Details of the Sunday night the first in which the coast of land has been visited, were still ing early to-day, but the war o expected to make an announcement casualties this afternoon. It is be ed certain that the casualties in th raids will total nearly 300 in dead wounded.

The Zeppelin attacks were genera coupled in the popular mind with renewal of submarinings both in Br ish waters and in the Mediterra four more vessels have been sunk the last 24 hours with loss of near 20 lives.

Authoritative denial was made day of truth of official German sta ment regarding Friday night's raid which the L-15 was shot down. G man reports of batteries silenced factories attacked are absurd. Near every victim was innocent civilia mostly women and children.

A PLUCKY FEAT BY PETERBOROUGH BOY UNDER HEAVY FIRE

Gunner Robert Brotherstone Rushes Out Three Hundred Yards in Face of Gale of Shells and Mends Wire in Front of His Battery

THE INCIDENT DESCRIBED

Peterborough boys at the front have a habit of conducting themselves gallantly, but usually modesty prevents them from mentioning that fact in their letters and as a result outside sources have to be depended upon. Here is an illustration. Gunner A. K. McIntosh of Coldsprings, writing to a friend in Cobourg, has an appreciative reference to Gunner Robt. Brotherstone, an East City boy who left Canada with the Cobourg Heavy Artillery. Gunner McIntosh writes:

But before I close I must not forget to mention a young lad we have with us from Peterborough, "The Electric City." One night last week our battery was under a heavy shell fire and a number of wires were cut. Without any hesitation or thought of danger to himself, Bob Brotherstone rushed out three hundred yards in front of our guns and mended the wires. It doesn't seem very much, but it requires a good deal of "pluck" to pull off a stunt of that sort.

ROYAL THEATRE

Our thousands of patrons, who are our judges, admit that the Royal Theatre as a result of many years experience, not only selects the best pictures from the best makers of three continents, but is more largely filled than any theatre of its seating capacity in Canada. There is no delay. No waiting. Everything up-to-date. Still our prices remain the same. See the World's Star Actor to-night including Mary Pickford, Helen Holmes, Bud and others.

Almost a King, comedy, 1 reel. Some Night, farce comedy, 1 reel. Lucky Larry's Love, comedy, 1 reel. Western Story, 1 reel; 10—first-run reels—10.

Don't miss this grand show at the Royal to-night. War prices. Matinee 5c for all. Evening 10c and 5c.

94 EASTBOUND G.T.R. TRAINS IN 12 HOURS

During twelve hours of yesterday the Grand Trunk Railway moved from Mimico 1920 cars of eastbound freight. The train register at Scarboro Jct., where all trains book, show that no less than 94 trains passed that point eastbound, during these twelve hours.

A CALL TO CANADIAN MANHOOD.

If there were one call louder than another, it is the call for more men to more quickly and effectually put an end to German power, to practice the barbarous policy of frightfulness by air raids— war upon women and children. The continued air raids upon England and the mounting death roll of non-combatants by bombs, through German devilishness, tempt one to call upon the allies for reprisals; though the Huns know full well that Britain will never consent to purchase success or immunity from inhuman attacks, by similar inhumanity. In all the raids on England no damage has been done to any extent that would be of military advantage to the nation of the aerial murderers. It is sheer destruction of civilian property and civilian life, for the sake of "frightfulness." No appeal to humanity will avail with the denatured humanity represented by the Prussian militarists. The only remedy is the application of superior force; and that can only come by adding man to man from day to day till overwhelming superiority can hasten the downfall of a nation with a conception of warfare that violates all the conventions of international relations, and all the laws of chivalry and humanity. To secure this end the allies—with each other and all together, with high ideals of freedom and international decency—will have to, as they will do, fight on; and the bigger the armies they have, and the better equipped, the speedier will be the end. An intelligent and patriotic and courageous recognition of the situation brought home to young Canadians, and bravely acted upon, would fill up the ranks of the 33rd in a week. No man that is a man will stand by inactive and see a woman insulted with impunity; no young man should stand by and see women and children murdered in cold blood by bombing barbarians, without buckling on his armour.

SERVING TWO MASTERS.

For many years Hon. W. J. Hanna has been regarded as occupying a dual position, each part of which is incompatable with the other. As a private member it was bad enough that he should have been, as there was every reason to think he was, the agent of the Standard Oil Company. When that "octopus" tried to get its grip on the Soo industries when they were in low financial water, the efforts of the Government of the day to assist the Soo works to their feet, were antagonised by the Opposition, among which Mr. Hanna was prominent as legal adviser, advocate and friend of the Imperial Oil Company. No man, even though he be as clever as Mr. Hanna, can serve two masters satisfactorily to both. As a member of the Legislature, with the duty of protecting the interests of the Province, when they were at stake, his legal connection with the Standard Oil Company, his corporation associations had the call upon his representative responsibility. At a time of crisis he stood for the interests of the corporation, by his very antagonism of measures in the interests of the people of the Province he represented. As a member of the Government his old divided allegiance is a persistent condition. The other day in the House he admitted that he is still counsel for the Imperial Oil Company and did not deny that the Imperial Oil Company is part and parcel of the Standard Oil "interests." Such dual relations may be all right to some persons, but it cannot be denied that they subject the man's moral constitution to a great strain of temptation, and do not quite place him in the class of Cæsar's wife.

IF YOU want to BUILD UP YOUR BUSINESS, you must USE THE PAPER that goes into the Home.

THE MUNITION CHARGES.

The way we look at things; the impression they make upon us, are modified by the swiftly changing panorama of great war events that pass daily before us. Things at home that at other times would have shocked us by their inherent enormity of wrong, get mere passing or perfunctory attention. We have supped so full of horrors of the war that other events at home make less demand upon our attention; and we are warranted in asking with Macbeth:

Can such things be
And overpass us like a summer cloud
Without our special wonder?

All of us and most of us do not seem to see, or if we do, only for the moment, the extreme gravity and national peril involved in the charges made in the House of Commons by Mr. Kyte, in regard to criminal mishandling of shell contracts, especially the "fuse" end of them though the irregularities are not confined to fuses. There is evidence that in connection with the activities of the Shell Committee there were, to put it mildly, irregularities in Canada, also, that should have as much probing as the fuse contracts. The Government has issued a Royal Commission of two judges to investigate the charges founded upon Mr. Kyte's exposure. The Royal Commission was selected by Sir Robert Borden, although from time out of mind he and his party have antagonized a royal commission in such cases and favoured what is the proper thing in this case—a parliamentary committee. These charges are a matter of special gravity, as to the amounts of money and the shocking inhumanity of weakening our soldiers in the field, and should have the full and inclusive investigation that a parliamentary committee could give, if to the fuse charges were added the other charges in connection with the general activities of the Shell Committee. There should be full exposure of all phases of "war grafting," which, under the circumstances of the time, becomes a much blacker crime than the ordinary vulgar grafting of peace times. The government has hesitated and been actually forced into sanctioning a partial inquiry, which is, naturally partially evasive. It is not partizan prejudice that demands full investigation; but the demand comes from the most influential journals of the Conservative party. In this connection it will be interesting to submit what that staunch Conservative journal, the Montreal Star, says, as follows:

It was inevitable that, sooner or later, our Government would be driven to concede some sort of enquiry into the humiliating succession of charges against the late Shell Committee. Our boys are fighting for liberty in Europe; and the least that those of us beyond military age can do is to stoutly defend our national good name for decency and honest dealing in Canada. A frank and early acceptance of the inevitable duty of full investigation—as the "Star" urged—would have spared us many a spattering of scandal in open Parliament. And now that a breach has been made in the barrier against all enquiry, it would surely be as well to send all seriously supported charges to the admirably selected Commission, announced by Sir Robert Borden.

There can be no punishment too severe for men caught "grafting" out of, literally, the nation's life blood at a time of tremendous crisis and dominating danger to the very existence of Canada. We are fighting for our individual liberties and our national life. As the Premier announced yesterday, 200,000 of the best men in this country have enlisted to "slit the throat of Prussianism"—to quote the stark language of General Hughes. 22,000 of our lads have fallen from the ranks already, coming under the grim description of "wastage."

Twenty-two thousand Canadians!—dead, wounded or missing—and yet we are told that there are human ghouls so lost to all sense of primitive decency, to say nothing of patriotism or appreciation of the causes of this war, that they will fatten on the very monies, taxed out of us to carry on the war. The rest of us sweat blood to keep the war going, and send our best beloved to the front to die; and these men—the charges allege—cynically and gleefully pocket enormous profits and commissions out of our blood money, thus leaving us that much less to spend in arming our volunteers, and lessening by just so much the weight of our blows against the Germans.

If these charges be proven, the Government cannot go too far in punishing the guilty. A more rough and-ready people back their "war profiteers" up against a wall and shoot them! If we had shown little more of that spirit when the crawling species first appeared in our dread day of national agony, we would have fewer of these sickening charges to deal with to-day.

Problems Involved in Work Of Empire Re-organization

The moment the reorganizers of the Empire begin to discuss the practical issues that must face them in any serious movement for centralization they hedge and wriggle. The News, considering the tariff problem, says:

"For the third count of the charge, The Globe sets forth the alleged effort to co-ordinate the tariffs of the separate parts of the Empire in a Zollverein. But The Globe supports whole-heartedly the British preference, which is the first step in that very direction. If the principle is wrong why does The Globe endorse the practice? It is intimated that the German Zollverein had something to do with the beginning of the war, that it is in itself a vicious and testifying thing. Yet there is a Zollverein in Canada between the several States of this Dominion. We have free trade between ourselves, and we levy a tariff against all others. If such a system would wreck the Empire why does it not wreck Canada? Moreover, it is unnecessary and undesirable that any portion of the Empire should abandon control of its tariff."

The Globe believes in the control of the tariff of the United Kingdom by the British people, of the tariff of Canada by Canadians, and of the tariffs of all the other overseas Dominions by the Parliaments and people of those Dominions. The people of Canada ought not to be forced to accept free trade until they are ready to do so because of a sincere belief that free trade is a benefit, not a handicap. The people of the United Kingdom ought not to be dragooned into the payment of taxes on their foodstuffs by the dishonest cry that the overseas Dominions demand duties on foreign food supplies as the price of devotion to the Empire. The British Preference consisted in the voluntary lowering of the Canadian tariff by the Parliament of Canada. The reduction of duties on imports from Great Britain was not a matter of bargain or agreement between Great Britain and Canada. The people of the Dominion were left free to restore the old rates of duty, or to wipe out the duty altogether, at their pleasure. What relation can The News discover between this system of fiscal self-government and a permanent Imperial Zollverein of which the reorganizers talk so glibly? And how does The News support the statement that the Preference is "a first step" toward a Zollverein?

Were a general tariff for the British Empire to be framed and put in operation does anyone suppose that the representatives of eight million Canadians could impose their tariff policy upon the representatives of forty-seven million people resident in the United Kingdom? If the British majority were to insist that the Imperial tariff be based—like that of Canada—on free trade between the States of the Empire and a tariff against all others, The Toronto News and its Tory Imperialist friends in this country would become annexationists in a night as a means of escaping what they would speak of as the devastating deluge of cheap goods made by the underpaid British workman.

The News gives up no small part of the Imperial Federation policy when it declares that it is unnecessary and undesirable that any portion of the Empire should abandon control of its tariff. And what is true of the tariff is true of trade treaties and of defence. The British peoples all over the earth will remain united only so long as they remain free. If the United Kingdom, with its preponderating population, were made the Prussia of a highly-centralized British Empire, and occasion were given for the charge that the people of Great Britain were imposing their will and their ideals of government on the people of the overseas Dominions, the Imperial tie would no longer be the silken cord of love, but would become the clanking chain of enforced obligation.

Does The News contemplate without trepidation, when the next world war to which it looks forward comes upon us, a receipt from a Central War Department in London of a command that Canada, as the ally of Japan, put half a million men in the field at once for operations against the United States? To such a possibility The Globe must frankly confess it cannot look forward without horror. The control of the defence forces of Canada must remain in the hands of the Parliament and people of Canada. There must be no British equivalent of the Kaiser, with power to order out millions of Britons at home and overseas without the knowledge or consent of their Parliaments. With a great price our fathers bought British liberty. We are free-born. Let us not enslave ourselves by a reorganization of the Empire after the Prussian pattern.—The Globe.

Bishop Fallon's Fiery Appeal To Irish-Canadians

LONDON, Ont., March 31.—A call to every Ontario member of the Knights of Columbus and of the Ancient Order of Hibernians and to the Irish generally to respond to Britain's appeal for men has been issued by Bishop M. F. Fallon, of the Roman Catholic diocese of London.

The Bishop urges the Irish in a special letter to the Hibernians of which he is provincial chaplain, to learn a lesson from the people of the old land.

"When the war broke out, Ireland had an opportunity by standing sullenly by to become a thorn in England's side and thereby make a blind attempt to settle the controversy of centuries. There might have been an excuse for such action; there could have been no justification. Thank God we are faced with no such shame. When John Redmond, leader of the Irish party, promised to the British Parliament the co-operation of his native land, he gave a pledge that has been fulfilled to the extremist limit. Forgetful of past wrongs and heedless of her diminished population, but hateful of oppression and keen for liberty, Ireland dashed into the foremost of the fray and many of the most glorious pages of her history are now being written on the battlefields of Europe. Shall the children of the mother who have still upon them the marks and memories of bitter persecution outdo generous loyalty of the sons of the daughter who lived in the fullest possession of justice and liberty

"Honor calls on every Knight of Columbus who is fit and free for service to offer himself for the work." He says to the men of the K.O.C.: Shall we leave the duty, the burden and glory of his work to others

Denial That Is Not Denial

Special to the Parliament Buildings, Toronto, April 1st.

A great line of investiture and sweeping general denial, without a specified clearing up of the question of his relation to the Standard Oil Company is the outstanding feature of Mr. Hanna's statement to the House.

Over and above every other question is this issue is the question whether or not Mr. Hanna is employed by the Standard Oil. He admits that he is still Counsel for the Imperial Oil Co., and does not deny that the Imperial Oil Company is connected with the Standard Oil.

If Mr. Hanna, through his connections with the Imperial Oil Company and the International Petroleum Company is in the employ of the Standard Oil Company it is a condition of affairs which it is safe to say, would not be tolerated in any State of the American Union.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

SPORTING COMMENT

As usual, the Pacific Coast League will have the honour of leading the grand march in the pennant ball festivities, to-morrow being inaugural day for the great class double A circuit.

The mild applause which greeted the efforts of the athletes in the curtain-raisers of the training season will swell into a roar along the western coast to-morrow, and, gaining in volume, will spread eastward until the raucous shrieks of the frenzied fans meet and mingle with the booming of the Atlantic's surf. Eight days after the Coasters have started the ball rolling, the well-known American League of Mr. Byron Bancroft Johnson, and the equally notorious National League of the Hon. John Kinley Tener, will—weather permitting—initiate their 1916 flag chases. The fourteenth of April will see the Southern League clans in motion, and the eighteenth is the date set for the American Association's getaway. From then on the baseball pot will boil merrily. Many new minor leagues have been launched, and scores of cities that disappeared from the professional baseball map in the disastrous years of 1914 and 1915 will again be in evidence. By and large, it looks like a big year that we are facing, fellow bugs.

Reverting to the Pacific Coast League, there is every indication that it starts its seventeenth annual championship race under the most auspicious auguries, if you know what we mean. The substitution of Salt Lake City for Sacramento last year, while viewed with misgiving by some, proved to be a happy solution of a vexing problem. Salt Lake gave the Bees more liberal support last year than was accorded to any other club in the circuit by the home fans, population considered. "New broom," some of the knockers in other cities have been saying, but "sour grapes" is likely more pat. Cliff Blankenship is again the leader of the Salt Lake Club, which finished second last year. The San Francisco Seals, last year's champs, are again under the guidance of Harry Wolverton, the former pilot of the New York Yankees. The Portland Beavers, led by Walter McCredie, look good for a come back. After winning four pennants in the five preceding years, the Beavers landed in the cellar in 1915. Rowdy Elliott is the chieftain of the Oakland Oaks, and it is rumoured that he is engaged in a dark, deep conspiracy to bring about a repetition of the gladsome season of 1912, when the Oaks grabbed the bunting.

In the South both the Los Angeles and Vernon clubs under new leadership. Frank Chance, whose name has a strangely familiar ring, has been engaged as the pilot of the Angelic choir. The Seraphs haven't won a pennant since 1908, and the fans of Climateria are placing a lot of confidence in the genius of the former Peerless Leader of the Cubs and not quite so peerless pilot of the Yanks. The new manager of the Vernon Bengals is Ham Patterson, and the Tiger rooters are hoping that he is the Ham what am. Patterson has played ball in Omaha, Crookston, Minn., Oskaloosa, Ia., and other places, and once played a few games with the St. Louis Browns. He began his managerial career ten years ago in Oskaloosa. In 1908 he piloted the Pueblo Western League club and the following year he was butted about by St. Louis and Pittsburgh in the majors, finally landing with Chattanooga in the Southern League, and was sold to Nashville. In 1911 he joined the Major club and covered first for that Coast League aggregation for three seasons. Last season he went to Wichita as manager, and this year he is the successor of Doc. White at the Vernon helm.

HAS RESIGNED FROM LEAGUE

Adjutant McElheney Thinks Local Organization Should Have Also Recommended Grant For Salvation Army Band

Adjt. McElheney is feeling very strongly that the Speakers' Patriotic League, of which he was an active member, did not recommend a grant for the Temple Band, as well as any other, seeing that the Band was always on deck every time for any purpose the city needed it, and without pay. Having loaned their instruments to the 93rd and doing as much patriotic work as any, he thinks they deserve something better at the hands of the League than to be left out entirely. The Adjutant is, therefore resigning from the League, but will, of course, continue his efforts for recruiting.

LINDSAY, April 1.—Swift, drastic punishment was meted out this morning to Chas Lesiel, of Toronto who deserted some days ago from the 109th Battalion. He was brought before Police Magistrate Jackson and was given twelve months in the Ontario Reformatory.

The prisoner confided to the authorities that he enlisted for the money that was in it.

Divisional orders for Saturday contain the following:—

It is published for the information of all concerned, that all soldiers of the Canadian Expeditionary Force, who have returned from Overseas, and who have received an honourable discharge, on their return are be taken to deprive him of his uniforms. In the case, however, of any soldier who has been discharged for misconduct, steps are to at once be taken to deprive hi mof his uniform; steps should, if necessary, be taken under the provisions of Section 134 of the Military Act.

Recruiting started off very promisingly for the week, this morning, when seven or eight recruits were examined and sworn in. Capt. Byrnes of C Company and Capt. Neilson of D Company have both been doing good work along this line. C Company, has now a strength of 180 men, and, like D Company, is steadily growing. The 93rd are straining every effort to reach the 1,000 stage as soon as possible. There are about six weeks eft yet before the Battalsix weeks left yet before the Battalforty men a week would bring the battalion up to its complete establishmest.

The beautiful weather is appreciated by no one more fully than by the soldiers of the 93rd Battalion. The cumbersome great coats have been discarded, except for night wear, and the weather conditions make drilling outside a pleasure. Central Park, during the moments of leisure, looks like the campus of a big school. This morning, after the parade had been dismissed, there were four footballs and half a dozen baseballs flying around.

The men of the 93rd are taking a keen interest in the smoker at the Armouries to-morrow night.

UNCERTAINTY AT CAPITAL

One Rumour Says Sir Robert Borden Is About to Resign

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, Ont., April 3.—This week in Parliament commences in uncertainty.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier, leader of the Opposition, it is said, was summoned to a conference with His Royal Highness the Governor-General yesterday afternoon. Naturally no intelligence as to the nature of that conference is available, but in face of the situation as it exists almost any kind of conjecture is justified. Some say that His Royal Highness has in view a coalition Government.

Others say that Sir Robert Borden is about to resign and that reconstruction is to be brought about. No caucus of the Conservative party has yet been held, though one was expected immediately following the Tuesday night's proceedings. It is not, therefore, probable that there will be any developments in this direction until such caucus has been held, and the united opinion of the party secured.

The Ottawa Citizen (Independent Conservative), in an editorial headed "Hughes or the Government," says: "There is a crisis for General Hughes. There is also a crisis for the Minister of Militia in the Borden Cabinet, and for the man whom Sir Robert Borden, as head of the Government, placed and retained in charge of the most important branch of administration since August, 1914. In other words for the Government itself."

"POTASH AND PERLMUTTER."

Potash and Perlmutter, the most famous cloak and suit laugh-makers in the world, have left their quarters in the Cohan Theatre, New York City, after two remarkable seasons, and are making a tour of the country to display their goods to millions of patrons who could not get to New York to see them. They will open up shop at The Grand on Monday next, but their stay is limited to one night therefore it is advisable to put in orders in advance. To accommodate the rush of buyers the box-office of the Grand will be opened Friday, A. H. Woods, who put the boys into business, is sending along with them not only all their original designs but in fact their entire staff, including designers, models, cutters, pressers, salesmen, lawyer and even their friends and family. Their tour so far has been a triumphant one for Abe and Morris are known everywhere by reputation as fine fellows, as lovable as they are laughable—keen business men, but with hearts of gold. Their visit will be a notable event, and it is only regrettable that their stay is necessarily limited to one night.

Hospital is Like Heaven To The Wounded Tommy

By William G. Shepherd.

(United Press Staff Correspondent.)

Salonica, Greece, (By Mail), Feb. 26.—A hospital is like heaven to a sick or wounded soldier.

If a man has any strength left when he tumbles in between the white sheets for the first time he heaves a sigh of relief and content. I was on my way back for three weeks in the Fourt Canadian Hospital at Salonika and I got to watching the newcomers, waiting for this sigh of contentment and for the smile which crossed even the pain-strained faces as the soldiers or officers relaxed from the tension of their sufferings and surrendered themselves to the ministrations and care of the nurses.

No wounded came in while I was there. There was no terrible rush, such as sometimes happens during a battle, when torn and bleeding men pour in like a flood, night and day, and test the nerves and strength of the doctors, surgeons and nurses almost to the breaking point. I suppose such men sigh too, if they have the strength, when they find they have exchanged their bed of blooded mud on the battlefield for the white sheets and soft cots and the gentle care of the nurses in some tent hospital.

Most of the men who came in while I was there were sick of grippe or pneumonia. Some of them were Englishmen who, in spite of some chronic ailment of long standing, had volunteered and tried to stand the roughness of field life, only to have their old ailments exaggerated. Most of them had tried to fight off the illness and hadn't surrendered until either an intense fever or pain had overcome them.

"Get to the hospital with your boots on," seemed to be their motto. Though they came in ambulances they rarely came on stretchers. There's always something pitiful and gruesome about a huddled form on a stretcher and you don't want to be that form yourself, if you can help it.

Next Step With Newcomer.

The next step with a newcomer was to sit on the side of the cot which had been assigned him. If he was very ill he might at least stretch out on the blanket.

"Don't surrender," seemed to be the idea. "Get to the hospital with your boots on and keep them on as long as you can."

But, shortly, a white clad and very businesslike young nurse would take matters in hand, and, as it were, throw up the sponge for our conquered hero. She would come in with pajamas, of soft canton flannel, made by the kind hands of Canadian women, and a pair of bed socks, of the same material.

"Off with your clothes," she would say. "Get into these and go right to bed."

"But,"—the officer would begin to protest.

"Into bed," the nurse would order, firmly. And the young man whose job it was to order around a thousand men, even to the point of death, if need be, would weakly submit.

Within ten minutes a pajamaed figure would crawl in between the warm blankets and then would come the sigh. Rest and comfort and care at least, after the mud and wet, cold and dirt, beds of straw and sleeping bags.

No Place For Sentiment.

A British army hospital isn't supposed to be a place for sentiment, any more than a British quartermaster's department, or an automobile repair station. It's purpose is to repair soldiers and officers and make them useful again, fit for the firing line. Theoretically, an army hospital is a place to which you send broken-down men to have them fixed up in much the same way that an officer sends his horse to the company farrier to have it shod. That is, it works that way, theoretically. But human nature overcomes theory, now and again. I don't believe there was a single nurse of the seventy-five in that hospital who had not taken care of at least one German soldier. Several had cared for whole wards-full of them.

I asked my nurse about it one afternoon when she was sitting sewing in the tent.

"Many and many a German I've nursed in France," she said. "They always used to be so frightened at first; no matter how they suffered, they seemed to be afraid to complain or to even tell of it. We used to win them over by extra care and kindness. Our orders were to treat them just as we treated our own British Tommies. Some of them were very young, and after they got acquainted and saw that the British were going to be kind to them they were the happiest patients we had. Sometimes they used to laugh at the high school German I had learned in Toronto.

"But the Tommies were just as kind to them as we were. Of course, the German patients were always under guard. There was always a Tommy with a rifle in the tent. One young German in my ward had lost the lower paprt of his jaw and I always had to feed him soup. One day I wasn't in the tent when the soup was brought in and when I did get there I saw the British Tommy who was on guard holding up the German boy with one arm and feeding him his soup with the other. His rifle lay on the floor. The Tommy didn't see me come in. Another German patient beckoned me to come to him and when I did he pointed over to the Tommy and said 'Look at that.' There were tears in his eyes and I guess they came into mine, too. For that one little minute, the war looked silly."

"So did the Tommy," she added, "when he saw me. He tried to get out of it by blaming the German. 'Blighter felt a bit peckish and tried to feed himself,' he said, scowling at the prisoner."

REARED EDDIE FOY'S CHILD; ASKS $15,000

NEW YORK, April 1.—Edward Fitzgerald, known on the stage as Eddie Foy, was named as defendant in an action by his sister, Mrs. Mary A. Doyle. She demands $15,000 for rearing and educating Catherine Fitzerald, on of Foy's children.

Foy has twelve children. His sister says she took charge of Catherine when she was a baby twenty years ago and has since paid all her expenses. Foy asserts his sister adopted Catherine and reared her as her own. This his sister denies, declaring she always expected reimbursement.

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

93rd BAND SCORE IN A FINE PROGRAMME

Splendid Concert by the Overseas Musicians Assisted by Mr. T. Stratten—First of a Series of Popular Entertainments in Victoria Hall.

A brilliant performance was that given by the band of the 93rd Battalion in the first of a series of popular concerts at Victoria Hall on Saturday night. The overseas musicians under the direction of Bandmaster Hughes, scored heavily in a most exacting programme, including numbers that would have taxed the technique and skill of a much older organization than the band of the Peterborough battalion. Saturday night's test was a severe one, but the band came through triumphantly. In spite of the disagreeable weather there was a good audience present.

Probably the most exacting number played by the band was the selection from "Lobengrin," a heavy, tricky work that called for the best efforts of both band and conductor. The number was handled in masterly fashion. Equally effective was the execution of the selection from "William Tell" which, while not as full of "fireworks" as the overture to the same opera, gave the band full scope to display their ability. Thomas' magnificent overture, "Raymond," was another gem, and the reed section especially is to be congratulated upon its work in this number. Auber's overture, "Crown Diamonds," was beautifully played as was the descriptive number, "Mill in the Forest." A dainty well played offering was the gavotte, "Les Clochea de St. Malo," the charm of which the band seemed to have fully caught. The concert waltz, "Eileen Alana," with some vocal embellishments, touched the popular fancy and the patrol, "Wee McGregor," always a favourite number with Peterborough audiences since it was first introduced by the band of the 57th Regiment, was played in fine fashion. Two stirring marches played with splendid dash and vim rounded out a magnificent programme, upon which Bandmaster Hughes and his fine young band should be warmly congratulated.

The band was assisted by Mr. T. Stration, whose Harry Lauder imitations were as clever and amusing as ever. In both cases he had to respond to double encores, and altogether he was heard in six songs, including, "Every Laddie Loves a Lassie," "Trixie From Dixie," "The Wedding o' Sandy MacNab," and "Tibermory." One of his encores, with some impromptu assistance from the band, was probably the biggest hit of the evening. Peterborough is fortunate to have as a citizen such a capable entertainer as Mr. Stratton.

Saturday night's concert was, as already stated, the first of a series. The time is drawing near when the 93rd Battalion will be leaving its home city, and music lovers are reminded that there will not be many more opportunities to hear the band in concert programmes.

Funeral of Late Mrs. John Hurley

The funeral of the late Mrs. John Hurley took place Saturday morning at 9 o'clock from the residence, 464 Charlotte street, and proceeded to St. Peter's Cathedral and thence to St. Peter's cemetery. At the Cathedral requiem High mass was celebrated by Rev. Father Bagley and at the grave Rev. Father Phelan conducted the service. The outside relatives who were able to attend were Messrs P. S. Brady, Waubashene and Joseph of Brechin, Mrs. A. A. Lauder, Chicago, Mrs. John O'Reilly, Miss Dolly O'Reilly, Mrs. Julia Brady, Mrs. M. Mulcahey, Mrs Jas. Ward, Mrs. F. Costello, Miss G. O'Neill, Messrs. J. W. Diamond, Thomas Hurley and John J. Twohey all of Lindsay. The pallbearers were Messrs. Jas. Lynch, Frank Fahren, J. F. McCarthy, John Tromblay, W. J. Hickey and Ed. Hickey.

MR. J. D. McMILLAN ROSE FROM THE RANKS TO SUPERINTENDENT

From section hand to Divisional Superintendent has been the splendid achievement of Mr. J. D. McMillan, known in Peterborough, where he resided for a time while conductor on the G.T.R. "flyer." Years ago he was a humble toiler in a section gang on the G.T.R. at Uxbridge. This morning he passed through this city from Belleville in his private car en route to Lindsay, thus adding another to the long list of railway romances. Mr. McMillan made his first forward step when he forsook the section handoar and crowbar for the broader apprenticeship of "braking," in the course of time his abilities were duly recognized in his appointment as conductor of the "flyer." Later he was placed in charge of one of the through passenger trains between Toronto and Port Hope, via Lindsay and Peterborough, and between times was instructor of rules. In this work he was an examiner and instructor of firemen and brakesmen. His extensive knowledge of the road and its requirements was invaluable in this particular work. Moreover, it broadened his experience and more thoroughly equipped him for the position to which he was recently appointed. Latterly he has been train master at Lindsay and is now acting superintendent of the local division during the illness of Mr. Coyle, who was reported in a serious condition a short time ago.

Mr. McMillan has risen from the ranks and in his gradual advancement has acquired a comprehensive knowledge of railroading and of this division, especially. In short he has all the requisite training and ability for his new position.

One of the Best Film Plays is to Be Seen for the Next Three Days

The picture at the Empire Theatre to-day, to-morrow and Wednesday is one that will no doubt attract large audiences. Theda Bara is taking the leading part, and press reports from other centres where the picture has appeared, give the information that she takes the part in a remarkble manner. Also two good comedy films. Empire Theatre. Continuous performance. Matinee and evening.

Destroying Lawn in Victoria Park

The Horticultural Society is taking steps to prevent further crossing the lawn in Victoria Park. Notices will be posted as a reminder to citizens and Chief Thompson has promised his assistance. Victoria Park is one of Peterborough's beauty spots and it is felt that everyone should co-operate to maintain it as such. There might be some excuse for the short cuts if there were no regular paths. The society requests the citizens in that north-east end of the city to assist in the efforts to protect the Park.

REQUIEM MASS FOR LATE PTE. ROGERS

At the Church of the Sacred Heart This Morning Was Largely Attended

A requiem high mass was sung at the Church of the Sacred Heart this morning by Rev. J. J. O'Brien, for the late Private Jos. Hayward Rogers who was killed in action on March 16th. Among the large number of parishioners present were Private Joseph Rogers of the 52nd Battery, Kingston father of the deceased, and other members of the family. On Sunday morning Rev. Father McAuley spoke with deep feeling of the death of Private Rogers. He had given up his life for his country, hade made the greatest sacrifice possible. The news of his death had been received with great regret throughout the parish and city, and Father McAuley assured the bereaved parents of a widespread sympathy in their loss. He believed that the men at the front are prepared for death, and that God would look with tender eye upon those who are giving up their lives in defence of their country and the cause they know to be just. In these deaths there was a quality somewhat akin to martyrdom.

FOUND HIS CHUM DEAD BY HIS SIDE IN THE TRENCHES

Perley Wiseman of Milford, Maine was visiting relatives in Harcourt, New Brunswick in November, 1914, and happened one day to be on an Intercolonial Railway train going to war was a few weeks old, and the train was filled with young fellows talking of enlisting. Wiseman over a borrowed match got into conversation with a recruiting officer, and there and then decided to enlist. He went straight on to St. John, and joined the 26th battalion under Col. T. J. McAvity. He did not notify his mother until he was leaving for England. She at once, got into communication with President Wilson and eventually secured her son's discharge from the army. He returned home, but immediately enlisted, in the United States army.

But before his discharge Wiseman saw several months' service in France. He says:

"Many of the Germans opposite us were from Canada and occasionally we would recognize a man whom we had known. The feeling was high, when we realized that these fellows had lived in the same country with us, and benefited by its liberty. I speak of course for the Canadian boys in this respect, although I'm sure I was able to fully appreciate and enter into their feelings in this particular.

"But after all it was a good deal like bad feeling between any bunches of men. They would occasionally call insulting remarks to us and we responded in kind, and no doubt behind their trenches they laughed at their pet jokesters as we behind our sand bag did at ours. Sometimes when things were quiet we would call out in more peaceful mood and inquiries would be made as to what part of Canada they came from, and would be answered civily enough. A great many of the fellows opposite us were from St. John, and many more from places in Ontario.

"All night all we could fire at, was the blaze from a man's gun, and whether you got him or not, you never knew. The last day or two in the trenches was always the worst. You had been getting only five hours sleep at night, and at best the standing up and watching was nerve racking, even at the quietest times. Then there were always the little things to keep your nerve a-stretch. A rat scurried behind you, and you jumped on the thought that a German had crept up in your rear, or a stray bullet took away your chum, just as you were bacco.

about to ask him for a chew of to-

"This very thing happened to me. There was a night last September when Joe Campbell and myself were on guard in a communicating trench. We had been silent for a few moments, and both straining our eyes over into that piece of land that lies between the trenches. Presently without turning I asked Joe for a chew of tobacco. He did not answer, and I thought he had not heard, I repeated my request louder, and finally put my hand on his shoulder. The slight shake I gave his toppled him over into the trench in a heap, and I found that a bullet had gone clean through his eye and out the back of his head. Poor Joe, he hadn't heard, and the best thing about it was he hadn't suffered.

"We were ordered to be very carful about displaying any kind of a light at night, as it needed little, as you can understand, to draw the fire from that other trench. About seventy of the battalion were busy one night repairing trenches, when the craving of one young St. Stephen lad for a cigarette precipitated a considerable catastrophe.

"He was a youngster, and I suppose hardly thought of the circumstances. He lighted a match to smoke a cigarette, and in the German fire drawn to that trench every man but five was killed and the foolhardy youngster among them. It was as well, he would have been ordered shot at any rate, army discipline in the trenches being a thing of no sentiment whatever."

The sight of two of his own battalion acquaintances dead after having been crucified to a barn door by bayonets through their hands and feet, was one of the unpleasant remembrances of Wiseman's short stay in the trenches.

He says there were 126 Americans in the Canadian battalion in which he enlisted and he believes there are fully 10,000 Americans fighting with the Allies. The Twenty-Sixth had a major and a lieutenant from Boston.

A nest of wasps will kill from 3,000 to 4,000 flies a day, but one or two they may miss will breed about 23-456,789 more before the avengers can get back on the job next morning.

Of the blind persons in this country 32,443 are males and 24,929 are females. The male majority is doubtless largely due to the extreme liability of males to accidents, owing to their occupations.

EVANGELIST TAKEN SUDDENLY ILL

Was Unable to Conduct the Sunday Evening Service in Bethany Tabernacle—Will Be On Hand To-night

A very unusual thing occurred at Bethany Tabernacle last night. A big crowd had gathered to enjoy the evangelistic service. A lively song service had been conducted by the pastor and several special selections had been enjoyed by the big audience when word came that Evangelist Sharpe had taken suddenly ill and would be unable to be present. He had made an attempt to get to the church, but had been compelled to turn back.

The pastor, Rev. Mr. Johnston, then addressed the audience from Gal. 6, 7 and 8, choosing as his subject, "The Deception of Sin." He said that sin was the wily deception of satin, its author. God had been compelled to deal with scoffing generations since Adam's sin in the garden. In the text there were two unalterable laws — "That God is not mocked and that men reap as they sow." The first of these laws was illustrated in the case of God's dealings with the people of Noah's time —also in the inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrah, and later in the destruction of Jerusalem at the hands of Titus and Vespasian. Christ came unto His own, but His own received Him not. And for their rejection of the Son of God great judgment fell upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem for their murder of God's Christ.

The Harvest of Sin.

It was also seen that men reap as they sow. That just as there are established laws in the realm of nature so there are unalterable laws in the spiritual realm. If a man sows in the fields of sin he is sure to reap a harvest of the seed which he has sown. Young men sow "wild oats" and reap a harvest of the same. "He that soweth iniquity shall reap vanity"—Prov. 22: 8. "They that plow iniquity and sow wickedness reap the same"—Job 4: 8. "They have sown the wind and they shall reap the whirlwind" — Hosea 8: 7. "They that sow to the flesh shall reap corruption." (Text).

Evangelist Sharpe desires to say to the public that he has recovered from the attack of last night, and will speak to-night and throughout the week. Service at 8 o'clock.

A bucket of beer saved the life of John Rasant, of Dupont, N.Y. His clothing caught fire as he was sitting beside the stove in a saloon, and as no water was available the saloonkeeper threw a bucket of beer over John and extinguished the flames.

CHECKER CHAMPION IS IN THE CITY

Mr. Sanders is Anxious to Meet a Number of Local Champions

Philip Sanders of Everett, Mass., the juvenile checker champion of the world, is staying at the Empress Hotel to-day. Mr. Sanders is anxious to meet as many local champions as possible including members of the police force. He is leaving the city for a few days but will return shortly.

Mr. Sanders won the juvenile championship of the world at a tournament in Boston when he was thirteen years of age. He has never been beaten in a match. He played Richard and Alf Jordon and Newell Banks. In the last seven exhibitions Mr. Sanders has not lost any games. He won 155 and secured 11 draws. He is the youngest man in the world to play blindfolded.

He has been going through New York and is now working his way through Canada to the West. Mr. Sanders is a traveller in a dental line and plays checkers for a sideline.

RUSSIA'S MANY RACES.

The population of Russia is more varied than that of any country of the world. It consists of over one hundred and forty different peoples, nationalities and races, and different in their customs, religion, language and dress. There are: Fifty million Great Russians or actual Russians or 'Muscovites' (the inhabitants of the former Grand Duchy of Muckva), now ruling all Russia.

Twenty million Little Russians formerly a part of Poland.

Twenty million Poles.

Six million white Russians; formerly a part of Poland.

Two million Lithuanians; formerly a part of Poland.

Two million Germans.

One million and a half of Armenians.

One million and a half Roumanians.

Five million Jews.

Sixty million of 130 other different nations and races as: Tartars, Kurds, Bashkirs, Samoyedes, Kirghizes, Kalmuchs, Turks, Bulgars, Greeks, Gipsies, and 120 others. Mostly all of these live in groups and clans of their ancient territory.

THE FIRST FRENCHMEN KILLED IN THE WAR

In the French publication of Notes and Queries — "Intermediorie des chercheurs et curieux" — Pastor Frank-Puaux gives the result of his researches as to the first French soldiers killed during this war. It is a point of historical interest, for he was killed before any declaration of war.

Jules Andre Peugot, a schoolteacher belonging to one of the French Protestant families so long settled near the corner where France, Switzerland, and Germany came together, was a corporal in the infantry. On Saturday, Aug. 1, 1914 the day when mobilisation was ordered, the French troops had been also ordered to fall back six miles from the frontier—so as to avoid any occasion of trouble which might be seized on by Germany as a pretext for declaring war.

The next day Corporal Peugeot, with four men, was in the little village of Joncherey, near Delle, more than seven miles from the frontier. It was ten o'clock in the morning. A young woman came running up, crying, "The Prussians!" It was a German patrol commanded by Lieut. Mayer of the Fifth Horse Chasseurs. Then French corporal went toward him to protest against this violation of the frontier before war was declared, when Mayer drew his revolver and fired three times.

The second ball hit Peugeot in the right shoulder and came out on the left side. He stumbled, but pulled himself together enough to raise his rifle; and he shot the German lieutenant dead. Then he fell dead himself. It was only on the 4th of August that the German Ambassador at Paris handed to the French Government the declaration of war, based on a pretended flight of French aeroplanes over Nuremberg.

Some days before, friends of my own, farmers at Suarce, near Belfort, were carried off with their horses into Germany by a like patrol. They are still in captivity. Of the nine, one has died. All have refused their freedom, which was offered if they would sign a paper saying they were on German territory when captured. The importance of such facts may be gathered from the claims they will find during peace negotiations. They do not withdraw us from the present atmosphere, nineteen months later, while the battle is still on.

"Our genial butcher,"
"Our efficient town constable,"
"Our alert fire boys,"
"Our painstaking liveryman."

"Within the Law"

It is a rare enough thing nowadays to find a play which has received the universal endorsement of dramatic critics everywhere. It is unprecedented to hear of a play that has received not only the endorsement of the men whose business it is to consider a play from a technical viewpoint, but from the prominent laymen who judge a play only by the personal appeal which it makes to them. It is therefore of increased interest to learn that we are soon to see "Within the Law," a play by Bayard Weiller, which has been commended publicly by such eminent thinkers as Woodrow Wilson, Theodore Roosevelt, Dr. C. H. Pankhurst the Bishop of Wyoming, Mrs. O. H P. Belmont, Mrs. Harriott Stanton Blatch, and which has just concluded a run of more than a year at the Eltinge Theatre, New York City. The management of "The Grand" has secured this remarkable play, which deals with present-day condition in the populace and which will be seen on Saturday next, April 8th, for two performances.

THE CANADIAN RED CROSS IN ENGLAND

The activity of the Canadian Red Cross in England and at the front is closely connected with the prosperity of the Society in Canada. Any diminution of Red Cross enterprise on this side of the water would mean inevitably an increase in the suffering of the wounded.

The Red Cross movement in Canada however is advancing like a great tidal wave. Almost every branch each month reports new high records in goods and money. The total of supplies passing through the shipping departments in Toronto, St. John and Halifax is constantly increasing.

In consequence of this the Canadian Red Cross abroad is able to report a steady expansion of the scope of its activity. It is now supplying comforts to Canadian wounded in 71 hospitals in the Shorncliffe area. From its Boulogne warehouse it issues supplies to four Canadian General hospitals, four Canadian Field Ambulances and five Canadian Stationary hospitals in France. In addition there is a Canadian Red Cross hospital, to which five motor ambulances are attached at St. Cloud near Paris. This is supplied by a Canadian Red Cross warehouse in Paris which has with the French Military Hospitals. Further, the three Canadian Hospitals in the Mediterranean are not lost sight of, and these are supplied from Alexandria.

The Prisoners of War Department has now on its list 1400 prisoners of war in Germany. To these, fortnightly shipments of food have been sent, and they have been well supplied with blankets, overcoats, underclothes and other winter clothing, which has been very acceptable owing to the severity of the season in Germany.

The Parcels Department sends out a monthly average of over 4,000 parcels of food and clothing. At Xmas 3,500 lbs. of turkey and 3,000 pounds of plum pudding were distributed to the Canadian sick and wounded in England and France.

An important feature of Canadian Red Cross work are the hospital visitors who bring the wounded into personal touch with the Society, and collect information that serves considerably to alleviate the anxiety of relatives. Recently Mr. Gaspar Clarke of East Toronto, after reading in the casualty lists, that his brother was wounded, cabled to the Red Cross in London, and in two days received full details as to the nature of the wound. This information has been gathered by a Canadian Red Cross visitor in Boulogne. This staff of visitors now numbers 400.

The Duchess of Connaught Canadian Red Cross hospital at Cliveden is constantly winning golden opinions for its efficiency and perfect organization. It is considered a model hospital and a great tribute to Canadian Red Cross effort.

Taking all departments into consideration the Canadian Red Cross is doing admirable work abroad. The only limit to the good it can accomplish is the limit of contributions from Canada. Every increase of Red Cross effort in Canada gives the Red Cross so much power to ameliorate the unhappy lot of Canada's wounded and prisoners.

FRESH AIR IS BEST TONIC IN SPRING—DR. DIXON

SPRING HEALTH RULES

1 Eat meat but once a day, and sparingly.

2. Those not under the doctor's care, should take a glass of water before retiring for the night and one an hour before breakfast.

3. Get all the fresh air possible.

4. Sleep with your window open.

5. See that your clothing is heavy enough to protect you against sudden changes of weather.

6 Walk in the open air five or six miles a day.

BY SAMUEL G. DIXON M.D. L.L.D Pennsylvania Commissioner of Health

With the honk of wild geese flying northward the patent medicine and home remedy manufacturers seem inspired anew and there follows a wave of spring tonic advertisements.

The tonic which the vast majority of individuals need at this period of the year is fresh air, exercise and simple diet. Owing to weather conditions many of our activities are restricted in the winter time. There is also a tendency to eat excessively of meat and fatty foods. As a result, when the spring arrives with its warm days many of us are like a furnace that has been so choked with fuel that it doesn't draw well.

You cannot buy relief from these conditions at a dollar a bottle. Medicine will not make up for over-eating and under-exercising. The high death rate which almost invariably prevails at this season of the year from pneumonia, tuberculosis, and other respiratory diseases is largely due to the reduced physical resistance of individuals, which makes them particularly sensitive when the sudden changes of temperature occur which are common at this time of the year.

Old people are most susceptible as they are housed more closely during the winter time than young folks.

Y. M. C. A. NEWS

About 60 members of the Boys' Department participated in a church parade Sunday evening to St. Paul's church under the direction of the officers of the Association. Rev. Robt. Pogue's sermon was of special interest to boys and they listened very attentively to the advice he offered them.

The great event of the present week is the Y.M.C.A. circus, which is billed for Thursday and Friday evenings, April 6 and 7. Every friend of the Association should try to attend this annual event. It is both a demonstration of gymnasium work and an occasion of fun making. The usual chorus will be in evidence and the elephant which has been imported is larger and more interesting than ever before and has for his trainer one of the smallest members of the boys' department. Small tents will be erected at the gymn and canvass will be in evidence at other points. To give the gathering a circus setting peanuts and pop corn will be on sale to the audience by hawkers from the boys' department. A committee of ladies will conduct a pie sale for the benefit of the boys' department piano fund. Mothers of the boys are urged to make this occasion a pie shower, sending their donations to the building by 5 o'clock Thursday afternoon.

Members of the Y.M.C.A. staff. Leaders Corps and members are sparing no effort to make this event a success, so it is hoped that the attendance will break all records.

TRY TO COERCE GREECE BY AIR RAID, ONE VIEW

ATHENS, via Paris, April 1.—A high court official declares that in his opinion the only conceivable explanation of the aerial raid on Salonica is that Germany is attempting to drive Greece to assist in the expulsion of the French and British forces from Salonica. He said, however, that such a thing was out of the question, as Greece had reason daily to realise she was at the mercy of the Entente Powers.

The labour unions of Salonica have telegraphed to King Constantine a protest against the bombardment of the city. The funerals of the raid victims yesterday were marked by popular demonstrations.

General Sarrail, the French commander in chief, left Salonica today for the front. Lieutenant General Mahon, the British commander, called on General Sarrail before he left the city. The British Commander then went to Athens, accompanied by several other British officers, and will be received by King Constantine

"CIVILIZATION OF THE FUTURE IS BEING FOUGHT OUT ON THE SUNNY PLAINS OF FRANCE"

Rev. Keirstead's Stirring Message to All Eligible Men--Absence of Young Men of Military Age Was Noticeable at Last Night's Recruiting Meeting---Pte. Hills Was Given An Enthusiastic Welcome.

At the recruiting meeting in the Armouries last night, Pte. Hills of Brockville, a returned soldier, made a strong plea for men down before an audience of several hundred people. His hearers were evidently in entire sympathy with the young soldier's remarks and his address was interrupted repeatedly by their applause. Pte. Hills, at one stage of his speech, singled out the men in the banks, and said that if, instead of leaving their seats and peeping out over the plate glass window at the 93rd Battalion, they would be come members of it, it would be more to their credit.

Major Davidson, Chaplain of the Battalion, presided at the meeting. The main address of the evening was an inspiring appeal for men by Prof. E. M. Keirstead, McMaster University, Toronto. A large audience was present to lend their support to the meeting, which proved to be a very enthusiastic one. The young men of military age, however were not present in any numbers. At one stage of the meeting Private Hills asked every man in civilian clothes to stand up. From the press table not a man who stood in response to this request, appeared to be of military age.

Would Return.

The three patriotic addresses of Prof. Keirstead, Major Davidson and Private Hills contained very pointed appeals to the young men of the city and there can be no doubt that they left their impress upon any young men present. Major Davidson spoke briefly to the call to the Peterborough young men. Prof. Keirstead spoke eloquently of what it meant to be a soldier of the king, and Pte. Hills touching briefly on his own experience, exhorted all young men in mufti to get inside a uniform. If his appeal lacked anything in eloquence it was certainly impregnated with earnestness, and he showed his spirit by declaring "If I was well today I'd be at it again; yes, and with the 93rd Battalion."

Four Words.

Major Davidson, in introducing the speaker, said that the thoughts of this meeting would revolve around four words. The first one could be easily guessed. It was the "Empire," to which Empire might our hearts and energy well go out, to defend it in the great struggle in which she is engaged, and to assist her in the discharge of the great mission to which God had called her. The second word was "Canada," our Homeland, who is called upon to rally to a man, to defend the Empire and herself. Was there a single man, Canadian-born who would not do something to help Canada to measure up to the great standard she is aiming at. The third word was "Peterborough." The speaker should have some idea of the aspirations and qualities of this city, and, though this city lacks the outward expression of enthusiasm common to some cities, yet every man and woman who had lived here for any time at all, was proud of this city, and are anxious to see it take its rightful place among the cities of the Dominion. He was sure that when the 93rd Battalion received its marching orders the citizens would take care that they lacked in nothing in the line of proper equipment.

"Empire—our Empire; Canada—Our Country; Peterborough — our our city," said the Reverend Major. "The fourth word is God—Our God."

He urged that the name of God be in the hearts and minds of those in the audience, and further explained that these recruiting meetings were in no way substitutes for the regular Church services.

Prof. Keirstead.

"I have no doubt that the excellent work you have already started, and the splendid record you have already made here in Peterborough will be continued and upheld by the speedy completion of the 93rd Battalion," said Prof. Keirstead, in opening.

"The world was in a great conflict between light and darkness, and he prayed that the God who had been the guard of the British Empire in the past, would see that no accident happened to bring disaster to the Allied forces. The cause of the civilization of the future was being fought to the death on the sunny plains of Belgium and France. The speaker took the audience with him, in imagination, to the battlefields of Europe, over the scenes of the great battles that have been and are being fought in the cause of freedom.

"This is the Way."

"Religion is bound up in our cause," said the speaker, who felt that a recruiting meeting on Sunday night would be unappropriate without an element of religion. Every time he sees a body of men in khaki marching by he felt that every man was his brother, and he thought he could hear the voice of God, the Heavenly Father, saying:

"This is the way—walk in it!" Each time he came in contact with the soldiers, something raised a feeling of hope in his heart and an expression of thankfulness that we are in this cause, came to his lips.

Sixteen of his pupils enlisted one night, not long ago, eight of whom were going through for Ministers of the Gospel. He honoured the soldiers he saw about him in uniform for several reasons. It had been said that three things make a man remarkable—courage, power of sacrifice and leadership. He honoured the soldiers for their courage. He honoured them again, because they were soldiers, representing the power of government, and holding the welfare of the race in their hands. He honoured them further because they were Canadian soldiers, and Imperial soldiers. Of all the services of the world the reputation of the British Army was not to be challenged for valour in the field and kindness to the conquered foe. The Imperial army, with the Canadian soldiers as part of it, had in the present war sustained all its dearly-won traditions. The Canadian soldier was to be honoured, too, because of the fact that he was bringing Canada and the Motherland closer together. The Motherland and the Dominion, so closely united, in ideals, in religion in institutions, and customs, were by the soldier, being even more closely cemented by ties of blood, shed on a common battlefield in the common cause. Our co-operation with the Motherland in this war, had made us one nation in deed and in truth.

A Man of Peace.

Prof. Keirstead honoured those who were wearing khaki, the King's uniform, and was ready to honour all who would take it. In talking over enlisting with young men he had never made it a practice to say to them "You should go." But once they had reached that conclusion, and donned the khaki he was anxious to extend to him the warmest hand of fellowship.

"I am a man of peace," said the speaker, "and yet my only son is training for military service." Other sons of other professors at the McMaster University were going or had gone overseas. He asked God's blessing on every man fighting in the ranks of the allied armies. Concluding, Professor Keirstead said that while in peace humility became a man, yet when the nation became embroiled in a conflict in defence of righteousness, then it was time to forget those qualities so becoming in times of peace, and to summon to our aid our every ounce of resolution and manhood to take up arms against the enemy, in the cause that was right.

Pte. Hills.

Pte. Hills' appearance on the platform was greeted with cheers. He wore a pair of ordinary blue overalls, strapped over the shoulders and in lieu of a coat, a thick grey sweater enveloped him. But in spite of the incongruity of his costume for such an occasion, he was given the welcome he deserved and was accorded an attentive hearing.

Pte. Hills of Brockville left his home, parents and "girl" to enlist with the 1st contingent in Montreal. He told of the convoy of warships that escorted the Canadians to Salisbury Plains, to which camping ground he referred to as a "flower bed." When the men of the 1st contingent got to the continent they were met by gruesome sights of the tortured non-combatant inhabitants of Belgium and part of France.

Men Were Needed.

"If we don't get the men we're not going to win" was the recruiting slogan of Pte. Hills. When the 1st contingent at Langemarck needed reinforcements, the men who should have come to their aid were walking the streets and playing baseball in the cities and towns of Canada. The young men in the banks leave their pen and ink to peep out of the window at the 93rd Battalion as it marches by. These young men should get into khaki. "Unless we get the men we're going to be squashed. How would you like that?" was the plea.

Young men were walking the streets of Peterborough to-day, frequenting the pool-rooms, and taking in the theatres with never a thought for their comrades at the front who were lying out under the stars each night, with their guns close at hand Unless the men enlisted soon conscription was sure to come. "I wouldn't go the front with men that had to be conscripted into a regiment," concluded Pte. Hills, while loud applause showed that this sentiment found much favour with the audience.

Little Girl Tells The Story, etc.

Miss Tully brought her as far as Hunter Street. It was a cold day She tried to walk home, but couldn't. A man drove her home in a sleigh Mrs. Brown took her into a store first to get warm. The reason she couldn't walk was because her feet were too sore. When she got home her mother took her clothes off, gave her a bath and put her to bed. She was home all day and at night was taken to the hospital.

At this part in the proceedings the clothes worn home by the child were shown. Her underclothes and outer garments were in a filthy condition. She stated that they were the same she had worn out and they had never been changed.

Whipped Her With Broom.

To Mr. Gordon, witness said that the day she first saw Miss Tully she had gone up to a lady's house on Dennistoun Avenue. The lady gave her a pair of stockings and a pair of goves, the same which were exhibited in Court. She never had her feet frozen before this winter. Her brother had his foot frozen that day. It was quite a while after she went out to Miss Tulley's home that her feet were frozen. She didn't see any man who cleaned out the barns. There was a man who cut wood. She carried all the wood into the house. Her fingers, she said, were frozen while working in the barn. Regarding her lunch which she carried to school she stated she didn't have pie but she remembered having cake once, in the bag. She had bread without butter; sometimes with black currant jam.

To the Magistrate the little girl said both women had whipped her across the back with the handle of the broom, many times. She didn't know why they had whipped her. She never had her supper with them She was always given her's, afterwards. She never had to wash dishes. She had to work outdoors.

One Year in The Mercer

Mrs. Irene Teabo's Transition From Liberty to the Confines of the Mercer Was Swift and Sure

To be arrested after the opening of this morning's Police Court, and given one year in the Mercer Reformatory, was the experience of Mrs. Irene Teabo. The latter was described in the Police Court record as a woman of uncertain habits. Miss Cecile Roy, who until recently claimed Montreal as her place of residence, was allowed out on suspended sentance. The latter resided with Mrs. Teabo at the corner of Bethune and Smith Streets. The evidence of the Roy girl was of such a nature as to warrant the arrest of Mrs. Teabo. This was effected while the Court was in session.

Cecile Roy was defended by Mr. H. R. Armstrong. Evidence as to the character of the two women was given by Patrol Sergeant Kidd and P. C. Lawrence.

Fined $2.00.

Fred Eastland, who as a "repeater," is in a class with William Kelly, was fined two dollars. The recruiting officers gave Eastland a visit while he was in the cells, but for some reason, the accused turned a deaf ear to their appeal.

New York Stock Market

Summary of To-day's Activities on the New York Stock Exchange

NEW YORK, April 3.—Of the leaders, Mexican Petroleum at 109 3-4, off 1-2 a point, was the only stock to show a loss in the opening quotation on the stock exchange to-day.

Marine Pref. opened at 71 1-2, up 3-4 of a point; Crucible at 93 up 3-8 of a point.

Kennecott copper was the most active stock on the list during the morning. Its sales were 29,000 shares at prices ranging from 58 1-8 to 59. Anaconda gained 3-4. Crucible was active, selling as high as 94 3-4. Industrial alcohol sold up 3 1-2 points to 150.

Coppers held their advances as attention switched to munition stocks, which were strong this afternoon. Industrial alcohol sold up nearly eight points to 164 1-4. Crucible climbed 96 and Baldwin to 109.

A CORRECTION.

In Saturday's Examiner and in the Weekly Examiner, Mr. R. C. Braund carried an advertisement in which 40c tea was quoted in 10 lb. lots at 24c. per pound. Mr. Braund had a number of inquiries for the tea at this figure. It was incorrectly quoted, as it should have read 30c. per pound. The copy received by this paper was a carbon copy, and the figures being indistinct, caused the error. 1d-1w.

A President's Neat Compliment

President Wilson, whose marriage to Mrs. Norman Galt temporarily turned the eyes of the American nation from the Huns and their ways, is noted for his great gallantry.

Not very long ago he was on a railway station when a very pretty girl dashed past him just as a train was moving out.

"Oh, dear!" she cried to Dr Wilson. "Is that the five o'clock train?"

"Yes, I'm afraid it is," he answered.

"Then," she exclaimed in despair, "I've missed it."

"No, no," said the President, bowing gallantly, "it would be much better to say that the train has missed you."

And while the pretty stranger tried to hide her blushes, the head of the United States disappeared into a waiting room.

INTOXICATING PILLS

German and Austrian Soldiers Are Fed With Them Before Battle

The mystery of the pills with which German and Austrian troops are provided has been elucidated. At first it was thought that they were intended to assuage hunger, the nourishing properties of a hearty meal being attributed to each pill. Examinations of German prisoners in Russia reveal the fact that these pills are for a different purpose. One pill contains sufficient narcotic or alcoholic properties to make a man slightly drunk. It stimulates him and fills him with a desire for battle. He feels for a relatively short time more vigorous.

Two of these pills are served out daily to the German soldiers, especially before an attack, or on those days when a particularly trying ordeal in the trenches is anticipated. When the pills are given alcoholic rations are cut off. Prolonged use of this new discovery of German chemists causes a feeling of discomfort and a weakening of the whole physical organism, so that soon the soldier has no keen relish for the dose.

No Trouble to Remove Superfluous Hair

(Toilet Tips)

It is an easy matter to rid the skin of objectionable hair or fuss, if you proceed as follows: Mix a paste with some water and a little powdered delatone, apply to hairy surface and in 2 or 3 minutes rub off, wash the skin and the hairs are gone. This method of banishing hairy growths is painless and does not mar the skin, but to avoid disappointment be certain to get real delatone.

No Fare in Warfare.

Captain Neil Lucas said at a recent dinner:

"The newspaper paragraphers tell us that there is no wax in sealing-wax, no cat in catgut, and no rice in rice paper."

Captain Lucas smiled.

"The Germans, thanks to our food blockade," he added, "now perceive that, by the same token, there is no fare in warfare."

Postwomen and Their Pay.

Nearly 2,000 temporary postwomen have been employed since the war began. This is in addition to over 1,000 part-time postwomen employed before the war in outlying rural districts. Postwomen in London receive starting pay of $5.50 a week for a full forty-eight-hour week, rising to $6.

SALONICA'S CONTRASTS

Salonica resembles most ports of the Eastern Mediterranean in being a picture of beauty from a distance and a sty of squalor near at hand. The sailors on board the warships in the gulf look at it through the morning mists and envy the soldiers who are quartered there. The soldiers stumble through its muddy, rough-paved, ill-smelling streets, and wonder why a sailor with a comfortable war room to live in, should ever want to come ashore. It is, in fact, a shatterely Levantine town, in a beautiful, mediaeval setting, comely in the mass, unpleasant in detail.

As you survey Salonica from the water she has a dignified air that accords well with her historical renown, being set in stately isolation upon the steep slopes of her bare hills and girdled by ruined but still massive walls that rise to a great Venetian citadel on the landward side. Graceful white minarets that the Turks built are sprinkled about among the houses, and the quay that is the chief street of the town, lined with picturesque Greek sailing craft, stretches for a full mile along the water's edge. But ashore, shut in by the narrow streets of the "Frank quarter," your vivid impressions of squalor and slovenli ness soon make you forget the graceful picture from the sea.

If there is anything which has been an asset to Britain in the struggle it is the fact that she came before the world as the champion of international right and the defender of international law.—Viscount Bryce.

ANY GENTLEMAN.

(Chicago Herald.)

Any gentleman can swear, get drunk, tell stories that would lower him in the estimation of his mother and wife, and go where he would be ashamed to be seen by the boy he loves—but he won't.

Any gentleman can drive a sharp bargain; he can take advantage of the other man's necessities; he can drive him into a corner; he can rub his hands gleefully and say to himself as he sees him writhe, "Business is business"—but he won't.

Any gentleman can kick a dog, abuse a horse, misuse a child, laugh at another man's mistakes and devilishly gloat over another man's failures—but he won't.

Any gentleman can grow cynical, sour and pessimistic; he can feel that everybody is against him and he against the world; he can scoff at all good things, ridicule religion and damn your judgment—but he don't.

Any gentleman can say harsh, sarcastic and cruel things; he can crush flowers and fertiline weeds; he can stab you with words—but he won't.

Any gentleman can make his old world, this topsy turvy, this greatly misunderstood world, as far better place because he chanced to pass along this way—and he will!

"DEAD" YEARS AGO; NOW ALIVE.

Pittsburg, April 1.—Dallas C. Byers, "former" millionaire clubman, member of a pioneer family in iron and steel, after "dying" in France about seven years ago, and being "buried" in this city following his indictment for conspiracy in connection with the aldermanic bribery cases, has been reported, for the second time, alive and well in France. According to the report, the "dead" steel manufacturer, is now an army contractor at Marseilles.

Why It Is Nut Brown.

If your Roman Meal Porridge tastes of flaxseed, it's a positive sign you've stirred it while boiling. Try again, and follow directions on package. Properly made, it's delicious.

Dr. Jackson's Roman Meal is nut brown because made from entire grains. To be highly nourishing, the dark parts must be used. These parts also carry the salts which prevent the blood from becoming acid. Roman Meal not only makes the best porridge obtainable, but can be served in all sorts of nourishing baked products. Try also the ready cooked form, known as Roman Meal Nuggets.

HEALTH

When Health Breaks

the cause is often found to be improper habits of living—principally wrong eating.

Many foods, especially white flour products, lack certain necessary mineral elements, phosphate of potash, etc. These valuable energizing elements are abundantly supplied by the field grains, but thrown out in the milling process to make the flour white.

The delicious, pure easily digested food

BABOO HUMOR.

East Indian Efforts to Speak English Are Sometimes Amusing.

Speaking in his "Reminiscences" of the letters he has received from Baboo correspondents, Dean Wellden says that he has been addressed as "Your Divine worship," "Your holyship," "My paternal old father," by one who signed himself "Your affiliated son," as "Civilised sir," and "Honored enormity." "I have even, as I was told, been spoken of as an 'honored and spanking sir.'

"Begging letters, perhaps, contain the most striking examples of more or less theological English. As when one Baboo writes 'This your humble, clotheless, and foodless petitioner begs humbly to be pardoned and gracefully beseech your worship to shelter him under the Ecclesia's mighty wings just to support with the family.' Or another begs in terms of a humble supplication for baptism, absolution, and a pair of shoes.

"There is not, I am afraid, much humor among the Bengalis, or it could not happen that the Lieutenant-Governor would be greeted by the word 'Welcome' on a large placard put up outside the jail, or the Viceroy by an inscription which evidently dated from the time of the late King Edward's visit, when he was Prince of Wales, to India—'Tell Mamma we are happy!'"

Among other items of Baboo humor cited by the Dean is the description of a native baker who labelled his shop thus "English loafer," because he made bread in the English fashion. The "very best" Baboo-ism that the Dean has heard, however, was that in which a house was described as "Only three or four miles away as the cock crows."

Mathematical Prizes.

The Academy of Sciences of Gottingen, Germany, holds $21,600 to be awarded to whomsoever can furnish a general proof of Fermat's theorem, which is to the effect that in the equation $x^n + y^n = z^n$ if n stands for an integer (whole number) greater than 2 no integral values can be found for x, y and z. This must be furnished before Sept. 1, 2007.

The French Academy of Sciences awards every five years the Jean Reynaud prize of $28,200 for the best original work in mathematics.

MOTHER! YOUR CHILD IS CROSS, FEVERISH, FROM CONSTIPATION

If Tongue is Coated, Breath Bad, Stomach Sour, Clean Liver and Bowels

Give "California Syrup of Figs" at once—a teaspoonful to-day often saves a sick child to-morrow.

If your little one is out-of-sorts, half-sick, isn't resting, eating and acting naturally—look, Mother! see if tongue is coated. This is a sure sign that its little stomach, liver and bowels are clogged with waste. When cross, irritable, feverish, stomach sour, breath bad or has stomach-ache, diarrhoea, sore throat, full of cold, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the constipated poison, undigested food and sour bile gently moves out of its little bowels without griping, and you have a well, playful child again.

Mothers can rest easy after giving this harmless "fruit laxative," because it never fails to cleanse the little one's liver and bowels and sweeten the stomach and they dearly love its pleasant taste. Full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups printed on each bottle.

Beware of counterfeit fig syrups. Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs", then see that it is made by the "California Fig Syrup Company."

Gin Pills
FOR THE KIDNEYS

How They Cure

PLESSISVILLE, QUE.

"I suffered from Kidney Trouble for several years, and tried numerous remedies and doctors' prescriptions with no permanent relief, my case being chronic. After seeing about Gin Pills, and as it is a well known fact that Juniper, without alcohol, is excellent for the Kidneys, I decided to try Gin Pills. One single pill gave me great relief. I have now taken four boxes of Gin Pills and find myself completely cured. No more bad humor—increase in weight—clear eyes—fresh color—more strength and vigor. This is what Gin Pills have done for me."

OUR SERIAL STORY

"Flower of the Gorse"

BY LOUIS TRACY

He almost chuckled. Things were going well, exceedingly well. She was ready to listen. But he managed to throw an emotional vibration into his voice. For the moment the man was a consummate actor; though indeed he had so much at stake that no extraordinary effort was called for.

"Thank you," he said, apparently groping in a fog of doubt, and forcing an unwilling parade of unpalatable and distressing facts. "It is something gained to feel that you have suspended judgment. You may or may not know already that Mrs. Carmac is your mother. I ask you to admit nothing; only to hear and weigh my statements dispassionately. Eighteen years ago your mother deserted you and your father in Paris. For some reason Mrs. Ingersoll married Carmac in her maiden name two years later. None of her associates ever guessed that the beautiful and distinguished Stella Fosdyke had been the wife of an unknown artist. Her secret was safe with your father. It would have gone to the grave with her but for the wreck of the yacht on a Breton reef, and the really phenomenal chance that brought her first husband and her child to her rescue. Even then nothing might have been revealed had not Carmac lost his life. Really, if one were superstitious, one would see the action of Providence in——"

"Please spare me any reference of that sort," broke in Yvonne. She could endure much; but she was not compelled to suffer this hypocritical scoundrel's blasphemy.

Raymond started. There was a new quality in her voice. She was regaining her self control, and at all costs he must prevent that. If he would win, he must adopt tactics of the whirlwind order.

"Forgive me," he said. "The thought has been so constantly in my mind of late that it came unbidden. But you leave me no choice. I must speak plainly, almost brutally. Let Rupert Fosdyke obtain the faintest shadow of the unquestionable facts, and he will not only drive your mother forth a pauper, but put such a complexion on the facts that she will be disgraced forever among her equals."

"Disgraced! Why? People are not disgraced because they obtain a divorce according to the laws of their own country."

"No; but they are punished severely if they offend against the social code. Mrs. Carmac's offence is against British law. She cannot deny it. The first person who lodges an information can upset her husband's will. Deprived of his money and its influence, what becomes of her."

Yvonne stood in the road as though she had been turned to stone, and perforce Raymond halted and faced her. There was not a strong light in that place. Some fifty yards away shone a lamp that marked a footbridge across the top of the harbour. Just beneath mingled its sweet waters with the tides. On the rocks, high above the river, a Calvary was silhouetted against the cold, clear blue of a starlit sky, and it needed no highly imaginative mind to picture the stark figure of the Christ gazing down compassionately on one of His creatures who was disobeying His ordinances.

Not far distant was the cheerful cafe frequented by artists and writers on summer evenings, where Madame Marechale, Julia Guillou's sister, dispensed cups of black coffee, and tiny glasses of liqueur cider, and epigrams—each excellent in their way. In a flash the notion presented itself to Yvonne's overburdened mind that the pleasant intimacy of those mild revels was being banned by some malign influence which had its living agent in the diminutive creature now confronting her. The empty right sleeve of Raymond's overcoat added to his lop-sided appearance. The black figure, sharply outlined against the white road and the luminous mist rising from the river, was almost ghoul-like in its ungainliness. She could see the Calvary. Raymond had turned his back on it. Instantly she found in him the personification of the impenitent thief.

But she had her wits about her now. Life was becoming too complex in its issues that a girl should handle them alone. No matter what the outcome, her father must take control; but before going to him she must probe this miscreant's full intent.

"Do you imply that you are the person who may lodge an information?" she said, with a calmness of tone that sounded bizarre to her own ears.

"No, no. That is the last thing I would think of," protested Raymond heatedly.

"Or that you feel compelled to acquaint Rupert Fosdyke with his rights as his uncle's heir?"

"He has no rights. His uncle has cast him off deliberately. He is an unscrupulous roue—witness his heartless philandering with your friend Madeleine!"

"In that event, why have you made revelations to me, which, if true, cannot fail to be hurtful?"

"I want to become your loyal ally in shielding your mother from the consequences of her past mistakes."

"I am almost powerless, Mr. Raymond. Mrs. Carmac will go from Pont Aven soon. I remain with my father. What sort of alliance can you and I form that will protect or benefit her?"

Raymond's small eyes blazed with sudden fire. She had actually helped him to surmount the stiffest barrier. "The best and most enduring of all," he said thickly. "Marry me! Why not? You are free. I shall be a devoted husband. Your slightest wish will be my law. You will not be separated from your parents, with either of whom you can dwell for such periods as you think fit. Marry me, and every ill now threatening your mother will dissolve into thin air!"

At that crisis the image of Laurence Tollemache obliterated that of the little man with the grating voice, and Yvonne could have laughed aloud. But she kept her head. The naive habit of thought induced by close communion with her Breton friends stood her in good stead then, when a false move might precipitate she knew not what ills.

"Is that the price of your silence?" she said, and the clear, precise enunciation recalled her mother in every syllable.

"That is not a fair way to put it," was the hoarse answer; for the strain was beginning to tell, even on Raymond's nerves of steel.

"Let me hear how you put it," she went on mercilessly.

"We would be making a compact to our mutual advantage," he said. "I would gain a beautiful and accomplished wife; you would inherit your mother's millions. We would unite in protecting her and punishing Rupert Fosdyke."

"I see," she said, with an air of careful consideration. "You do not want an answer to-night, I suppose?"

"Time is pressing—horribly pressing."

"In that respect time must stand still until to-morrow. We shall meet then."

She went off without any attempt at bidding him farewell. Raymond glared after her fixedly. He was annoyed, almost discomfited, but not disheartened. He had taken the step that counts. She knew now what lay at the back of his projects, and that was a long stride toward the goal. He was so deeply absorbed in reckoning the pros and cons of every word Yvonne had spoken that he failed to see Tollemache standing outside Julia's until close on him. Even then he could not find his tongue; so he merely grinned. Thus might a fiend gloat over a soul in peril. Was there none to help? Raymond, at any rate, saw a clear road. He was most affable to the parter who was waiting to assist him in undressing. For a man with a broken arm he had struck a shrewd blow in Pont Aven that night.

CHAPTER XIII.

Showing How Tollemache Took Charge.

Yvonne found her father hunched up in his accustomed chair. He was smoking, and brooding, his gaze centred in the pine logs crackling on the hearth. Thus had she found him each night since his return from Concarneau. He, seldom without a book after daylight failed unless some crony called in for a chat, had not opened a book during many days. He had the aspect of a man crushed by misery. It was borne in on his daughter that he was slowly yielding under an intolerable strain: yet it had become her bitter portion to add materially to a load carried so uncomplainingly.

He looked up as she entered, and essayed a welcoming smile which conveyed a ghostly reminiscence of a joyous past now utterly remote. It cut her to the quick; but she strove to emulate his seeming nonchalance.

SMASHED THINGS UP.

Exploits of a British Submarine in Sea of Marmora.

Daring exploits in the Sea of Marmora that threw the Turks into a great panic are graphically described in a letter from a member of the crew, who is now a prisoner in Constantinople.

He says: "It is hopeless to try and give you a detailed account of it in a letter, but you can take it from me it was a fine show. We broke all previous records. Cochrane (the commander) was simply splendid. He went round the Sea of Marmora, leaving a trail of smoke and burning ships. We fairly shook things to the core.

"We are the first submarine in history to bombard a place on shore under fire. I think we were under fire about three times a day on an average. We penetrated into all sorts of places, destroying shipping. We even shelled a railway and destroyed two troop trains. We shelled the ammunition, blocked the line, and then caught the trains as they came along.

"It was the funniest thing you can imagine to see the trains trying to hide behind the trees, but we caught them and smashed them all to blazes. Three ammunition wagons blew up with a terrible explosion. The soldiers, of course, got out and took cover and fired tons of ammunition at us, but we were out of range. Altogether we sank:

"One gunboat.

"Five steamers (one of 3,000 tons.)

"Seventeen large sailing vessels.

"We destroyed two trains, one railway embankment, and a few who fired on us got it in the neck for doing so. We also dived up to Constantinople and fired a torpedo at the wharf and arsenal where there were a lot of ammunition lighters. There was a most terrific explosion which shook the boat, although we were one and a quarter miles away.

"We had a small duel with a gunboat one day on the surface, but drove her off, although she fired about 200 rounds from her two guns. Afterwards we were left alone, and everything ran like blazes when we appeared anywhere. The only drawback was that we all had dysentery.

"Two men nearly died, and Halifax, the second officer, and a seaman got badly burnt setting fire to a steamer, and so Cochrane and I had to keep watch all the time, and by the time the twenty-four days were up we were absolutely done up. What Halifax went through down below, suffering agonies for three weeks with his burnt feet, I don't know. It must have been hell.

"Poor fellow, we had no trouble going up, but when we came down we had an awful time, as the Turks had rigged up all sorts of nets and things to catch us, and we got mixed up in them, and also got foul of mines three times.

"The reception we got when we steamed into harbor, where the French and English fleets and the troopships were lying, was great. I was so affected that I nearly shed tears. Everyone manned the rails and cheered us madly. I have never heard anything so fine. Just imagine us all dirty and unshaven, and the flag with bullet-holes all over it, and the conning-tower all dents from bullets and rusty, steaming through the lines and thousands of men cheering like mad.

Battleships, cruisers, torpedo-boats and transports—everyone along the rails, with the captains leading the cheers. Oh, it was great. Poor old Cochrane's eyes were full of tears as he saluted in reply. Then the wild howls of 'Are we downhearted?' and 'Well done, E7!' It was wonderful. I have always said that if we only get the chance we would do something—and we did."

Unfailing.

The prime minister sent for the wisest man in the land.

"I've got a lot of stuff about our country that I'd like to have known throughout the world, but it's pretty dry, and I'm afraid other people won't read it. What shall I do?"

"Put it in a book," said the sage, "and make the title 'Secret Diplomatic Memoirs.' They'll eat it up, statistics and all."

She Coughed Day and Night.

Mrs. Fred. Fenirs, Cedarville, Ont., writes: "I am sending you this letter telling what Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup did for me. Ten years ago I had a terrible cold. For days I could not speak above a whisper. I coughed day and night. One evening I was so bad I went down to our storekeeper, and when I went in he said, 'You better get something done for that cold of yours.' I told him, as well as I could, that I had just come to get a bottle of the best cough medicine he had. He told me Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup was the best he had, and said for me to take a little of it before I left the store. I took some, and in fifteen minutes I could speak as well as ever. I think 'Dr. Wood's' is the very best on the market."

That persistent cough must be gotten rid of immediately, for if it hangs on to you it may develop into some serious lung trouble, such as bronchitis, pneumonia and perhaps consumption.

Get rid of it by using Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. A remedy that has been on the market for twenty-five years. A remedy that cures when all others fail.

When you ask for "Dr. Wood's" see that you get what you ask for as there are many imitations on the market.

"Dr. Wood's" is put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees the trade mark; price, 25c and 50c.

"Great Expectations."

Charles Green, one of Dickens' illustrators, had two models, one of whom was a likable fellow, while the other, Gregory by name, was a greedy, self seeking character, always thinking of himself and his perquisities.

When Green was on his deathbed Gregory was very officious, and one day Green, noticing this, said to him:

"Oh, I haven't forgotten you, Gregory. Get you down in my will."

At the funeral Gregory invested in a wreath and duly attended to hear the will read.

Green had kept his word, and the model was not forgotten.

"To my dear friend Gregory," ran the document, "I leave, for his kindness to me, an illustrated edition of 'Great Expectations.'"

Why Mrs. Adams Was Not Home.

The Rev. Dr ——— was acknowledged a great ———— and he was also a close student. But he was no pastor and had a horror of making pastoral calls. One day he heard an address which convinced the dear old man that by not visiting his parishioners he had not perhaps fulfilled his duties as a spiritual leader. So he determined to call on each member of his church, and, taking the roster of the church, he decided to do it alphabetically. The first name was Mrs. Adams, so to Mrs. Adams' house resolutely went the faithful pastor next afternoon. But Mrs. Adams was not at home, said the maid.

"Not at home?" echoed the pastor.

"N-o-o, sir," answered the somewhat embarrassed girl.

But the pastor, not knowing why she was embarrassed, thought perhaps the girl was "fibbing," so he persisted.

"When will Mrs. Adams return?" he asked.

"I really don't know," answered the maid.

"You don't know?" asked the pastor. "Have you no idea about when?"

"Well, not exactly, doctor," replied the maid. "She may return by 5 o'clock. You see, she's at the cemetery burying her husband."—Ladies' Home Journal.

For Boots or Bedding?

His car had broken down. It was 10 o'clock at night. The rain was beginning to drizzle. Dash it, bust it and thrice blow it!

There was an inn near by. It was only just an inn, but it was an inn. The landlord growled when he asked for a room, but at last conceded it. They put his motor in the garage among the mangel wurzels.

He didn't have any supper. He just looked at it. Then he went up to bed.

A minute later he was leaning over the balustrade.

"Landlord!" he yelled. "Landlord! Do you think I'm going to clean my own boots?"

"Wot's up?" called back mine host.

"What's up? Why, what's that boot polishing pad on my bed for?"

"Polishin' pad!" roared back the landlord. "That's not a polishin' pad, young feller. That's the pillow!"—London Scraps.

Teacher—Tommy, you should comb your hair before you come to school. Tommy—Ain't got no comb. Teacher—Then borrow your father's. Tommy—Father ain't got no comb neither. Teacher—Absurd! Doesn't he comb his hair? Tommy—He ain't got no hair!—Lippincott's.

These Newspaper Yarns.

A worthy old dame of New England once invited her husband's attention to what seemed to her a curious item in the journal she was looking at. "Listen to this," said she, reading.

"The Mary H. Barker of Gloucester reports that she saw two whales, a cow and a calf, floating off Cape Cod the day before yesterday."

"Well, what about it?" asked the husband.

"Only this," replied his spouse. "I can understand about the two whales, but what beats me is how the cow and the calf got way out there."—Lippincott's.

A Useful Remedy.

Little four-year-old Billy was visiting his neighbor, Jerry. Billy showed every evidence of a bad cold. Jerry's mother asked with grave solicitude, "Doesn't your mother give you anything for your cold, Billy?" whereupon Billy answered, feeling in all his pockets at once, "Yes, ma'am; she gives me a clean handkerchief."—Lippincott's.

The Racking Pains of Sciatic Rheumatism

Were Well-nigh Unbearable—After Five Years of Suffering Cure Was Effected by Dr. Chase's Medicines

For downright excruciating pain few ailments can be compared to sciatic rheumatism. Since this condition of the sciatic nerve denotes exhaustion of the nervous system the logical cure is found in the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food to nourish the starved nerves back to health and vigor.

Reports are continually coming in to us regarding the splendid results obtained in the treatment of sciatic rheumatism by using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food after each meal and Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills occasionally as a means of arousing the action of the liver, kidneys and bowels and thereby keeping the system freed of pain causing poisonous impurities.

Mr. W. J. Talbot, Edenwold, Sask., writes: "It is a great pleasure for me to recommend Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills and Nerve Food as a cure for Sciatic Rheumatism. The pain I have suffered has been well-nigh unbearable. It would start in the hips and run down the legs to the toes, gradually getting worse. The nerves contract until one is practically useless. My doctor tried many different treatments, but could only afford relief for a time.

"For about five years I was subject to this trouble with severe attacks which would last about two months. The last attack I had was shortened to two weeks by the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills and Nerve Food. This treatment was continued until I was satisfied that the cure was lasting."

This statement is endorsed by Mr. H. E. Wooley, J.P.

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, 50 cents a box, six for $2.50. Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills 25 cents a box, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Company, Limited, Toronto.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

LADY'S KIMONO.

By Anabel Worthington.

7089

Whatever the real reason, the fact remains that we give but a very small share of consideration to the kimono, and yet this very personal part of our wardrobe serves us when we are tired, not well and when nothing else will satisfy a mood that protests against our "dressing." It may be because no one outside the home sees it that we are not enthusiastic over its make, still this "comfy garment," allowing liberty to the arms with its full flaring sleeves and generosity of lines in general, aids us in being graceful and in having poise. A very pretty pattern is shown in the illustration, No. 7,089, and it will be to the advantage of all who see it to make a kimono after the pattern.

This design appeals because of a back yoke to which the upper ends of the skirt back of the kimono are gathered. A belt across the back at the waist line confines the folds that drape below the waist. In the front a simulated yoke is formed with braid or bias banding used in trimming. There is a neat collar in the inlay style with this banding. The cuffs of the short sleeves are similarly trimmed, as also the pocket in either skirt front. A strip from neck to hem finishes the front edges of the kimono.

The pattern is cut in sizes 36, 40 and 44 inches bust measure. To make in size 36, using 36 inch material, will require 3 yards, and 6¾ yards braid or banding.

To obtain the pattern, send ——— to the office of this publication.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 10 cents, or 2 for 25c.

Address—The Examiner Pattern Service, The Examiner, Peterborough.

TRIED TO CUT CABLE.

British Commander Gave His Life in Gallant Effort.

How Lieutenant Commander Edgar Christopher Cookson, in command of the British gunboat Comet, during the advance up the Tigris river, attempted single handed to cut a steel cable which the Turks had stretched across the river as an obstruction is vividly told by a letter which one of the crew wrote to his mother and which was recently published in the English newspapers. While trying to cut the cable the gallant commander was shot seven times and died soon after reaching the deck of his vessel again. For ...s gallantry he received the Victoria cross.

In his letter the seaman explains that the Turks were heavily entrenched not far from Ali Gharbi. "During the time that we were bombarding them," he writes, "some of our troops and cavalry went inland to try to surround them. They nearly succeeded, but found the enemy a little too strong, though they captured 1,600 prisoners and about twenty guns. Just as it was getting dark our seaplane dropped on to the water alongside us and told Lieutenant Commander Cookson that the Turks were on the run.

"A little farther up the river they had placed obstructions so that we could not pass without clearing them away, giving them time to get away. This turned out to be the liveliest time I have had since the fighting started. Commander Cookson decided to go up and clear this obstruction and then give chase to the Turks. It was very dark when we started off with the Shaitan and Sumana following.

"When we got around the head of land the Turks opened fire with rifles, but we steamed right up to the obstruction. The Turks were then close enough to throw hand bombs, but luckily none of them reached the deck of the ship. The obstruction turned out to be a big cable stretched across the river with dhows made fast to it. An attempt was made to sink the centre dhow with gunfire, but when this failed the commander ordered that we steam alongside of it.

"Commander Cookson, when he saw that the boat could not be sunk by firing, took an ax and leaped over the bows of the Comet on to the dhow. He chopped at the cable until he had to turn back, he was so badly wounded. He was shot in seven places, and when we dragged him back aboard his last words were: 'I am done. It is a failure. Return at full speed.' He never spoke afterward. We had six wounded, but none seriously.

"During that time we had not been silent. We fired at them with guns and rifles, and the Shaitan and the Sumana were also blazing away. Our troops ashore said it was a lovely sight to see the vessels with all their guns working. We must have frightened the Turks, because on going up again at daybreak after burying our officer we found that they had cleared out and retired farther up the river. We steamed after them, and when we reached Kut-el-Amara we found the cavalry there. This is the first place to which the army has got before the navy. Subsequently we received orders to pursue the flying Turks, and we forced the enemy to leave several dhows laden with stores, provisions, and ammunition."

Cure for Snake Bite.

The efficacy of plantain juice as an antidote to snake bite, was demonstrated in Colombo, recently, in presence of a large gathering, including doctors, by Mr. Obeyesekere, says The Times of Ceylon. He liberated a cobra from a gunny bag face to face with a valuable bull-terrier, which the demonstrator's confidence in his cure led him to experiment upon. The dog, however, broke the cobra's back after a ten minutes' fight, during which he had succeeded in evading its fangs. The bull-terrier was then held off, and a village dog was brought in, and was severely bitten by the snake. It howled with pain, and collapsed in a few minutes. The dog was then given some plantain juice freshly expressed from some young trees of no particular variety, and when about a breakfast cup had been administered, the dog began to revive. Within half an hour it was on its feet, and the doctors present were satisfied that it had got over the effects of the poison.

How the Gargle Was Taken.

The Rev. J. A. Sharrock, in "South Indian Missions," relates the following incident illustrating the difficulties of medical missionaries: An old woman came with a relaxed throat to Mrs. Caldwell (wife of Bishop Caldwell), who gave her a gargle in a bottle and told her to go home, throw her head well back, put it in her mouth and keep it there as long as possible.

After a day or two the old woman returned, complaining that she was no better and that her neck ached terribly. When asked if she had strictly carried out the instructions, she said, "Yes; I threw my head well back and put the bottle into my mouth and held it there till my neck was almost ready to break!"

Alkali Makes Soap Bad For Washing Hair

Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali, which is very injurious, as it dries the scalp and makes the hair brittle.

The best thing to use is just plain mulsified cocoanut oil, for this is pure and entirely greaseless. It's very cheap, and beats the most expensive soaps or anything else all to pieces. You can get this at any drug store, and a few ounces will last the whole family for months.

Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in, about a teaspoonful is all that is required. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, cleanses thoroughly, and rinses out easily. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and is soft, fresh looking, bright, fluffy, wavy and easy to handle. Besides, it loosens and takes out every particle of dust, dirt and dandruff.

Are you aware that an ointment applied to the skin is absorbed into the system just as surely as medicine that is swallowed? It is! You see, therefore, how necessary it is we should use a pure ointment; and the purest you can get for yourself and your children is Zam-Buk.

Dr. Scott, the great English analyst, says: "I have analysed Zam-Buk, and have no hesitation in certifying its purity."

There is another reason why you should prefer Zam-Buk. It is of such a refined nature that it can penetrate to the very seat of skin diseases; whereas ordinary ointments, owing to their coarse ingredients, remain on the surface skin. Skin diseases, like plants, have their "roots." Zam-Buk can get down to the very root of the disease, kill the germs and thus effect lasting cures.

There is nothing like Zam-Buk for ending eczema, old sores, or eruptions; nothing that can so quickly draw out the soreness of a cut, burn or scald. Try it!

Proof. Mrs. A. J. Cameron of Melita, Man., writes: "My little son's head and hands were completely covered with eczema. I tried numerous ointments, and he was under doctor's treatment for some time, but nothing would cure him. Then I tried Zam-Buk. After a week's treatment I noticed a marked improvement, and perseverance with Zam-Buk resulted in a complete and permanent cure."

All druggists and stores 50c. box or Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, for price. Send 1c. stamp for free trial box.

O'Connell as "Counsellor."

His Honor Judge Parry recalls some stories of "Daniel O'Connell—Counsellor" in The Cornhill. In a case at Cork, O'Connell was successful with a bold, if somewhat hazardous, ruse. The prisoner, whose name was James, was indicted for murder, and the chief Crown witness swore to finding the prisoner's hat near the scene of the murder.

He was very emphatic that the hat belonged to James. "Now," said O'Connell to the witness on cross-examination, "you are quite sure about this hat?" "I am," replied the witness. "Let me look at it again," said O'Connell, taking it from the witness and examining it carefully. He then looked inside, and spelled J-a-m-e-s. "Now, do you mean to tell the Court and jury this name was in the hat when you found it?" "I do, on my oath," replied the witness. "Did you see the name, then?" "I did—surely." "This is the same hat, no mistake about it?" "Och, no mistake—'tis his hat." "And all you have sworn is as true as that?" "Quite." "Now you may go down," said O'Connell, sternly. "My lord, there is an end of this case—there is no name whatever in the hat." The result was a prompt acquittal.

Why an Alias?

One afternoon when the Duke of Edinburgh and Sir Arthur Sullivan, having finished a duet, were sitting down to a homely "dish of tea" provided by Mrs. Sullivan, the composer's mother, it suddenly occurred to her to start the subject of family names and titles, which puzzled the good lady considerably.

"Sir," she said, "your family name is Guelph."

"My dear mother"—began Arthur.

"But it is, isn't it?" she persisted.

"Certainly!" replied the duke, much amused. "What's the matter with it, Mrs. Sullivan?"

"Oh, nothing," returned the excellent old lady musingly. "Only I can't understand why you don't call yourself by your proper name."

Arthur wanted to explain to her, but the duke would not allow him to.

"There's nothing to be ashamed of in the name of Guelph Mrs. Sullivan," he said gravely.

"That's exactly what I say," persisted Arthur's mother: "nothing whatever as far as I know, and, that being so, why you should not call yourself by it I can't understand."—F. C. Burnand's "Records and Reminiscences."

Work for 200,000 Refugees.

More than 200,000 Belgian refugees have found shelter in England since the invasion of their country by the Germans and have settled down. Many of them have been absorbed in British industries.

While the business of taking care of this great number of refugees proved a great puzzle to the authorities at the beginning of the war, it is now being dealt with in the most complete manner and the special homes which had been opened in various parts of the country for the fugitives from Belgium are being rapidly closed down.

Most difficult to fit into the scheme of things are the professional men—lawyers, artists, architects, etc. A certain proportion of these, however, have adapted themselves to the situation, and are occupied in cutting out soldiers' clothes and in various unskilled branches of munition work. So great is the demand for labor today in Great Britain that only those who really have not the capacity to "do their bit" are idle.

AUSTRALIA'S GLORY.

Spartan Valor of Her Soldiers on the Blood-Drenched Soil of Gallipoli

"When the history of the war comes to be written with clearness and authority I think I can say without boasting that the part played by the Australian nation and by Australian soldiers will contribute a glorious chapter." The speaker was William Hughes, labor premier of Australia, who has been in Canada on his way to London.

"We have done all we can," he said, "and we are going to continue doing so as time goes on. At the present time Australia has 140,000 men at the front. She has 245,000 men under arms, and by spring she will have enlisted 300,000 men. When you remember that this army is recruited from a population of 5,000,000 and does not include our naval force I think you will admit that we have not been slow in doing our share. It is true we failed at Gallipoli, but at least we failed gloriously. I cannot speak of the valor of our Australian lads without choking with emotion. The immortal charge of the Light Brigade must pale forever before that which was made by the Eighth Australian Light Horse right up to the muzzles of the Turkish guns. They received their order to charge the foe 10 hours in advance. They knew that for most of them it meant death. And when the word came they went out—and died. They did not get very far. The colonel got the furthest. He fell at 50 yards. Out of 500 who went out only 15 survived.

"We must look back to the gray dawn of history before we find a parallel for that. The Spartans at Thermopylae fought a battle that was the nearest to it; and their story will be told long after the pyramids will have crumbled to dust. But I think that the deeds of the citizen soldiery of Australia at Gallipoli must at least be equally imperishable.

"There is no discontent in Australia. The only effect of the retirement from Gallipoli was to steel the heart of every Australian to go on with this fight.

"We in Australia have always believed in preparedness. The people of the British empire should go down on their knees and thank God that there were men in England who turned a deaf ear to the little navy pacifists. And I believe that if England had been as well prepared on land as on sea there would have been no war.

"Australia has been able to do what she has because as the cornerstone of her democratic edifice she has a system of compulsory military training. It was only in this way that we were able to turn out the officers and non-commissioned officers we required to equip and command our forces. No nation can remain free unless its citizens are willing to sacrifice something to keep it free. It is not enough to be willing to defend the country; citizens should be able to defend it. We cannot wholly trust to volunteers.

"Every man should be compelled to do his share in maintaining the liberty of his country."

Keeps 1,000,000 Busy.

According to an official statement to the British House of Commons there are more than a million persons now engaged in the British navy and in various branches of naval work.

The return states that the navy proper had 146,000 officers and men when the war started, which number has now increased to 330,000, with the authority granted for a further increase to 350,000 officers and men, besides 67,000 naval reserves. There are also 85,000 men engaged in work at dockyards and other naval establishments and several times that number on Admiralty work under contract and sub-contract.

Besides these, the return specifies men engaged in getting coal for the fleet, dockside workers, and civilian crews of colliers, oilers, mine sweepers, supply ships, etc., and in addition men and women engaged in making clothing and preparing food for the fleet.

The return states that "for every man in the navy, of whom there are something like 300,000, there are certainly two persons and possibly even three at work on ship construction, repairing and contributing to the general efficiency and fighting ability of the fleet."

Zangwill's Pun.

One of the wittiest of British literary men is Mr. Israel Zangwill, who as an after-dinner speaker has few rivals. Shortly after he was married Mr. Zangwill went with his wife to America, where at a well-known New York club they were entertained by some prominent citizens. After the dinner an admiral who was present proposed Mr. Zangwill's health, and remarked that it was a pity they could not claim him as a citizen of the United States. "Oh," said Mr. Zangwill with a smile, "but I do belong to one of the United States, through my wife, by marriage." Everyone was much puzzled, for Mrs. Zangwill was certainly English; but it was she herself who explained the mystery. "It was a joke," she said, sadly; "he does belong to the united state—the married state. Do you see?"

EAT WITHOUT FEAR OF INDIGESTION OR SOUR, ACID STOMACH

Instant Relief! "Pape's Diapepsin" Ends Your Stomach Trouble Forever

Wonder what upset your stomach—which portion of the food did the damage—do you? Well, don't bother. If your stomach is in a revolt; if sour, gassy and upset, and what you just ate has fermented into stubborn lumps; head dizzy and aches; belch gases and acids and eructate undigested food, breath foul, tongue coated—just take a little Pape's Diapepsin and in five minutes you wonder what became of the indigestion and distress.

Millions of men and women to-day know that it is needless to have a bad stomach. A little Diapepsin occasionally keeps this delicate organ regulated and they eat their favourite foods without fear.

If your stomach doesn't take care of your liberal limit without rebellion; if your food is a damage instead of a help, remember the quickest, surest, most harmless relief is Pape's Diapepsin which costs only fifty cents for a large case at drug stores. It's truly wonderful—it digests food and sets things straight, so gently and easily that it is really astonishing. Please, for your sake, don't go on and on with a weak, disordered stomach; it's so unnecessary.

A Scottish Ghost Story.

The young Grenadier Guardsman, Sir George Houstoun-Boswell, who is reported "missing, believed killed," is a wealthy Berwickshire landowner and a scion of an ancient Scottish family. A weird ghost story is associated with Allanbank, the residence inherited by him from his ancestors, the extinct Stuart Baronets. Allanbank remained empty for a number of years because it was haunted by an apparition known as "Pearlin Jean," so called because she wore that kind of lace on her dress. "Pearlin Jean" was a novice in a Continental convent when the first Baronet, Sir Robert Stuart, fell in love with her. Sir Robert deserted her, and the girl flung herself under the wheels of his carriage, and was killed. When the faithless lover returned to Allanbank he was horrified by visions of the girl. Seven ministers were called in to lay "Pearlin Jean," but her spirit would not rest.

Westminster's Famous Window.

The east window of St. Margaret's, Westminster, London, which has been removed to a place of safety in view of Zeppelin raids, has a particularly interesting history. It was made at Gouda, in Holland, and was presented by the magistrates of Dort to Henry VIII. for the chapel of Whitehall Palace. The King, however, gave it to Waltham Abbey. The glass, of which the blues and greens are remarkably striking, suffered sundry removals and vicissitudes, and at one time was buried to escape the zeal of the Puritans. Eventually it was bought by the churchwarden of St. Margaret's for 400 guineas.

TO REMOVE DANDRUFF

Get a 25-cent bottle of Danderine at any drug store, pour a little into your hand and rub well into the scalp with the finger tips. By morning most, if not all, of this awful scurf will have disappeared. Two or three applications will destroy every bit of dandruff; stop scalp itching and falling hair.

The Musical Cook.

Sir Frederick Bridge, the famous organist of Westminster Abbey, who compiled the music for the Wesleyan hymn-book, confesses that he received much assistance in his work from Mrs. Rider, his cook for thirty years, who was a life-long Wesleyan. "Occasionally," says Sir Frederick, "I was in a difficulty about one of the traditional Wesleyan tunes, and I used to go to the dinner lift, and call down to Mrs. Rider in the kitchen, 'Do you know this hymn?' 'Yes,' she would reply. 'Would you please hum it to me?' And my cook would sing it up the lift, and many times she thus sang to me I added to the hymn book just as she sang them.

"Mrs. Rider," says Sir Frederick, "was my cook for thirty years, and I never once prevented her from going to chapel, and she never objected to me going to the Abbey. We observed a sort of benevolent neutrality."

Heavy Bombardment But No Infantry Attacks Near Verdun

Germans and French Engage in Fierce Artillery Duels ---French Gunners Bombard German Positions at Several Points---French May Have to Evacuate Village of Bethincourt.

LARGE ENEMY FORCES ON BRITISH FRONT

LONDON, April 4.—French troops holding the fortified village of Bethencourt ten miles northwest of Verdun, are three-fourths surrounded by Germans, and under terrific bombardment by the German artillery. It is believed they will evacuate the position before many hours.

The French position on the west bank of the Meuse has again become serious. French successes in the fighting around Vaux village yesterday were important but did not offset the German gain on a two-mile front northwest of Verdun.

For nearly a week the Germans have been shelling Hill 304, the keystone of the French outer defences, in this region day and night. Steady streams of shells have been playing upon the slopes and summits, wrecking French trenches and searching out French Batteries.

French gains in yesterday's fighting near the village of Vaux have confirmed the belief of English military men that the Crown Prince will never win Verdun from the northeastern front. Since the capture of Douaumont fort and village the Germans have made no important progress on this front, though they have sacrificed thousands of men in attempts to take Fort Vaux.

News of the presence of large German forces on the British front in Flanders and Northern France, reported in to-day's despatches from correspondents at the front, confirmed previous reports from Dutch sources.

Since the beginning of the Verdun offensive the Germans, though stripping their lines elsewhere, have held large forces opposite Gen. Haig's army, fearing a British offensive.

The German War Office admitted that British troops have recaptured a mine crater south of St. Eloi, taken by the Germans on March 28.

German Prisoners Are Bitter Against Kaiser

Special to The Examiner:

PARIS, France, April 3 (Delayed)—A vivid impression of the state of mind now prevailing among German troops is given by a correspondent who had an interview with an aviation captain recently returned from Verdun. "Many German prisoners," he stated, "blame the Kaiser personally for war. A most striking instance is that of a big lieutenant captured at Avocourt. His knee was smashed by a bullet and his men killed. He kept repeating in broken French "Kaiser couchon" (pig of a Kaiser.)

"While officers generally are extremely loyal other Germans are pronounced in the denunciation of the Emperor. Men captured are now as bitter as deserters. We never credit statements of deserters for such men disgrace themselves and their country, bu the sentiment shown by men taken in battle furnish a good indication of the spirit of revolt growing in Germany."

U. S. Cabinet To Discuss Situation

Special to The Examiner:

WASHINGTON, April 4.—When the Cabinet met to-day it faced a dearth of definite information regarding recent disasters to ships carrying Americans.

Cabinet members declared to-day the Government has not receded from its position taken emmediately following the news of the wrecking of the Sussex and Englishman, that no steps will be considered too drastic if is proved a German submarine is responsible.

PARIS, April 4.—The Germans shelled the French front northwest of Verdun violently throughout last night, but made no infantry attacks. The bombardment was particularly heavy around Malancourt and Avocourt.

On the east bank of the Meuse, French artillery heavily cannonaded the German front from Douaumont to Vaux village.

In the Argonne, French artillery cannonaded German organizations.

East of LePre-Tre wood, 45 miles southeast of Verdun, French infantry fire dispersed a strong German reconnoitring party.

25 Millions a Day For War Expenditure

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, April 4.—In introducing the budget in the Commons this afternoon, Chancellor of the Exchequor McKenna said he assumed the war would last at least "the entire financial year," ending March, 1917. The budget introduced by the Government to-day estimated expenditures for war at about 25 million dollars daily, the figure suggested in estimates made earlier in the year.

McKenna said England had assisted her Allies, during the year ending March 31, 1916, by loans aggregating about one billon five hundred millions.

The country's indebtedness is now about ten billion seven hundred millions.

The budget expenditures under the Government estimate totalled about one and a half billions. Revenues were estimated at something more than that.

Last year's deficit, McKenna said, was about 56 millions. It was made good by borrowing money. On increase in this deficit during the coming year is inevitable he told the Commons.

"Britain, however, begins the current year with a substantial asset, consisting of unrealized American securities, recently mobilized by the Government," he said.

The tax on access profits on war munitions was raised to sixty per cent. by the measures introduced by the Government. Mineral waters are taxed and the tax on automobile and motor cycle licenses is doubled or tribled, according to hose power, and the use to which they are put.

McKenna said a second budget will be introduced before July 31, and that new taxes may be proposed at that time.

BERLIN, via Sayville by wireless, April 4.—Zeppelins made another raid, on the south-east coast of England last night, threwing explosive bombs down upon the fortifications of Great Yarmouth, the Admiralty announced this afternoon. The Zeppelins returned safely, though heavily shelled.

"No report of a raid on England by Zeppelins last night has come from London, though the British censor passed accounts of raids on English coast Friday, Saturday and Sunday nights.

BERLIN, April 4.—The Greek government has requested the allies to withdraw all military establishments from the town of Salonika, according to Athens despatches to-day.

SPENT 10 MONTHS IN HOSPITAL AFTER WOUND AT YPRES

Private Sam Mills a Veteran and Permanently Disabled in His Eighteenth Year Arrived in Peterborough Yesterday

HOPES TO FIND WORK HE WILL BE ABLE TO DO

Ten long months in a chain of military hospitals in England nursed Private Sam Mills of the 2nd Battalion back to something of his former health and vigour, and enabled him to return yesterday to this city, where he had enlisted with the first Peterborough contingent. He was injured at the very outset of the battle of Langemarck early in the morning of April 23rd, 1915. A plunging, short advance of about 30 or 40 yards was the limit of Private Mills' participation in that engagement. He had covered that distance in the charge that quickly decimated the section that was Peterborough's, when a bullet struck him in the abdomen and ploughed through, grazing his spine. Stumbling a step or two unaware for the moment of his injury, he tried to carry on, but reeled in the next pace and fell. Conscious for the time being, he felt blood trickling from his wound and sensed it as a serious one. The field was swept with the enemy's fire. It seemed to be raining bullets and shrapnel. Lying there Private Mills saw the tide of battle pass, or as much of it as he could comprehend. He divested himself of his heavy kit and began to wriggle or crawl as best he could to a hedge. Finally he reached it. There were others behind it. Private Mills didn't know who they were or how they had come there. In the afternoon he was carried back to the rear. Followed first aid and field hospital attention. But his real hospital experience dates from Sunday, April 25th. Ten months later, February 25th, he was discharged from the last of a dozen hospitals in which he had received varied surgical treatment, and at all times the best of attention and unstinted kindness.

Permanent Disability.

Private Mills is listed as permanently disabled. He has received his discharge and has been before the pension board at Quebec, and is now awaiting its decision. His back was weakened by the proximity of the bullet's passage to his spine. The injury has left a weakness that precludes the lifting of weights and employment at other heavy work. He had a chauffeur's license, but it is unlikely that he will be able to take up that employment because of the strain of sitting. However, Private Mills is cheery and optimistic and hopes to find something in which he can engage efficiently.

While in several hospitals he was visited by his parents, who reside in Bury, England, but when discharged was unable to go home as he had to come on to Canada to go before the several examining boards, and no leave was granted. It is his intention to make Canada and Peterborough his future home. He enlisted here from C company of the 57th Regiment. He was scarcely of age then, and is still only a youth in his eighteenth year.

Before the Germans decided that "the day" had come, in other words before the war broke out, Private Mills was a close friend and a protege of the late Sergt.-Major Fred Howarth, who mthe boy's father and family knew well in Bury. In the 2nd Battalion he was Sergt.-Major Howarth's batman and was with him until the worst had passed on that fateful morning.

Private Mills saw Major Bennett and Private Cottrell fall at the commencement of the charge. Major Bennett appeared to have been hit in the abdomen. Cottrell lay quite close to young Mills. When the latter called to him to try for the hedge there was no response. Pri

PROMOTION—

The Commanding Officer has been pleased to make the following provisional promotion—

No. 192039—Pte F. Barnes, (staff) to be Acting Sergeant until further notice, April 4th.

J. R. R. MUNRO, Captain, Adjutant 93rd Overseas Battalion, C.E.F.

In a game that was as full of unexpected things as the "Sea pie" that often graces the boards at the Armouries, the Cooks of the 93rd Battalion defeated No. 6 Platoon in a soccer fixture last night by 2 goals to 1. The field was very "greasy," which suited the culinary experts nicely, and they were going away, in spite of the best efforts of Company Sergeant Major Calladine and his kickers. Chef Jackson was strongly in the limelight for the kitchen mechanics, ably assisted by "Laird" McKinlay, the pair pulling off some of the best conversational work of the season. The losers claim that Referee Coleman must have been hungry and let the cooks win accordingly, while the chefs say that he will be hungry from now on.

Winnipeg, Man., April 3.—Rioting took place Saturday night on Main Street and the neighborhood of the city police station, on Rupert street, following the arrest of a soldier by a policeman, an action which was much resented by the soldier's comrades, and by men of other battalions.

The trouble started at 7 o'clock, and continued intermittently until midnight, with the result that several soldiers and civilians were injured.

Col. Ruttan, D.O.C., finally turned out three companies and confined the mob to the cross streets. There was something in the nature of a resumption of rioting Sunday afternoon around the police station, when missles were thrown by soldiers and civilians, and many windows in the station smashed.

Following is a list of more or less seriously injured:

Private George Smith, fractured skull, condition grave; Sergt. E. Langford, internal injuries; Bugler Wood, bruised and cut; Pte. McKay, injured knee, battered face and cuts; J. F. Norton, president of the Norton Land Company, cuts on the head.

Military opinion is that the trouble started from the uncalled-for police intereference in arresting a military police officer, together with the soldier he had in charge.

A military inquiry was held and sittings of both License and Police Comissioners are taking place to-day.

The excitement of Saturday night's disturbance has died down and conditions are perfectly normal.

As a precautionary measure, all local troops are to-day confined to their parade grounds, except such as are employed on the usual garrison of the best combination warkxxfiffffff duty.

OVERSEAS CLUB MEMBERS, ATTENTION.

There will be no meeting of the Tobacco Fund committee on Tuesday, but there will be a special meeting of all those interested in forming a local branch of the Overseas Club, on Friday evening at 8 p.m. in the Bank of Montreal chambers. Members of the Tobacco Fund committee are asked to keep this date open. All those with collection books or who have contributions for the Tobacco Fund are asked to kindly turn them in on Friday as we are falling short on our regular monthly subscriptions.

COUNCIL REDUCES FEE FOR CIGARETTE LICENSE

PTE. SAM A. MILLS,
Peterborough member of the 2nd Battalion, who arrived home from the front yesterday after ten months in hospital.

This Will Extend the Sale of Cigarettes Over a Larger Area—Three Hundred Dollars Worth Sold at the Armouries Each Month—By-laws Passed.

COUNCIL MEETING

"A good, decent, clean pipe and a package of tobacco hurts no man." Thus spoke Ald. Dobbin when the question of reducing the cost of cigarette licenses came before last night's meeting of the City Council. The present license fee is forty dollars a year. The new fee as established by the Council last evening will be twenty dollars. Ald. Dobbin was prepared to support a license fee of ten dollars. Mr. Oscar Matchett, who headed a deputation of local tobacconists, pointed out that a large number of men have left the city. Besides this the authorities at the armouries are supplying cigarettes to the soldiers. Not having to pay excise duty enables the authorities to retail the ten cent brands of cigarettes at three for a quarter. About three hundred dollars worth of cigarettes are sold at the armouries each month. The speaker produced figures which indicated a falling off in the sale of cigarettes. He was of the opinion that if the present license fee was continued only five or six dollars would take out a license, whereas at present seventeen licenses are issued at forty dollars. Both Mr. W. J. Spence and Mr. Bruce Patterson corroborated the statements of the previous speaker. They were also of the opinion that the city would make more money in the way of license fees by reducing the present fee.

A Repressive Measure.

Ald. Dobbin said that the original license fee of forty dollars was introduced as a repressive measure and for the purpose of confining the sale of cigarettes within a limited area. It has since been discovered that minors whom it was desired to protect can procure a package of cigarette papers and tobacco and can manufacture their own cigarettes.

Ald Stratton thought that the corner grocery had as much right to participate in the sale of cigarettes as the regular tobacconists. He moved that the license fee be fixed at twenty dollars.

The vote was held up long enough to give Ald Edgar a chance to make a speech. The latter concluded by suggesting a license fee of fifteen dollars This was seconded by Ald. Dobbin.

"You threw the hand down and now you are going to throw away four or five hundred dollars in the way of revenue," observed Ald. Duncan. The original motion fixing the license fee at twenty dollars was adopted much to the satisfaction of the members of the deputation who cut loose for a few high pressure smiles and bowed their way out.

Property Was Flooded.

Mr. David O'Connell, 451 Concession street, appeared before the Council in respect to his property, which he claimed was flooded as a result of the ditches not being cleaned out. Mr. O'Connell said he spoke to City Engineer Parsons about the matter and in reply the Engineer is alleged to have said: "I don't care whether you are flooded out or not." The matter was referred to the Board of Works. Ald. McIntyre, chairman of the Board, said he had already looked into the matter and would see that it was properly dealt with.

Petition Received.

A petition signed by Mr. Alex. Gibson and fifty-one others, protesting against the removal of Mr. T. A. S. Hay from the City Engineering Department, was received and referred to the Board of Works. The petition-

200 KILLED OR WOUNDED IN A FIRE IN FACTORY

Conflagration in a Powder Plant in Kent County, England, Results in Heavy Loss of Life

MANY EXPLOSIONS

LONDON, April 4.—Two hundred persons have been killed or injured in a fire in a powder factory in the County of Kent, it was officially announced to-day.

The fire broke out at the end of last week. It was accompanied by a series of explosions lasting for two hours, and of such violence that the sounds were heard in London.

The official statement said the fire was of accidental origin.

None of the localities mentioned in the German statement as being visited by Zeppelins were in the County of Kent.

Celebrated 60th Anniversary of Their Wedding

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Miller, Stewart Street, Have Passed a Lifetime Together—A Quiet Celebration

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Miller, 611 Stewart Street, were sixty years married, yesterday, April 3rd. This anniversary of their wedding was happily and quietly spent with their immediate relatives and friends at their residence, 611 Stewart Street. Among those who shared the joy of the day with Mr. and Mrs. Miller and who assembled at luncheon to commemorate their nuptial dinner, sixty years ago, were two daughters, Mrs. T. M. Caldwell and Miss Miller, Mr. Caldwell, Rev. R. G. Peever and Mrs. Peever, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Switzer, Mrs. Thos. Dobe, Miss Annie Dobe, and Mr. John Dobe of Emily; Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Cunningham and Miss Cunningham.

Mr. Miller was born in Brownsville N.Y., March 27th, 1834. When he was a boy the family crossed to Canada, coming on to Otonabee. Later he went to Emily and on April 3rd, 1856, he married Miss Sara Miller. Of the six children born to them two are living to-day. Mr. and Mrs. Miller appear well preserved in their advanced years. The fruits of an honoured life have been theirs, many friends with their affection and golden opinions, and the knowledge that their life together has been blessed with those riches which are not weighed in material balances. It is the hope of their friends that Mr. and Mrs. Miller may be spared to count other anniversaries of their wedding.

MUNICIPAL REPRESSION.

Ottawa threatens to secede from the province. Somebody has prepared a magnificent plan for making the capital city of the Dominion what Sir Wilfrid Laurier called "the Washington of the north." By the way, why "Washington of the north?" Why not stand on our own merits and reverse the ambition—make Washington 'the Ottawa of the south." Why not be ourselves and compare ourselves, in the way of achievement, with ourselves? Ottawa sees no way to accomplish her aims except by seceding from the province and erecting itself into a Federal District. It can then do as it likes with itself and spread and grow magnificent—by the help of the money of the people of the Dominion. The necessity of separation becomes more acute with the hostility of the Provincial Legislature to the demands of the capital city. Ottawa went to the Legislature for a city bill containing an ambitious programme of civic progress. Its bill was promptly knocked on the head. All Ottawa's advanced desires—city manager, proportional voting, lower taxation of improvements and franhcise for women property owners—were all eliminated from the city bill. The plea was that there must be uniformity in the Municipal Act, and that no municipality should have privilege that another should not have; that is the largest city, ambitions to better civic conditions should not be allowed to do so on a basis "not provided by the legislature for the smallest village." The things asked for by Ottawa wouldn't it seems, do harm to any other municipality. Would embodying what Ottawa demands in the municipal act, do any harm? It would give any village the power to do what Ottawa wants to do—have a city manager, have lower taxation for improvements and franhcise for women property owners. If the village did no need to exercise the power the general law would confer, no harm is done but the possession of these powers would help progressive urban communities to make progress. Our legislators are very cautious about giving municipalities powers to govern themselves in their own interests. If they took half as much interest in the careful and effective expenditure of the provincial revenue we should get better value for the money spent and have more left for useful public purposes. Municipal repression is not regarded as a good thing by the municipalities repressed. But Ottawa has a way out. If it is made part of a Federal district, it can snap its finger at "the big county council," as some sarcastic chap dubbed the Legislature. It can do as it likes and not be afflicted with prohibition or any other arid enactment.

"EVEN-HANDED JUSTICE."

The Toronto News, under the above heading, has the courage, or the effrontery, to say this:

Liberal journals demand that the country shall condemn the Dominion Government and suspend judgment on the Saskatchewan Government.

The News is declaring a virtual untruth. Liberal journals are not demanding that the country shall condemn the Dominion Government in the shell contract charges. The burden of the demand of Liberal journals, and of a very considerable number of Conservative journals, is that the Government should not condemn itself—that the Government should provide for ample and full investigation of charges that have the support of deplorably consistent prima facie evidence—if not of their truth, then at least, of their justification. The demand is that the Government shall not be condemned unheard, but that facilities should be provided for proving whether there is or is not ground for condemnation.

From the beginning there has been no demand for condemning the Government, or anybody else, unheard, but there has been a strong demand for investigation of charges in connection with waste and worse, in the matter of the furnishing of military supplies. In every case where investigation has been demanded and had, wrong and crookedness, grab and grafting have been proved. Every case amply justified the patriotism that demanded investigation. Investigation has been the burden of the demand, and all the condemnation Liberal journals have demanded in respect of "graft" charges is condemnation for persistently refusing investigation into charges of which consistent prima facie evidence existed. Liberal journals and Liberals have shown a laudable attitude towards the Government and given effect to the patriotic desire that the Government should help Canada do her duty in this war, by voting, without hesitation, vast sums for promoting our interests in helping to wage this war. It is only logical that the duty of the Liberals was to see that after voting money freely, it should not be wasted, diverted, or stolen. The same responsibility rested upon the Government and greater; for it had, and has, the power to provide as to whether the money voted was, or will be, well spent or badly wasted.

As to suspending judgment in the Saskatchewan case there is no need to demand that, except in respect of the actual investigation. There was no suspension of judgment needed. The Government promptly consented to, and insisted upon, prompt and rigid investigation into certain charges of wrong doing—"hew to the line, let the chips fall where they may," was the government motto. If the Dominion Government, in respect of the shell charges, had shown as good a disposition towards prompt and full investigation, there would be no place for the question of condemnation; they would have forestalled such condemnation by ready action. Refusal to grant, or submit to investigation—to revelation of the truth—is always suspicious; and refusal to grant anything but partial investigation is also suspicious.

A GOOD PRECEDENT.

If the Dominion Government desires to give full powers of investigation to Sir William Meredith and Mr. Justice Duff it might study, with profit, the instructions given to Sir Charles Davidson. The Davidson Commission speaks of an investigation:

"Concerning the purchase by and on behalf of the Government of Canada through whatever agency the purchase may have been effected of arms and munitions, implements, materials, horses, supplies, and other things for the purposes of the present war, and as to the expenditures and payments made or agreed to be made therefor."

We do not, of course, mean that the Meredith Commission should be a mere copy of the Davidson Commission. It is quite right to specify the charges made by Mr. Kyte. But the instructions should be broad enough to include all matters to which the Kyte charges may lead. It should not be possible to break off the thread of the inquiry by pointing to any limitation in the instructions.—Toronto Star.

Y. M. C. A. NEWS

Hereafter the Y.M.C.A. building will be open from 2 to 5 p.m. Sunday afternoon and will be in charge of a member of the Y.M.C.A. staff. The increase in the dormitory members and the number of strangers in the city has made this policy advisable. The building will not be open to boys under 16 years of age on Sunday unless by special invitation to Sunday meetings.

Messrs. Meserve, Galley and Roper are investigating sites around Peterborough that may be adapted to an overnight camp to be held from the 15th of May to the 1st of September this year. It is proposed to erect tents within easy walking, cycling or canoeing distance of Peterborough so that young men who are employed during the day time may have camp privileges over night. Young men who are intrested in an overnight camp are requested to confer with members of the staff.

It is proposed that a short schedule of bowling be organized for the soldiers to start on the completion of the Church League schedule. The Church Bowling League will complete its regular schedule and postponed games this week-end will close with a banquet on April 14.

The City Bowling League of the Association closed its winter schedule last evening with a match between picked teams, followed by a banquet served in the Association dining room by T. H. Hooper. Following the banquet a toast list was carried out with Pres. Philips in the chair. Every member present and Gen. Sec. Meserve were called on for speeches, although Mr. Jardine and his circus story carried off the palm. The pin boys were the guests of honour and each received a green back in recognition of faithful service rendered. League Secretary Bert Everett was given a vote of thanks for the excellent way in which he handled the business of the league. It was suggested by Mr. Bishop that a short schedule of a month or 6 weeks be drawn up. His suggestion was immediately followed and a new schedule will commence on April 10.

The members then adjourned from the dining room to the parlour where instrumental music was rendered by Mr. Langley, followed by popular songs in which Messrs. T. E. Pratt and F. C. Webber were the shining lights. The affair broke up at 11.30 by singing God Save the King.

POLITICAL CHIVALRY DEMANDS FAIR PLAY FOR SIR SAM HUGHES

The manliness of Hon. Geo. P. Graham in standing out for a fair hearing in the House of Commons for Gen. Sir Sam. Hughes will commend itself to the country at large. As Mr. Graham pointed out in the House, Sir Sam. Hughes is a member of Parliament, deserving of the faith of his colleagues until such time as he has been proven unworthy. It was notable that none of his erstwhile political brothers got on their feet to say a word for Sir Sam Panic-stricken, they were ready to throw him overboard in an effort to save the ship. And it remained for a Liberal, and a stern critic of Sir Sam, to ask for British fair play that is supposed to be the part of any man accused.

The whole flavour of the political dispatches printed in Government newspapers is suspiciously and suddenly anti-Hughes. He is condemned more severely, before he has had a hearing, by Borden organs than by the Liberal press. The Liberals have no occasion to seek a scapegoat. It is very apparent that the Conservatives are determined that Sir Sam Hughes should face the charges by himself; his leader and his fellow-members have washed their hands of him. There is something strange about this.

The country will not swallow a sugar-coated story to the effect that all the wisdom and all the knowledge of the shell committee was under the hat of Sir Sam Hughes; it will not believe that Sir Sam Hughes left the country without the reason being known to Sir Robert Borden; it will not believe that a party which showed such manifest pride in the shell committee and produced tons of literature in defence of it, was less wise of the scandalous connection of Allison & Co. with contracts running into $22,000,000. Already some Conservative members are crying for the scalp of Hughes to hang upon the belt of Borden for exhibition. Their eagerness to execute him politically is revolting; it is in strong contrast to the desire of the Liberals to give the man a fair chance to vindicate himself on the floor of the House.

Every good Canadian will hope that Sir Sam Hughes is able to vindicate himself. There is nothing to be gained by the Liberals in revealing that he has used his position in a manner to cast discredit upon his country; the very fact of the muddle of affairs at Ottawa, and the lack of strength in leadership, is enough to overthrow the Government the next time it goes to the polls. That is a self-evident fact. And as Sir Sam Hughes has been the foremost Canadian figure in the world eye it would be a serious blow to the country to have him disgraced. However, thanks to Hon. George P. Graham, he will have an opportunity of defending himself in the place where the charges were made and from his own seat in the House.

That the duel position of administrator of a department and head of the working force of that department should never have been taken by Sir Sam Hughes becomes more and more evident. He is not the real head of the Canadian militia. As minister, it was never necessary for him to have donned a uniform. He had no more right to assume command of the forces than Sir Robert Rogers would have to build all the postoffices in the country. Sir Sam should have stuck with his department and administered military affairs. The active command of troops should have been in the hands of the highest ranking officer. Instead Sir Sam has essayed both tasks and has, it is evident, handled patronage and shell contracts as a side issue. He has got things into a jumble on more than one occasion, and the laxity of the whole situation is revealed in sorry perspective. He was a brave figure and he will no doubt hold his pose to the last. If it be written that the mighty are to fall, Sir Sam will not be alone.—London Advertiser.

What Wise Men Say!

THAT Peterborough's population will be from 40 to 50,000 within 10 years. I believe it, and I also believe that my choice lots only a few rods outside the city limits, north or south, have no equal for safety and profit, and as every person does or should want to save at least a little of his income, this is the place, and now is the time to plant a few dollars right at home under your own eye and watch it grow. I am closing out my best lots and all my lots under value, my active day being past, I must quit, hence your opportunity. Every lot is a garden; buy now, then use or rent. Small cash deposit, then any reasonable terms desired. I have guided many to success. Come in, hear my advice, and you will be pleased.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

The Divorcing Umbrella

How It Settled the Trip to New York

By WILLIAM HUDD PARKE
Copyright by Frank A. Munsey Co.

Benjamin Franklin Todd sat down on the plush seat beside his wife of two hours and thirty-seven minutes, pulled down his white waistcoat to fit snugly that portion of his anatomy that it was intended to fit, and peered past Mrs. Benjamin Franklin Todd into the mystery of the darkening train shed.

"Huh!" he exclaimed, puffing out his chest proudly. "The folks back home said we couldn't get to N'York city alone, did they? I'll show 'em. Why, Pansy, the worst is over; we're on the right train, anyway."

"They don't know how smart my Benjy is," she averred coolingly. "Course we'll get there!"

Benjy assumed an expression of vast pride. He was bursting into speech when a sudden panicky thought forced the glance of his china blue eyes upward toward the baggage rack overhead.

He made a quick mental inventory of his and his bride's belongings.

"Pansy!" The shrill treble held a note of utter horror. "I forgot the umbrella!" he wailed.

A glance at his watch reassured him that the train would not leave for six minutes.

"Oh, Benjy! And it was our weddin' present from Uncle Elihu!"

"I'll get it. It's in the lunch room," he declared, with importance.

"You'll get left sure," worried his wife. "Don't go, Benjy. It'd be just awful to get separated so soon."

"Leave it to me," ordered the young husband. "If you're nervous while I'm gone just walk to the very last car of the train, an' you can see me comin' back."

He trotted through the car and hopped down the steps.

A boy in a shabby uniform and visored cap passed close by.

"Say, boy," piped Benjy, "want a job?"

"Don't mind," said the boy sadly.

"My umbrella. I left it in the restaurant. Upstairs, you know—across there. It's a weddin' present. You bring it here, an'—an' I'll fix you up, I will."

"A' right, a' right." The boy turned away wearily. "Wait here," he threw over his shoulder.

Benjy waited obediently, but nervously. When he was sure that the boy had been gone half an hour at least he looked at his watch. There was still a minute to spare. He grasped the hand rail of the last car and held on with grim determination. At any rate the train could not escape him.

A tall, gangling man in overalls, carrying a lantern and hammer, passed, regarding him curiously.

"Hey!" called Benjy. "Train fr N'York leave on this track?" he queried to make conversation.

"Yep—track 13."

The bridegroom shivered; he was naturally superstitious. The next moment he caught sight of the boy coming through the gate with the precious umbrella in his hand.

"Here y'are!" said the boy, holding out the umbrella, ferrule first.

Mr. Todd offered a dime, which was scornfully rejected, augmented the fee with a quarter and turned to fly, coming into violent contact with his gangling friend.

"Where ye goin'?"

"To catch my train!" gasped Benjy.

"Too late; it's went," said the tall one placidly.

The belated bridegroom's hands shot up and clutched the reassuring brass rail again.

"It ain't went! It ain't went!" he shrilled. "I've got shoit of it!"

With the contemptuous calmness of his class, the railroad man pulled Benjamin Franklin to one side and pointed. The car had been left.

"My wife! My wife!" shrieked the youthful husband wildly. "Oh, what will I do? I've lost my wife!"

"Come with me."

They raced across tracks, through car vestibules, up a flight of iron stairs and burst into a large room where a myriad of telegraph instruments chattered their unintelligible gossip all at once.

To Benjy they seemed to mock his plight in a gay abandon of meaningless sound. The overalls came to a halt beside a young man with a green shade over his eyes, whose fingers rested idly for a fraction of a second on his key.

"Herb, this kid's lost his mother—I mean his wife. She went out on 44. Shoot a message to Clancy, will yer? An' see 'f you c'n get 'em together again."

"All right; catch 'im at Brightside," Herb complied. "Name? Description?" he barked, glancing at Benjy.

"She—she's a big, tall girl," blurted her husband—"about two inches taller 'n me, an'"—

Herb snickered. "Go on," he ordered crisply.

"An' her name's Pansy Butterworth."

Herb was calling BS, BS. "Got 'em," he grunted.

"Wait! No, it ain't!" cried the forgetful husband. "It useter be Pansy Butterworth, but it's Mrs. Todd now—Mrs. Benjamin Franklin Todd. Have you got her on the end of the wire?" he asked anxiously, biting his finger nails.

"I've caught Clancy at Brightside. He'll answer from Newville."

"Better come outside," urged the guide. "Be about five minutes before you c'n get an answer."

Benjy walked out of the stuffy room in a daze, the tall man going off about his own affairs with the promise that he would return shortly.

The crisp air cleared Mr. Todd's brain somewhat, bringing a sharp realization of his unfortunate predicament. Of course Pansy would be found soon, but would he have the nerve to continue that perilous journey to New York after his ignominious blunder?

He clinched his pudgy fists and stamped one tiny foot in impotent anger.

His high friend jogged his elbow.

"Time for yer answer," he remarked.

Again they confronted Herb.

"Anything doin'?"

"Got Clancy all right. He says there is no such party on the train." Herb grabbed a pencil and became intensely interested in the dot and dashed remarks of a man down the line.

"I've lost her! I've lost her!"

A thick set, iron gray man strode into the room with an authoritative manner.

He glanced sharply at the tiny figure in his path.

"What's the trouble?" he rasped.

"My wife!" choked Benjy. "She's alone in this town an' I ain't with her to pertect her. It's all because the train pulled out on me an' I had shoit of it all the time, an'"—

"Here! Start that all over again," cut in the thick set man brusk1y.

Painfully Benjy retraced his declamatory steps and recited his tale of woe.

The human interest element of his story met with no response; his hearer was evidently thinking of more weighty practical matters.

"An' there I was," moaned the little fellow in conclusion, "holdin' on to the last car fr dear life an'—an' the train just busted in the middle an' up an' went."

The thick set man's frown evinced his sudden interest. Here was something worthy his attention. This was more important than interrupted honeymoons—something practical.

"Somebody call Barton and Manning," he ordered in a flintlike voice.

Two men in uniform appeared and fairly groveled before their irate chief.

"Say," he burst out, "that's the second time this week that you fellows have left a dead car on 13. What do you think we're running here—a civilized station or a guessing contest—hey? I don't suppose the car was placarded, hey?"

No answer except a confused murmur and the scuffling of feet.

"Suppose you left the doors unlocked, too, hey?"

The gangling car inspector had a perfectly good thought. It flashed forth, sending a look of almost human intelligence across his manlike countenance.

He nudged Benjy. "Be back in a minute," he whispered as he dived through the door.

Benjamin Franklin had an indistinct impression that he was overhearing two men settling theirs in no uncertain terms. But he had a decidedly more distinct impression of what he should say to Ma and Pa Butterworth when he returned to Bayfield—alone. Pa was not so bad; he was a sort of weak sister himself.

But Ma Butterworth! The tears coursed frankly down the bridegroom's round cheeks at the thought and dripped dolefully on his gala waistcoat.

His grim reverie was interrupted by the reappearance of the gangling one, who thrust his head in at the door.

"Found her!" he announced laconically.

An amazing leap brought Mr. Todd to the threshold. Two more landed him at the foot of the stairs. By dint of the utmost effort he kept the flying overalls in sight, over tracks again and through vestibules.

They came to a final stop beside the fatal car.

Benjy flew up the stairs—and paused. In the superexalted cerebration with which the next moment was fraught burst into refulgent being the reputation for impregnable strength that would be his forever—so far as his wife was concerned.

He opened the door and entered the car jauntily.

There, among her various belongings, sat Pansy in the sharp radiance cast through the car window by an arc light outside.

"Hello, Pansy!" he greeted her easily. "You all right?"

"When is this train goin' to start?" she asked, a bit anxiously.

"The train fr N'York? Oh, that's went," said Benjy in an offhand manner. "You don't care such an awful lot about goin' there, do you?"

"I don't much care where we are"—she glanced at him coyly—"so long as we're there together."

"That's the way I figured it out," said Benjy, his chest swelling perceptibly. "You see, I sent a boy fr the umbrella—here 'tis—an' he didn't come, an' I got nervous. When it got along about train time, course I knew that you'd come into the last car like I told you—an'—an'"— Benjy gave free rein to his imagination. "I told a railroad feller to uncouple it—I didn't want you to have to change again. He kinder kicked at first, but I slipped him—a—a quarter."

Pansy looked up, admiring, awestruck.

"My, but you're smart, Benjy!" she murmured, adopting then and there her lifelong mental attitude.

MY TIRED FEET ACHED FOR "TIZ"

Let your sore, swollen, aching feet spread out in a bath of "Tiz."

Just take your shoes off and then put those weary, shoe-crinkled, aching, burning, corn-pestered, bunion-tortured feet of yours in a "Tiz" bath. Your toes will wriggle with joy; they'll look up at you and almost talk and then they'll take another dive in that "Tiz" bath.

When your feet feel like lumps of lead — all tired out — just try "Tiz." It's grand—it's glorious. Your feet will dance with joy; also you will find all pain gone from corns, callouses and bunions.

There's nothing like "Tiz." It's the only remedy that draws out all the poisonous exudations which puff up your feet and cause foot torture.

Get a 25 cent box of "Tiz" at any drug or department store—don't wait. Ah! how glad your feet get; how comfortable your shoes feel. You can wear shoes a size smaller if you desire.

A Witty Attorney-General.

Sir Frederick Smith's activity in politics has brought back to recollection some of the oratorical "good things" which have helped to make the brilliant reputation that he has won so quickly.

In a debate on the death duties, for instance, he remarked: "One section of the community lives to enjoy old age pensions; another has to die to pay them."

Concerning the Liberals' licensing proposals of some years since he observed that thenceforward when you gave a publican sixpence you would receive in exchange one pennyworth of whisky and five pennyworth of Lloyd George.

In reply to an eminent Liberal Minister who had declined to "protect" Lord Milner, he asked: "Does the House recollect La Fontaine's insect which expired under the impression that it had afforded life-long protection to the lion in whose carcass its life had been spent?"

Respecting Old Age Pensions he got off the following: "The pious Liberals! They give you seven and sixpence a week for living with your own wife and ten shillings a week for living with somebody else's."

Sympathetic.

A recruit of the Highland Light Infantry, stationed at Malta, who spoke with a very broad accent, was sent by his color-sergeant to buy a note-book. Not knowing where to find a stationer's shop, he accosted a Maltese, who couldn't speak English, as follows:

"Me no' speakee Engleesh."

"Weel, weel, my mon," returned the recruit, "ye're nae the only ane; I canna mak' muckle o't mysel'!"

Could Not Stand

The Least Excitement.

Was So Weak and Run Down.

Many women become run down and worn out by their household cares and duties never ending, and sooner or later find themselves with shattered nerves and weak hearts.

When the heart becomes weak, and the nerves unstrung, it is impossible for a woman to look after her household or social duties. The least little exertion or excitement leaves her in an exhausted condition, and not fit to do anything.

On the first sign of any weakness of the heart or nerves, you will be wise if you start to take Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills.

This remedy will act directly on the disordered heart making it beat strong and regular, and will also invigorate and strengthen the nerves so as to make them steady and firm.

Mrs. J. A. Williams, Tillsonburg, Ont., writes: "I cannot speak too highly of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills. I suffered greatly with my nerves. I was so weak and run down, I could not stand the least excitement of any kind. I believe your Heart and Nerve Pills to be a valuable remedy for all sufferers from nervous trouble."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are the original remedy for all heart and nerve troubles. Price 50 cents per box, 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

The funeral of the late Mrs. Rosalie Schultz took place yesterday from the residence of her daughter, Mrs. Hergenroder, 84 Superior street, Brantford, to St. Mary's Church, where high Requiem Mass was said by Rev. Father Padden. Interment took place in St. Joseph's cemetery.

Mr. Harry Gainey, of Peterborough, and Mrs. Gainey, who is a daughter of the deceased, were present at the funeral.

JOHN FOSTER.

At the advanced age of 85 years John Foster, who had lived in Canada for 79 years, died yesterday at the residence of his son, Mr. D. H Foster, 4 Oaklands Avenue, Toronto.

Born in 1831 in County Monahan, Ireland, the late Mr. Foster came to Canada when six years of age with his parents, and settled on a farm near Peterborough. The family remained there for some years, and later moved to St. Marys, Ont., in 1859, where the deceased married Miss Elizabeth Hopkins of County Cavan, Ireland, who is still living at the age of 80. In 1886 the family moved to Toronto, where Mr. Foster had lived retired with his son until his death.

On January 6th, last Mr. and Mrs Foster celebrated the 56th anniversary of their wedding, and six years ago celebrated their golden wedding. While residing in St. Marys, the late Mr. Foster was a member of the Orange Order and always a staunch member of the Methodist Church. The late Mr. Foster, if he had lived until Thursday, would have celebrated his 86th birthday.

Surviving are his widow, three sons, William Foster of Chicago, Edward Foster of Montreal, and D. H. Foster of Toronto, and two daughters, Mrs. T. B. Williamson and Mrs. T. G. Dexter, both of Toronto.

MRS. JOSEPH STEWART.

After a brief illness, the death occurred last evening in Nicholls Hospital of Mrs. Joseph Stewart. The deceased was in her thirty-eighth year. Her maiden name was Blanche Metcalfe. Deceased was a daughter of Mr. William Metcalfe, formerly of Peterborough and now of Michigan, U. S. A. She was born in Murray township, near Colborne.

The late Mrs. Stewart was married in 1904. Besides a sorrowing husband deceased leaves three children. They are, named Bruce, Etta and Irene. The eldest is ten years of age. A father and one brother Edward Metcalfe of Smith township also survives.

Deceased was a member of George St. Methodist church. She was well known and highly respected and her death will be regretted by a wide circle of friends.

The funeral takes place on Thursday afternoon at two o'clock from the family residence, 280 Stewart street to Little Lake Cemetery. Rev. R. G. Peever will officiate.

LAWRENCE G. STEELE.

The death occurred of Mr. L. G. Steele, Lakefield on Monday, April 3rd at his residence, Bridge street. He was one of the eldest settlers of Lakefield having lived to the age of 82 years.

He was born in January in the year 1834 on a farm adjoining the village on which he lived till he moved to his late residence 39 years ago.

He was married in the year 1866 to Mary Charlton who predeceased him six years ago.

The late Mr. Steele was a great sportsman being a member of the Shawanaga Hunt Club. He took his hunt every fall, since a boy only missing last year. He was an Anglican in religion and a Conservative in politics.

He leaves to mourn his loss, one sister Mrs. Wm. Armstrong of Smith, two brothers, Robert of Oregon and Fred of Bobcaygeon. The funeral will be held on Wednesday at 3 o'clock to the Hillsdale cemetery, Lakefield.

SARAH A. PAGE.

Mrs. Sarah Ann Page, widow of the late Mr. Edwin Page, died last night in Belleville. Deceased was born in Kent, England in 1853, and came out to Canada some 10 years ago. For some time she resided in Peterborough, and for the past 4 years had lived in Belleville. Mrs. Page had been for years a member of the Methodist church. Her husband preceded her to the tomb eight years ago. Surviving the two sons and two daughters, namely, Wm. of Regina, Sask.; Edwin of Toronto; Mrs. George Noroliffe of Peterborough, and Mrs. Albert Cook of Belleville.

Making Up an Actor.

In making up an amateur actor should remember that as little paint as possible should be used, for, while it is easy to disguise by a thick mask of pigment, the heavier the makeup the more difficult it is to convey sensitive emotional variations by the changing expression of the face. If it is possible to arrange one's own hair in a way suitable to the character so much the better, for, though it may in no way seem more real than a wig, it will prove infinitely more comfortable. When the actor looks as much like the part as he possibly can without the aid of artificial disguise he begins to apply nose paste, paint and powder, obliterating one characteristic and accentuating another, painting the eyebrows out and redrawing them, changing the color of the skin, putting shadows around the eyes and sinister lines running from the nostrils. He adds a roughly shaped beard or mustache of crape hair if the character demands it.—Harper's Weekly.

Should Speak With Authority.

"One early morning on the quay of a northern port a crowd was waiting for a tender. There were well-dressed people, wharfside laborers, half-sober cane-cutters, and others, including myself.

"A pert little child in a high voice asked, 'Mummie, how old is God?' The mother rebuked her child, but a more sympathetic cane-cutter walked solemnly across the quay, laid his hand on the child's arm, and said, pointing to me, 'Missie, you ask that bloke in leggings. He's one of the Firm.'"

The Difference.

"Pa," asked Willie, "what's the difference between an invalid and a sick person?"

"An invalid, my son," answered pa, "has money."

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

SALVATION ARMY BAND CLAIM CIVIC RECOGNITION

Last Evening a Large Deputation Representing the Band Waited Upon the City Council With a Request for a Grant—Band Has Officiated on Many Public Occasions—Matter Has Been Referred to the Finance Committee.

The matter of giving a grant to the Salvation Army Band, or, to use Mr R. C. Braund's designation, "The men who play for the good of the community," was revived at last night's meeting of the City Council by the presence of a large deputation representing the Band. After some discussion the matter was referred to the Finance Committee.

Mr. Gandy, who acted as chief spokesman for the deputation, said that he felt that the Salvation Army Band was just as much entitled to a part of the citizens' money as was the 57th Regimental Band. He took exception to the assertion that the 57th Band was a "citizens' band," and claimed that such discrimination was unjust. During the past year or so the Band of the Salvation Army has done double the amount of work as compared with any other band.

The Home Guard.

About this time Ald. Galbraith entered the Council Chamber, and after posing for a few minutes for the benefit of the gallery, sat down.

Continuing, Mr. Gandy reminded the Council of its obligation to the Salvation Army Band. When the Home Guard was organized the Temple Band was frequently called upon to supply the music. A similar thing occurred when the Hydro lights were turned on the first time. The speaker enumerated a number of cases where the band had been requested to turn out and in each case the request was complied with, even though it often meant taking the men away from their work. At the outbreak of the war, the Band had a membership of forty. Thirty of these are now on the honour roll of the Canadian Expeditionary Forces.

Mr. R. C. Braund corroborated the remarks of the previous speaker. "I can hardly see how the members of the Council, representing the citizens, and spending the citizens money, could take the stand they have," said Mr. Braund. "The men play for the good of the community," he added.

Result ofof Rate Cutting.

In reply, His Worship Mayor Duff has said that the elimination of the usual grant to the Temple Band was one result of an endeavour to keep down the tax rate. The Council felt that all bands could be dispensed with and it was finally agreed to support one band only. With this object in view a grant of $460 was made to the 57th Band. The tax rate for the year has been struck and there is no appropriation for a grant to the Temple Band.

Ald. Duncan thought that the Temple Band was entitled to some consideration. He did not vote for a grant to the 57th Band and had the grant been withheld he would have taken the same stand towards the Temple Band. He did not think it was fair to recognise one and ignore the other. He moved that a grant of $300 be made to the Temple Band. This was seconded by Ald. Galbraith, and a few minutes later was defeated by an overwhelming majority. An amendment moved by Ald. Edgar, and seconded by Ald Dobbin to refer the matter to the Finance Committee, was carried.

A by-law authorizing a grant of $460 to the 57th Band was subsequently passed. Ald. Duncan moved an amendment on the third reading to have the by-law left over. This was defeated. Ald. Duncan was of the opinion that the grant should be divided up.

Taxes Will Not Be Remitted

Application of Mrs. Birdsall Was Refused by the Council —Accounts Passed

The following report, as submitted by the Finance Committee, was adopted at last night's session of the City Council:

That no action be taken on the application of Mrs. G. M. Birdsall, for remission of three months' taxes on 440 George Street, which had been used for recruiting and Patriotic Fund purposes.

That Mr. D. W. Dumble be again informed that he is in error in claiming that the City used the lot owned by himself and Mrs. Pearse.

That the Financial Secretary of the Salvation Army headquarters in Toronto be informed that owing to the many local demands this city cannot make any grant to the Army headquarters this year.

The the demand of the Roman Catholic Separate School Board for this year be paid in monthly instalments as requested by the Board.

That the membership fee of the City in the Ontario Municipal Association of $25.00, be paid.

An Extravagant Doctor Or a Wise One?

Ambitious Dr. Lydgate of "Middlemarch" may have been extravagant with his 2 horses, and servants and plate, and Policy of Life Insurance Most people now-a-days, however, would at least have called the Life Insurance Policy a necessity. The horses were sold, the servants dismissed, and the plate taken by the bailiff. The Life Insurance Policy alone stood at the last between Rosamond and penury. There have since been many Rosamonds of whom the same story might be told. Has the Rosamond of your home been adequately provided for? If not, her lot may be adequately assured by a Policy in

NEGLECTED TO PULL LEVER IN ALARM BOX, BUT TELEPHONED

Otherwise Small Blaze at Canada Metal Products Factory Might Have Been Serious—Watchman Took No Chances, Fortunately

When the watchman at the Canada Metal Products rushed from the building this morning to call the Fire Brigade, he broke the glass of the alarm box on Perry Street, opened the door, and hearing a bell sound concluded that everything was "jake" as the soldiers say. But he had neglected to pull down the lever which sends in the alarm and is, in fact, the key to the system. However, if the watchman is not an expert in fire alarm apparatus, he has a natural tendency to take every precaution, or of making sure that Garcia gets the message. Hence, he followed up the opening of the alarm box by telephoning to the Fire Hall to find out whether the alarm he had intended to send had been received. This was the first notification to the firemen, but practically no time was lost in reaching the building. The fire was caused by the heat from a gas oven setting fire to the oil soaked floor beside it. The firemen chopped out the double floors and examined the blaze to a small area. About $25 damage was reported. Chief Howard points out that every citizen should familiarise himself, and even herself with the method of operating the fire alarm boxes, especially remembering that the alarm is not sounded until the lever inside the door is pulled down.

LITTLE GIRL WAS GIVEN A LARGER LUNCH THAN THE SCHOOL TEACHER

Witnesses For the Defence in the Children's Aid Society Case—Girl Was Well Treated and Received Every Care According to Testimony.

JUDGMENT RESERVED

The evidence in the Children's Aid Society case against Mrs. W. J. Tully and Miss Edith Tully of Smith, charging them with neglect and abandonment of Evelyn Glover, a ten year old girl, was concluded this morning. Mr. G. N. Gordon, counsel for the defendant and Crown Attorney Hatton, summoning up the evidence just before court adjourned at noon.

His Honour reserved judgment until Monday morning.

High County Constable Cochrane.

High County Constable Cochrane, agent of the Children's Aid Society, was the first witness called for the defence at the afternoon session yesterday. As agent of the Society, he had visited the Glover home twice, following a report that the children were being ill nourished. The father was out of work. To a certain extent the children were lacking attention, but were not as bad as reported. They were too young to go to school.

Mrs. W. J. Tully.

Mrs. W. J. Tully, defendant, was next called. She said she lived on the second line of Smith. She had lived there forty years. She had never been in court before. The little Glover girl came to her home on January 18th with her daughter. It was a cold, windy day. When the child got into the house, she went up to the stove and put her feet in the oven. She had her supper with them. On different occasions men who were cutting wood for them had their meals with them. They all ate together. Evelyn started to school on the first of February. She usually rode with her daughter who had to go to town each day with milk. The day Evelyn came out, she noticed the stockings she wore had holes in the heels and toes. Witness' daughter gave here a good pair next morning.

When not going to school, the girl helped her with the chores, which consisted of cleaning the barn each day and feeding the stock. When she came out, she wore a pair of gloves but her daughter lent her her muff on the way out that day as her hands were cold. The child liked to throw down the straw. She would often play in the straw, which was quite smutty. In that way she would get quite dirty and black. She helped witness with the pulp machine in the barn. I wasn't hard to work.

Mrs. Tully stated that she had given the little girl considerable clothing including a dress, underwear, mits stockings and a night gown. As to her lunch for school she was sometimes given bread with jam, or with meat between it, as well as pie or cake. The first night she came she complained of sore feet and said she thought she had corns. Witness never heard any more of them until the day the school teacher examined them. That night Mrs. Tully was surprised to find her feet so sore. She bathed them and applied poultices, afterwards wrapping them in flannel. Witness asked her "when do you think your feet were frozen" She replied "They were sore when I came here."

Her clothes were washed every week. Her under garments were changed each week, the last time two days before she went home. As to the time she got up, it was always after six. Her daughter also gave her a tub and water to take a bath. Witness likewise denied the statement that the child's bed was never made. Mrs Tully made it every morning. The child was never whipped.

Furthermore, witness said, the child would never have been sent home had a letter not been received from her mother. They intended to have a doctor come out and examine her feet. She was a very good little girl the first few days, but after that she would not obey. She would say she had done things when she hadn't.

To Crown Attorney Hatton, Mrs Tully admitted that the child saved a few sticks of wood. She wanted to do it. She never heard her ask to go home, but she had heard her say that she would like to stay. The horse her daughter drove that day was a wild one. She told Evelyn before she left that her daughter would not be able to take her home as the horse would not cross the bridge. Evelyn replied that she would soon run home across the dam.

Wm. Matthews.

Wm. Matthews of the first line of Smith was called. He had cut wood for Mrs. Tully this winter. He had his dinner and tea there while working at the place. The little girl always ate with the rest of them. As far as he could see while there, the child was always used kindly by Mrs. and Miss Tully. He did the work in the stable.

Miss Carter.

Miss Robina Carter, the school teacher, was recalled for the defence. Witness said she was never present at any time when the child was whipped. She never heard her scream. She saw bread in the girl's lunch. It had some fruit between it. Miss Carter never had meals with the family, only very occasionally, and never with the little girl. She thought sometimes the little girl had her meals alone.

Mr. Bert Tully.

Mr. Bert Tully, a son of one of the defendants, was the first witness called at the openin gof court this morning. He was at his mother's from two to three times a week, during the stay of Evelyn Glover at the homestead. He saw the little girl several times. Twice he happened in when his mother, his sister and Evelyn Glover were at their meals. The barn was eighty yards from the house. The turnips were kept in the root house and the pulp machine was kept in a passage between the roothouse and the cows. He had been in the barn hundreds of times. Where the pulp machine was, it was cool enough on a cold day, but not sufficiently cold to freeze. His sister drove a spirited horse. It shied at street cars. He saw the little girl on the night she came over to his house. He noticed she walked "stubby" as though she did not have the proper use of her toes. He didn't notice her walking at any other time. The room over the kitchen was the warmest in the house. He had slept in it a good many years, but never found it cold.

Mrs. Bert Tully.

Mrs. Bert Tully was the next called. She had been to the Tully home twice during the little girl's stay. On one occasion the child sat in a rocking chair beside the stove. The other time she sat on the sofa. She appeared happy and contented. Regarding the horse Miss Tully drove she would say it was a very wild one.

Miss Tully Testifies.

Miss Tully, defendant, called, said she first saw Evelyn Glover on Saturday, January 15th. On the following Tuesday she and the little girl drove out home in a buggy. She told Mrs. Glover that the little girl would have to come over town and meet her. That night they all had supper together. Witness saw her to bed. She had no night apparel, and Miss Tully lent her a night gown. There were holes in the toes and heels of her stockings. Driving out Miss Tully gave the girl her muff to warm her hands. When they arrived at home the child complained of cold feet.

Miss Carter always had her tea at five o'clock. Miss Tully, her mother and the little girl had theirs at 5.30. She never remembered an occasion when the child ate alone. The arrangement with Mrs. Glover was that Evelyn should come out for a few days. If they were satisfied with her, and she liked the country, they would start her to school.

The little girl had said next morning after she came out, that her feet had been touched with frost earlier in the winter. Her brother's feet were also frosen. Regarding her lunches witness aways gave her either bread with butter on and meat, or bread without butter, with jam, and cake or pie. Her lunch was bigger than the school teacher's. She never chastised the child nor did she ever seen her whipped. The cow stable was warm. She never had to use mitts or gloves while at work in it.

Miss Tully stated that she had always seen that Evelyn's face and hands were washed before going to school. Once a week she was given a tub to take her bath. Several times she saw her mother bathing the child's feet. The child walked to the cutter the morning she went home. She never complained of her disability to walk. Witness brought the little girl as far as Hunter and Aylmer streets on Saturday, February 26th. Evelyn never complained of being cold and said she would quickly walk home. The horse was too wild to drive across the bridge. Miss Tully corroborated her mother's evidence as to the clothes they gave her.

Asking Evelyn one day, "Why didn't you tell us about your feet?" she replied that she didn't want to go home because her mother couldn't attend her. Regarding her clothing being changed, it was done every week, and her dirty clothes were washed.

To Crown Attorney Hatton, witness said that it was the boy she wanted and not Evelyn. When she learned that the lad's foot was frozen, she told Mrs. Glover Evelyn wouldn't do, but the child was anxious to go with her and she finally consented to take her.

This concluded the case for the defence.

Mrs. Glover.

In rebuttal, the Crown Attorney called Mrs. Robt. Glover, mother of the child. She reiterated her statement of Friday that it was the eleventh of January and not the eighteenth that Evelyn went to the country. She marked the date with an X in the almanac. She also marked the day she went to the hospital. She produced the almanac, showing how she had marked it.

Gruesome Spectacle Seen On Pepper Height in the Meuse Loop

PARIS, April 4.—A gruesome spectacle which may be seen night or day at Talou or on Pepper Height in the Meuse loop, west of Douaumont, is described by an officer who is posted at an advance blockhouse beyond the Douaumont-Vaux defence line.

Both hills remain forbidden ground on which a hurricane of French and German shells of all calibres descend without cessation literally smashing to fragments the bodies of the soldiers who fell there at the beginning of the battle of Verdun. The officer writes:

Through a loophole of the blockhouse I see clearly with the aid of field glasses what is happening on the two-knolls known as Pepper and Talou Hills. The soil seems to swell and then sink under the terrific concussion of numberless shells. Now and then the projectiles gash huge furrows out of the ground, throwing up clouds of dirt.

There is no living soul on these hills. Neither the Germans nor the French can retain a foothold on the slopes. The patrols which have tried to search the hills sleep their last sleep there.

"And what a frightful sleep! shells bursting near the bodies throw them high in the air. As seen through field glasses they seem to be perpetually suspended in the air owing to the indescribable palpitation of the hillside. Now and then limbs which have been torn off leap higher than before. Never was there such a dance of death as this.

Crazed by Bombardment.

"At the foot of the hills the French and the Germans have dug themselves in, waiting till it is possible to storm the summits. The Germans several times have tried to turn the positions, but always have been thrown back with hand bombs.

"Then men occupying these dug outs appear to be in a perpetual trance due to the explosion of the never ending cascade of shells. They are really crazed and the officers have the greatest difficulty in preventing them from delivering an assault on the German lines on the other side of the hills, which would be bound to fail.

"A week ago a sort of delirium seized every one and even the officers caught the contagion. By some freak the bombardment seemed to halt, but it was only a cruel illusion. The troops implored their officers to let them attack, and the latter finally allowed the first assaulting wave to go out.

German Students Will Be Barred

Will Not Be Entitled to Rhodes Scholarships in Future.

LONDON, March 30 (correspondence of The Associated Press)—The British Government is preparing a bill to eliminate provisions of the Rhodes Scholarship Trust for the endowment of German students coming to Oxford. Cecil Rhodes established fifteen scholarships of $1,250 each for young men of German birth, to be nominated by the German Emperor. These endowments, along with those for American students being created on his still unexplained, under the conviction that "a good understanding between England, the United States and Germany would secure the peace of the world, and educational relations form the strongest tie."

The Pall Mall Gazette, commenting on the pending alteration of the Rhodes bequest, remarks: "The cutting out of Germany from the famous bequest is a symbolic admission of the failure of the amiable philosophy of friendship between England and Germany, and an assurance must that the dreams associated with it are dead. The Rhodes scholarships were a competitious instance of our general disposition to be neighborly and to foster a common spirit of loyalty and mutual appreciation within the European family."

A Wise Mother's Story

Mothers and Daughters Read Carefully and Profit by It

"I am convinced," writes Mrs. A. B. Hopeford from St. John, "that a majority of young girls who die of consumption do so because their mothers neglected their health at the critical time when carefulness insures vigor and sound health. If a girl's health is neglected from her eleventh to sixteenth year her body will be weak and she becomes a ready victim of typhoid, anaemia and in many cases consumption itself. In her sixteenth year my youngest daughter showed signs of failing strength. Some dyspeptic troubles developed, her heart became weak and palpitation frightened her dreadfully. She was irregular in the important bodily functions and rapid loss in weight and a ruddy complexion pointed to a rapid decline. She disliked making her troubles known to our doctor, a feeling I felt I should respect, and so by good fortune I was led to use Ferrosone with most gratifying results. My neighbour next door, Mrs. Woods, had found Ferrosone so good in nervousness that she persuaded me that it would restore Flossie's health, and from the time the second box was commenced her improvement was constant. She is now a big, strong girl, ruddy and plump, able to study hard and to take her share of household duties. I am an earnest advocate of Ferrosone. We all use it now as a tonic as it is certainly woman's best friend."

All dealers sell Ferrosone, 50 cents per box or six boxes for $2.50; procure a supply to-day

LEGISLATURE REFUSED BERLIN'S PETITION TO CHANGE ITS NAME

Said Their Was No Provision in the Proposal For Its Submission to the People—Delegation Urged Change.

Examiner Special:

TORONTO, April 4.— The Private Bills committee of the Ontario Legislature today refused to permit the City of Berlin, Ont., to change its name to such other name as might be approved by the Corporation, on the ground that the proposal, as at present framed, made no provision for submitting the matter to the people. Large delegations of merchants and citizens from Berlin, however, including many of German decent, pointed out that the submission of the question to the people at this time might raise considerable racial strife.

The Private Bills committee was unanimous, however, in its decision, and this Ontario city will continue for the present, to bear the name of the capital of the Empire's arch enemy.

WAS GIVEN BENEFIT OF THE DOUBT

The conventional khaki was very much in evidence in this morning's police court. It even found its way into the prisoners' dock, where Corporal James Brill of the 156th Battalion, was confined as a result of a charge of common assault which was preferred against him. He pleaded not guilty, and after the evidence had been heard, was given the benefit of the doubt and released. He was defended by Capt. C. R. Widdifield of the 93rd Battalion. The complainant was Mrs. John McIlmoyle, 303 Louis street, who alleged that Brill entered the house late last evening and threatened to beat up her husband. The husband, it is claimed, resorted to the use of a chair, which may have accounted for Brill's somewhat battered appearance.

It appears that Corp. Brill was sent to Peterborough to take charge of a member of the 156th Battalion who was under detention here. Brill claimed that he entered the house in order to arrest his man, but the latter swore that he was arrested in the Grand Hotel.

When it looked as though the man whom Brill was to arrest might be called as a witness, Capt. Widdifield ordered his return to the armouries. Chief of Police Thompson succeeded in having him brought back to the court, and his evidence was anything but favourable to Capt. Widdifield's khaki clad client.

THREE DESERTERS WERE DROWNED

Special Cable to The Examiner:

WINNIPEG, Man., April 4.—Four American members of the 94th Overseas Battalion being recruited at Fort Frances, Ont., deserted yesterday, left their uniforms in a lumber yard and started to row across the river to the United States side. When nearly across, the boat struck a dead log and sank. Three of the men were drowned, and the fourth managed to reach the United States side. All bridges and the river front are now guarded to prevent further desertions.

Vote Will Be Taken To-night

Special to The Examiner.

OTTAWA, Ont., April 4.—Present indications are that a vote will be taken to-night on Sir Wilfrid's resolution demanding an investigation into all the workings of the late Canadian Shell Committee. The debate will likely be resumed by Sir Thos. White the first thing this afternoon, and with the exception of one hour, (Canadian Northern versus Hydro, from 8 to 9), the whole attention of the House wil lbe concentrated on the shell repolution thereafter.

Just what line he will take is not known. He has been absent, preparing his speech, with the help of Hon Arthur Meighen, Solicitor-General ever since Tuesday last.

It is expected, however, that he will dwell particularly upon the fact that the monies advanced by the Canadian Shell Committee are properly secured, and that fuses are actually being delivered, even if they are belated.

Interview With Lord Shaughnessy

MONTREAL, April 4.—When Lord Shaughnessy, president of the Canadian Pacific, was interviewed in connection with the death of his son, the Hon. A. T. Shaughnessy, who was killed at the front on Saturday, he said: "To his mother, myself and the family, the sacrifice is indeed cruel and almost overwhelming, but after all we are only passing through the same sad experience as thousands of others in every portion of the Empire. He had a sweet wife and two little children, and everything in the world to live for, but he recognized his duty and the attendant risk. If his example arouse a feeling of patriotism and responsiveness in those hundreds amongst us of military age, many of whom are without his family cares, who thus are through indifference, or because of bad leadership or petty local issues, have failed to assume their responsibility as citizens and subjects, we shall feel that there is additional compensation for the sacrifice."

Borden Gov't Good To C.N.R.
Another Gift of $35,000,000

Ottawa Hears That Sir William Mackenzie Has Got the Cabinet Commit'ed To It.

CORPORATIONS ON TOP

OTTAWA, April 3.—The Mackenzie-Mann end of the Borden Government requires the Ontario Conservative members to roll Adam Beck and the Hydro-Electric movement in the mud for the benefit of the Canadian Northern outfit. The pro-Mackenzie influence inside of the Borden Government is on top, and that the session will servative party up to a $35,000,000 hand-out for the Canadian Northern.

The Canadian Northern is knocking at the doors of the Dominion Treasury and keeps on knocking. The best informed opinion inside the party is that the corporationist element of the Borden Government close without the appearance of a ment have sufficient horse sense to real- Government proposal that Canada shall in some form or other aid the Canadian Northern to the extent of $35,000,000.

The Party is Disgusted

A few supporters of the Borden Government have sufficient horse sense to realize that all the Conservative voters of this country were not star boarders on the Canadian Northern special train that carried so many statesmen across the continent and back. These Conservatives are in a mood to put up a fight against any form of public aid to the Canadian Northern. They feel that the present ownership of the Canadian Northern should either make good or get out, and the country should not vote another dollar to preserve the proprietary interests of the present Canadian Northern Railway Co.

Wins a Hand-out.

Sir William Mackenzie has not won out without a struggle, but the report to-day is that Sir William has won out to the extent of getting the Borden Government committed to the policy of giving to the Canadian Northern another hand-out to the extent of $35,000,000.

King George Makes Personal Sacrifice

Retrenchment in Royal Household an Example to the Nation

LONDON, April 3.—The Chronicle says: "King George has set a magnificent example on his subjects. The generosity of the gift may be better appreciated when it is recalled that of £470,000 forming annual payments made to the King on the civil list, only £10,000 goes actually to their Majesties' privy purse.

It is well known that since the war began the King and Queen have given a lead of society in the observance of simple habits and restriction of luxurious expenditure. When war aspects of the liquor problem came to the fore, the King acted while statesmen hesitated, and by his voluntary exclusion of all alcoholic beverages from his household for the period of the war invitated a course which might have been even more fruitful than it has. The House of Commons has not so done, unfortunately, and has disgreditably declined to follow it.

Servant of Nation.

"The King's latest initiative shows him once more as a monarch who regards himself as the first servant of the nation, and it must inevitably make people ask how other servants of the nation propose to act."

vate Mills reached out to arouse him, but Cottrell was dead.

The trip to Canada was made on the Empress of Britain, which, with the Mauretania, has been withdrawn from transport service to Egypt and the Dardanelles. There were only ninety-eight men and fourteen officers on the Empress. Private Mills said that one could wander around the decks considerable distances before seeing any of the passengers. Every available bit of space was provided with bunks for Canadian troops going overseas. The Mauretania is being retransformed to a regular passenger and mail liner, and will be returned soon to the Atlantic trip. She was at Liverpool when the Empress sailed. Workmen were removing the bunks the soldiers had used on their way to Gallipoli and the signs of war were vanishing. Private Mills has been in Canada over a week, but has been detained in Quebec and Kingston by examining boards.

A Reception.

Pte. Mills arrived on the 5.30 G.T.R. train from Kingston last evening. News of his coming had reached some of the civic and military authorities with the result that a hastily arranged reception was tendered the young soldier. The brass and bugle bands of the 93rd Battalion who headed a detachment of the battalion who marched to the station. Most of the men who paraded were former members of the 57th Regiment and a number of them had belonged to C company, to which Pte. Mills had been attached. Among the latter were Comp. Q. M. S. Williams. Mayor Duffus, Ald. Edgar, Ald. Dobbin, Ald. Galbraith, Ald. McIntyre, City Clerk Armstrong, Chief of Police Thompany Sergt.-Major Hartshorn and son and other city officials were at the station to greet Pte. Mills. As the train came to a stop the 93rd Band played "Till the Boys Come Home." Pte. Mills was escorted to a waiting automobile with Mrs. Howarth, wife of Sergt.-Major Howarth who was killed at St. Julien. Other cars containing the civic officials, and all flying the flags of the allies followed, and a procession was formed at Charlotte street. As the car containing Pte. Mills passed the 93rd detachment the boys in khaki gave three hearty cheers and a tiger for the young soldier and then fell in behind the car as an escort. With both bands providing music the procession proceeded to the armouries, where Pte. Mills was warmly greeted by Lt.-Col. Johnston and a large number of the men of the battalion. Mayor Duffus called for three cheers for the returned hero and they were given with a will. Pte. Mills was then taken to the home of Mrs. Howarth on Albert street, with whom he had boarded some time previous to enlisting.

Religious Riot in Haverhill Got Away From Police

Special to The Examiner.

HAVERHILL, Mass., April 4.—After a whole night of rioting, fire alarms and head smashing by the police who were unable to cope with the situation, the militia was called out this morning and quilled the mobs which were at the pitch of frenzy, following the announcement that Dr. Leyden, calling himself the "American Luther of New Reformation," would expose Catholicism. Leyden did not get a chance and has fled.

By-laws Passed.

A by-law authorizing the borrowing of $200,000 for current ordinary expenditures was read a third time and passed. The by-law provides for the borrowing of such amounts as may be required until the first half of the taxes are paid.

A by-law authorizing a grant of five hundred dollars to the Peterborough Industrial Exhibition was approved.

The Peterborough Utilities Commission notified the Council of its willingness to renew the agreement for a supply of water to the city at a contract price of $1,500 a year.

At the suggestion of Ald. Stratton the matter was referred to the Finance committee of the City Council for further investigation.

The question of a rebate on the taxes chargeable to the Peterborough Hydraulic Company and amounting to $254.51, was also referred to the Finance committee with power to act. The amount named represents an overcharge in connection with the assessment.

Soldier Drowned Had Clearly Been Drinking

PORT HOPE, April 3.—Private Geo. William, a member of the 134th Battalion, was found drowned in a drain about three feet deep near the harbor Saturday. It is expected that he wandered down towards the lake early in the evening, and when leaving the sidewalk stumbled into the drain. He was not found until about 9 o'clock Saturday morning, and was lying face downwards, his head in a small pool of water. There was every indication that he had been drinking, an empty whisky bottle being at his side. He was about forty-five years of age, and came here from Ottawa, where his wife and family reside.

An inquest was opened yesterday afternoon, but adjourned until Tuesday evening, when the report of the post-mortem examination will be submitted. Every effort will be made by the authorities to apprehend the parties who are supplying liquor to the soldiers. The remains have been sent to Ottawa for interment.

German Spy May Remain in States

Doubtful If Von Der Goltz Can Be Taken Back to England.

WASHINGTON, April 3.—Franz Von Rintelen, a German held in England as a prisoner of war, has sent word to officials here that he can give testimony of value in prosecuting neutrality cases, and is willing to do so if permitted to come to the United States in custody, as was Horst Von Der Goltz.

It is generally understood British authorities would not be willing to let him cross to this country.

There is some speculation here as to how the Scotland Yard men will regain custody of Goltz after his testimony in connection with neutrality cases is finished. The British officers told the New York authorities they were giving up Von Der Goltz under an agreement that he would be returned to their keeping later. High officials said to-day they had heard of no such agreement, and doubt was expressed whether an understanding of that kind could legally be made.

Investigation of The Auburn Mills Clothing Contract

Discharged Employee Gives Evidence—Does Not Know What Specifications Call For

OTTAWA, April 3.—Further details as to the manner in which the Auburn Woollen Mills Company, Limited, of Peterborough, Ont., manufacturer of cloths used in khaki garments for the Canadian Militia Department, was given before the Davidson War Contracts Commission by George Grieves, of Peterborough, a former employee. Grieves charged that the company had commenced making garments of about 50 per cent. shoddy, almost as soon as their tender was accepted. Samples of the cloth were produced by counsel to the commission and handed to Grieves for examination, some of which, he declared, were fifty per cent. shoddy and others first-class material. Grieves on being questioned by Daniel O'Connell, K. C., of Peterborough, said he had full knowledge of the fact that the company had been using shoddy for many months, but had been under the impression they had secured permission to use cloth of inferior texture. He had no knowledge of the specifications of the department, but said good cloth should not contain cotton specks and he knew the mills had sent out thousands of yards of cloth of this kind.

Charles Burns, assistant director of contracts, in the Militia Department said the department had purchased 235,966 yards of khaki cloth from the Auburn Mills since the beginning of the war.

The hearing will continue to-morrow.

Gadski Would Destroy Munitions Factories

NEW YORK, April 3.—"Yes, I myself would blow up munition factories. I would give everything else and go from one plant to another, carrying ruin with me, if only I could warn the workers in time to save themselves. That I would do gladly and more—for Germany!"

Mme. Johanna Gadski of the Metropolitan Opera made this statement Friday night. Her heart is with the fatherland and she wants the world to know it. So frankly, too—is the heart of her husband, Herr Captain Hans Tauscher of the Kaiser's reserves.

But the Capt. says Madame, could not be a spy. His innate truthfulness is too great. He could not act the part. He could not do anything underhand.

Grand Pre-Easter Showing of Ladies' Ready-to-Wear - - Spring Gowns, Suits Coats, Skirts And Blouses

TO BE WELL DRESSED ON EASTER MORNING, you will surely want to see Barries' New and Notable Collection of Ladies' Outer Apparel, distinguished for its Exclusiveness and Individuality.

ADAPTABILITY We keep before us the personal preference of Mrs. Common-Sense, who wants a garment in harmony with her well understood liking—something adapted to her tastes; of Mrs. Sport, whose choice is the smartest stunning vogue of Mrs. Good-Taste, who prefers the refined distinction, which avoids extremes and represents her real individuality.

CO-OPERATION The need of this careful, thoughtful, consideration on our part for the personal preferences of the Ladies of Peterboro has spurred us to make extra efforts to secure such Exclusive Garments, designed to meet the varied tastes of our own constituency, and to offer them at prices considerably less than asked for by the Larger City Stores.

PREFERENCE We believe the Ladies of Peterboro can be trusted to co-operate with us in our ambitious aim and that they will see the necessity of buying at home and give preference to local enterprise, rather than bestowing their patronage out of the City.

You will be delighted with our Pre-Easter Selections of Dresses, Coats, Suits, Skirts and Blouses wherein are featured Fashion's most unmistakeable preferences on behalf of intelligent smart Dressers—showing all that is New and Modish, quite out of the ordinary.

Much of the Individuality of our Garments which appeal to women is to be found in the clever combination of rich fabrics with skilful designing and workmanship, fashioned with a proper regard for the individual figure.

Whether you purchase or not, you will enjoy a look at these Garments and our New Store.

LATE WAR DESPATCHES

LONDON, April 4.—More than one recent Zeppelin attack on England has been repulsed, without the public's knowledge of the airships' approach, Under Secretary for War Tennant declared in the Commons this afternoon. He said that new arrangements for air defense of London had proven satisfactory.

The statement confirmed recent reports that on at least three occasions in the past month Zeppelins attempted to reach the British coast but were driven off.

New York Stock Market

Summary of To-day's Activities on the New York Stock Exchange

NEW YORK, N.Y., April 4.—Yesterday's activity and strength in war stocks was renewed at the opening of the Stock Exchange to-day.

Baldwin Locomotive opened up 1 1-8 at 109. United States Steel gained 1-8 at 88. Crucible was up 3-4 at 86 1-4, and American Locomotive advanced 1-2, to 68 1-4.

Prices of the active leaders broke during the afternoon. The break came shortly after the announcement in London that the British Government expects the war to last a full year longer.

BOY SCOUTS AND GIRL GUIDES

A splendid review of the Boy Scouts and Girl Guards was witnessed by a good crowd at the S. A. Temple last evening.

The good training of the boys and girls by their leaders was exhibited and judging by the applause in the audience it was enjoyed very much. Major Walker, the Divisional Chancellor from Montreal says this is the first review of Scouts and Guards in the division and was highly delighted with all he saw and heard in Peterborough. The major goes on a visit to Tweed to-night.

Allies Preparing For An Engagement Against the Bulgars

The Germans Are Severely Repulsed North-east of Verdun

Four More Vessels Sunk In the Past Twenty-four Hours With One Life Lost

Three of the Ships Belonged to Neutral Nations---Sinking of Dutch Steamer Causes Great Excitement in Holland

LONDON, April 5.—Four more vessels, three of them neutral ships, have been sunk in the past twenty-four hours with one life lost with the British steamer Bendew. Others vessels are Spanish, Norwegian and Dutch.

CAUSED GREAT EXCITEMENT.

THE HAGUE, April 5.—The torpedoing of the Dutch schooner Elsina Helena, while Holland is in the grip of a big war scare, caused great excitement here to-day.

News of the sinking of the schooner in the North Sea reached here early to-day. There was doubt that she had been attacked by a submarine. The Government at once ordered an official inquiry.

The tension increased to-day when the general committee of the Lower Chamber met in secret session.

German Warship Badly Damaged In North Sea Engagement

OTTAWA, Ont., April 5.—Col. Allison, central figure in the Kyte charges, will come to Ottawa and give evidence at the investigation.

COPENHAGEN, April 5.—A German warship was badly damaged in an engagement in the North Sea.

LONDON, April 5.—Salonika despatches state the Allies are preparing for an engagement against the Bulgars. General Sarrail has gone to the front. Non-combatants are advised to leave the war zone.

OTTAWA, April 5.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier's resolution for a wide-open shell inquiry was defeated in the Commons by 82 to 44. Four Conservative members upheld the demands made by Laurier. The retirement of Hughes is rumoured.

TORONTO, April 5.—In the Legislature last night Premier Hearst said he would do his duty by the Prohibition Bill even though it resulted in his political downfall.

PARIS, April 5.—The French official statement last night states the Germans were severely repulsed northeast of Verdun.

COLUMBUS, New Mexico., U.S.A., April 5.—American cavalry have won a fresh victory over Villa's forces.

TO CHECK A COLD.

It is easy to check a cold if you begin in time. Frequent doses of Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine keep the cough loose, allay the inflammation, and so prevent it spreading to the bronchial tubes and lungs. Mrs. G. H. Moore, Shortreed, B.C., writes: "I wish to state my gratitude for Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine, for it cured cold which a friend said would soon put me in the grave."

ENGLAND'S BUSINESS END.

Dover Is Like the Charged Head of a Deadly Torpedo.

Dover, where German seaplanes have lately been showering high explosives, might be called the "business end" of the British Empire toward the continent; for when England wars in Europe her troops set out from Dover's harbor, whence they have gone to Germany, France, Holland, Italy, Spain, and Belgium in centuries past, and whence they are leaving to-day in an undiminishing stream for scores of battlefields distributed clean across the continent from the open ocean to the Black Sea.

The city occupies a narrow break in the famous channel chalk cliffs, and its harbor is formed by a grand enclosure of the waters of the Straits of Dover by more than a mile of piers. The chalk cliffs are honeycombed with military works, hidden guns, and batteries and galleries through the rock. The fortification of this point, where England and Continental Europe approach nearest to one another, has been done as thoroughly as military ingenuity can devise.

England has several times refused to consider seriously a project for linking Dover with Calais by tubes under the Channel to France, lest an insidious enemy some day march across unexpected into their country under their protecting sea. One company formed for the construction of such a dry-land way between Europe and England did manage to get some lengthy reports made to Parliament, in which the suggestions were advanced that provision must be made, with the construction of any such tubes, for their flooding from Dover in case of an outbreak of hostilities between Britannia and any European power. The idea, however, was dropped as a dangerous one.

Roman shipping visited Dover's port, and probably, the Phoenicians, before Roman times, traded there. The harbor was fortified in the fourth century, and the original defenses have been kept up to date ever since.

The Unseen Foe.

That the humor and cheerfulness of the Canadian soldier is proof against even the most extreme discomforts of life "somewhere in Flanders" is shown by the cabled story of the flooded trench. A private, splashing waist-deep through muddy, chilly water, was halted by the sentry's challenge: "Halt, who goes there?" "Submarine U-13," was his response.

Bogus Nurses.

Germany has already passed a law making it a punishable offence for an unauthorized person to wear a nursing uniform or badge.

A Dollar-Meal for Five Cents—The most expensive foods are quite often entirely lacking in food value. They do not build muscle or supply energy. Measured by the cost of most foods, a breakfast or luncheon of Shredded Wheat with milk and cream is worth a dollar—and the cost is not over five cents. Two biscuits will supply all the strength needed for a half-day's work or play.

Germans Increase Forces Along the Dutch Frontier

Holland's Precautions Said to Be Natural Consequence of the Move —Not Likely Soon to Be Involved in War

THE HAGUE, via London, April 5.—The secret of the increased diplomatic tension in Holland is being well kept. Even people whose position justifies the assumption that they have knowledge of what is happening, confess that they, themselves, are puzzled.

A competent authority informed the Associated Press there was no immediate prospect of Holland becoming involved in hostilities with any Power, though it was true that Germany lately had somewhat increased her forces along the frontier, and that precautionary measures on Holland's side were a natural consequence. It was said that if war were impending more would be done than the temporary stoppage of furloughs which, moreover, had been done before.

The Nieuwe Conrant comments on the holding of the conference of the Entente Allies in Paris and says that the general war situation has entered, or is about to enter, a phase necessitating special watchfulness. The newspaper understands that the Chamber of Deputies will not meet until April 4th, on which date it had been convoked normally to discuss the question of old age pensions.

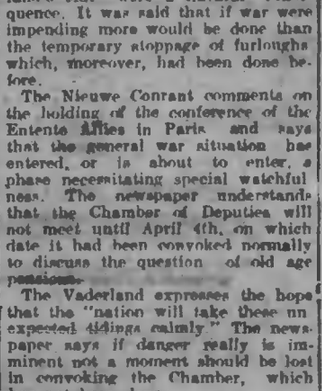
The Vaderland expresses the hope that the "nation will take these unexpected tidings calmly." The newspaper says if danger really is imminent not a moment should be lost in convoking the Chamber, which has not been done.

The Vaderland asserts that it knows from a reliable source that the special measures being taken by the government are only consequences of the general war situation and not due to any particular incident. The measures, the Vaderland declares are not connected with any demand made by Great Britain at the recent Entente Allies' conference in Paris. Furthermore, it is pointed out only periodical furloughs have been withdrawn and no officers or soldiers on furlough have been recalled.

The Vaderland emphatically denies the Amsterdam Telegraf's report that all freight cars have been seized for military purposes.

AN ABSURD REPORT.

The Kaiser has told Prince Willie to put no faith in the British despatches that the Prussians had lost their offensive: "Why, my son," said he, "on one could be more offensive than we."—Vancouver Province



A Zeppelin Crossing The East Anglian Coast Early Yesterday Was Driven Off

No Casualties and No Damage But Several Explosions Were the Result--Drastic Increases in Income Taxes

LONDON, April 5.—A single Zeppelin crossed the East Anglian coast at 2 a.m. yesterday, but was driven off. There were no casualties and no damage, but several explosions.

LONDON, April 5.—Drastic increases in income taxes have been made. A man with $2,500 yearly income will pay $280 income tax. Total extra revenue from income tax $215,000,000. Extra taxes have been imposed on railway tickets, sugar and all amusements.

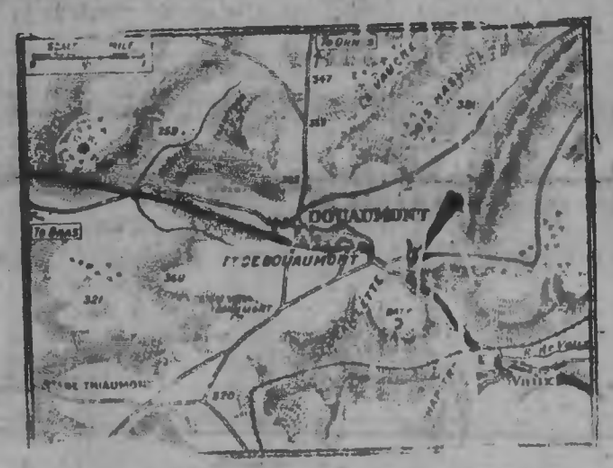
BERLIN, April 5.—Intercepted despatches say an attempt was made recently to assassinate the Czar.

TORONTO, April 5.—Premier Hearst announced there would be no referendum re prohibition till one year after the war.

OTTAWA, April 5.—James Kendry, President of the Auburn Woollen Mills, Peterborough, said wool stock was used, but not shoddy, in Government clothing made in his factory.

BERNE, Switzerland, April 5.—Swiss are now marking frontiers with signs, visible at long distance, to prevent mistakes by German aviators.

PETROGRAD, April 5.—Gen. Ivanoff retires from command of the Russian armies in Galicia. His successor is not announced.



THE GERMAN DRIVE ON CAILETTE WOOD—The arrow indicates the direction of the latest German effort near Fort Douaumont, an effort which resulted in partial occupation of Cailette wood, where the French have regained the lost ground.

CHILDREN'S AID SOCIETY BOY MAKES GOOD

Mr. Wm. Henry of the Children's Shelter, has submitted a pamphlet issued from Toronto, with the following reference to one of the Society's wards, who has made good at the front, and whose name is withheld:

"If there is one lesson more than another that social workers should learn it is to maintain faith in the troublesome boy, and never give up in their determination to pull him safely through the unsettled, wayward years of adolescence. With faith and perseverance the ultimate reward is certain, even though we may never know in actual experience of the reformation and steady life. (See Gal. vi. 9.)

"The following letter is from a young fellow lost sight of years ago. At that time he was constantly being arrested for some offence after another and was apparently indifferent to the efforts made to help him. In fact to many it all seemed like a foolish waste of enthusiasm to have further confidence in him—but was it?

Somewhere in Flanders,
January 5th, 1916.

Mr. J. J. Kelso, Toronto, Ont.

Dear Sir,—No doubt you will have by this time forgotten I ever existed but this letter will prove different, hoping you will not be offended at my apparent boldness in writing to you. But I could not resist the temptation to tell you something about myself. You will probably be surprised to hear that I am here in France fighting for my country along with the rest of the boys. Believe me, Sir, when I say I have not forgotten your kindness in the past, nor shall I ever forget it. Sir, without your kindness and ability for helping young boys who went astray I would not have been here a free man to-day and be able to hold up my head and say I am an honest man, and were I to walk in on you some day you would never be able to recognize me in the least. I have grown and changed a great deal. The air, in fact the climate in general agrees with me. The circumstances here are a great deal different than those at home, living in a dug-out, in all kinds of weather, and constantly under heavy shell and rifle fire. But I would sooner face shrapnel than a great many things I could mention in Canada and elsewhere. It is jolly fun doing the shrapnel glide when you hurry out of the road of one heavy shell into another. Well, I must stop writing but would be pleased if you will write me.

ASKED T OPAY FARES.

OTTAWA, April 5.—It is pretty well understood, however, what has given rise to the Pittsburg story of mates for war widows. Col. Lamb, of the Salvation Army, has been here several times this winter propagating a scheme to bring out to Canada five thousand widows. He wants the Government to pay their fares. The Government has not taken any action

Why Hesitate?

We Will Relieve You of Kidney Disease or Furnish You Medicine Free

We know we can furnish medicine that will almost always effect easy and positive relief for kidney ailments. We are so certain of this that we sell every package with our printed guarantee that the medicine shall cost the purchaser nothing should it fail to do as we claim.

We have been recommending and selling this medicine to a considerable extent, and are receiving the best kind of evidence that it is doing exactly as we said it would. That's why we can safely and truthfully ask all our neighbours to try it at our risk.

Our treatment consists of Rexall Kidney Pills, which are one of the finest pharmaceutical preparations we know of for overcoming kidney, bladder and urinary derangements, and associate ailment.

We want everyone who suffers from any kidney or urinary disease to come to our store and get a package of Rexall Kidney Pills. They can try as many as three packages with the distinct understanding that we will return every penny paid us for the medicine at the mere hint of dissatisfaction. Certainly we know of no stronger reason as to why you should at least give Rexall Kidney Pills a trial. We would not dare make this offer were we not positive that the result will be as we proclaim. Price 50c. Sold in this community only at our store, The Rexall Store—McDermid & Jury, corner George and Charlotte Streets.

PARTNERS FOR WAR WIDOWS

Salvation Army to Assist Efforts of Canadian Government.

NEW YORK, April 5.—A despatch from Pittsburg to the Tribune says:

Thousands of war widows of British soldiers will be assisted in getting good husbands in the United States and Canada by the Salvation Army, in conjunction with the Canadian Government, according to announcement by Col. William Evans, in command of the Salvation army here.

Because a great many of the best men of England have been slain, the widows field, Col Evans declares, ad many must come to American shores for remarriage and livelihood.

The Salvation Army he says, will assist the Canadian Government in placing the widows in an environment that will enable them to get good husbands, and in the larger cities will introduce them to desirable bachelors.

Col Evans thinks the agricultural provinces of Canada and the western states will get a majority of the widows.

GIRLS! GIRLS! TRY IT! STOP DANDRUFF AND BEAUTIFY YOUR HAIR

Hair Stops Falling Out and Gets Thick, Wavy, Strong and Beautiful

Your hair becomes light, wavy, fluffy, abundant and appears as soft, lustrous and beautiful as a young girl's after a "Danderine hair cleanse." Just try this—moisten a cloth with a little Danderine and carefully draw it through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. This will cleanse the hair of dust, dirt and excessive oil and in just a few moments you have doubled the beauty of your hair.

Besides beautifying the hair at once, Danderine dissolves every particle of dandruff; cleanses, purifies and invigorates the scalp, forever stopping itching and falling hair.

But what will please you most will be after a few weeks' use when you will actually see new hair—fine and downy at first—yes—but really new hair growing all over the scalp. If you care for pretty, soft hair and lots of it surely get a 25-cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any druggist or toilet counter. just try it.

"Henry," she said, "I wish I could organize a society of some kind. It seems to be the only way to secure social recognition in this town."

"Well, why don't you go ahead and organize one?"

"I can't think of anything that I'm an authority on. If I should organize a drama club some other woman who knew more about the drama than I would butt in and get herself elected president. It would be the same way with suffrage, ethical culture and child study and music. I'm unfortunately not an authority on any of these things, and if I got up a society I should, of course, want to be the head of it."

"Well, why not organize a Browning club? You can pretend to know all about Browning, and the other women who pretend to know all about him won't know whether you're fooling them or not."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Five Varieties of Salmon.

Kamchatka has five varieties of salmon—chavitcha (king salmon), krasnaia (red salmon), keta (dog salmon), gorbuscha (humpback salmon) and kishutch (sockeye salmon). The run of chavitcha begins about May 10 to 20 (old style) during the period of spring rains and the overflow of muddy water. They run in large schools, and the run continues for several days. The fish, which weigh twenty to twenty-five pounds, is purely a Kamchatka fish and is not found in the Ochotsk and other districts.—Consular and Trade Reports.

He Didn't Hush.

"Mamma," queried little Willie, "what is 'hush?'"

"Why do you ask, dear?" said his mother.

"Because," explained the observing urchin, "when I asked sister what made her hair all mussed after her beau was here this afternoon she said, 'Hush, dear.'"—Chicago News.

Deadlier and Safer.

"Let's send the czar a bomb concealed in a plum pudding."

"Why not merely send him a plum pudding?" suggested the other callous plotter. "If he eats it our work is done and we run no risks."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

OUR SERIAL STORY

"Flower of the Gorse"

BY LOUIS TRACY

"I thought my message would have brought you sooner," she said. "But perhaps you were helping your mother to overhaul her boxes. Mere Piton gave me the news of the salvage, which has surprised our local experts. This is the first time in the memory of man than Les Verres have disgorged their prey."

"What message, Dad?"

Yvonne removed her hat and coat, and seated herself on a sheep-skin rug by her father' side. She had that to say which would be hard for both, and she did not wish to see the agony in his face.

"Haven't you seen Lorry, then?" he inquired.

"No, Dear."

"But that is strange. Lorry left here quite half an hour ago, meaning to ask you to come home. I didn't think Pont Aven could hide you from Lorry if he was bent on the chase."

"Sorry, Dad. Nothing—no one—would have kept me had I known. But I understand what happened. I quitted Julia's half an hour since. Mr. Raymond was anxious for a brief talk, and we walked to the top of the quay. Lorry would go to Julia's by the mills. That is how he missed me."

She felt her father's body quiver, as a mettlesome horse might flinch under the touch of a spur, and knew that the mere mention of Raymond's name had affected him. It was her habit, when seated at his knee, to catch his hand and draw it over her shoulder, holding it in both of hers, and using it as a sort of stay. She had done this insensibly, and her downcast eyes dwelt on the thin, nervous fingers—they seemed to have shrunk during that time of suffering. The discovery affected her strangely. She could not unburden her soul then. No matter what the cost to herself and others, he must be spared—at any rate till another day of wretchedness was upon them. She realized just in time that a hot tear stealing down her cheek would drop on that dear hand, and bring about an instant demand for an explanation.

With a jerk she averted her head, and the tear fell scalding on her own wrist. Her father misinterpreted the movement.

"Don't stir, Girly," he said. "I have something to say, a confession to make. Remain where you are. I shall cause you pain, and if I find my own anguish mirrored in your eyes, I may falter in my duty."

So father and daughter were animated by the same thought. Each desired only to lighten the shock for the other. Yvonne nestled closer.

WOMAN A PHYSICAL WRECK

Tells in Following Letter How She Was Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Milwaukee, Wis.—"Before taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I was a physical wreck. I had been going to a doctor for several years but he did me no good. A friend told me about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, so I decided to give it a fair trial, and it gave me relief from bearing down pains which had been so bad that I would have to lie down. I also used the Sanative Wash and it has done me a great deal of good, and I am not troubled with a weakness any more."—Mrs. P. L. Ball, 1289 Booth Street, Milwaukee, Wis.

The most successful remedy for women's ills is Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It has stood the test for forty years, which would be impossible if it did not have genuine merit.

For special advice, free, write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.

More than ever was she resolved to keep her woes to herself for the hour. With an effort that cost a cruel biting of her under lip, she contrived to murmur without a catch in her voice:

"You're tired, Darling. Don't tell me you're not. You ought to be in bed and asleep. Let us wait till the morning, and have a nice long chat after petit dejeuner."

"No," said Ingersoll firmly. "I promised Lorry I would speak tonight. He—expects it of me."

"Lorry!" she gasped, in a sudden fright born of the knowledge that had come to her in the gloom down there by the whispering river, when a cold-blooded, trafficker in her mother's difficulties had offered to sell his secret the price of all she held dear. 'Lorry! How is Lorry concerned in our present troubles?"

"Your troubles are his, Sweetheart. Lorry loves you. True knight-errant that he is, he wants to slay the dragon that would devour you."

"But, father dear, how could he know? How could anyone know?"

In her quick alarm the cry slipped out unaware. Happily, as it transpired,—for there is no telling what John Ingersoll might have done in his anger if Raymond's infamous suggestion had reached him in the present state of tension,—he misunderstood a second time.

"Lorry didn't know, he only guessed," he said gently. "He is a good fellow, and I ached for the sympathy of some man to whom I could talk freely. So, to remove the cloud between us, of which each has been sensible since we came ashore on that Thursday night, I told him the truth, and the whole truth. He urged that you should be told too. He is right. Oddly enough, despite my vaunted repute fo wisdom, he saw into the muddle more clearly than I. Yvonne, I did not divorce your mother. I—I regret my action now, when regret comes too late. According to English law she never could have been Walter Carmac's wedded wife while I lived. Girly, forgive me! I have wronged both her and you grievously."

Yvonne whirled round and flung her arms about the stricken man's neck. There was no pretense now at hiding her tears; but her eyes shone with another light than that of grief.

"Dad," she cried fiercely, "I shan't have you torn and harried in this way! I refuse, do you hear? It is my turn to hear some of the suffering, some of the sacrifice. I am young and strong, and you have trained me well for the battle. My mother's story must not become known. We must save her, you and I. Isn't it by such means that our worth is tested? Do you think I'll shirk the ordeal? No, a thousand times no! We can't talk reasonably to-night. We would rend each other's hearts. But to-morrow, when we are calmer, we must look at things fearlessly, and take the road that leads to honour, no matter what the cost!"

Her father stroked her hair, to still her frenzy, just as he had often done in the stress of some childish tantrum; for Yvonne had never been a demure little saint, but owned in full measure the defects of a frank and impulsive temperament.

"Don't let us give way to hysteria," he said, smiling wanly. "Of course it was my fault. Perhaps, as you say, we may take a more level-headed view of our difficulties in cold daylight. But, to prepare you, so to speak, I must warn you that your mother's chief enemy is that churl Raymond."

"Raymond!" Again was Yvonne almost choked with apprehension. How could her father suspect the devilish scheme the secretary had hatched? Had Lorry probed the depths of the man's evil mind? Her brain swam; but she compelled her faculties to remain alert.

"Yes—Raymond," her father was saying. "I have no absolute proof; but I am convinced that he overheard your mother's frantic words of self reproach when the Hirondelle was coming up the river. The very agent he is employing in Paris, ostensibly in aid of your quest for poor Madeleine, is really engaged in a search into the early records of our lives, your mother's and mine. The inquiry is a simple thing. If Raymond has not secured the necessary evidence already, it is only a matter of hours before it is in his hands. Then, unless a miracle happens he can dictate his own terms. Worst of all, your mother will be in his power as long as she lives, and an unscrupulous scoundrel, such as I believe Raymond to be, could cause untold mischief after her death."

Yvonne rose to her feet, and straightened her lithe, slim body. With a determined gesture she brushed away a mist from her eyes. "I want to ask a few questions," she said. "You will be quite open and candid with me, I know, because it is necessary that we should meet the trials of the next few days with the clearest knowledge of each other's aims. Do you think it possible to make any arrangement with Raymond that would be binding?"

"The blackmailer's appetite only grows by feeding. Pay him a very large sum to-day, and he will demand four or five times the amount within a month or a year. There is no finality. The wolf may eat to repletion; but it will continue to slay in mere lust of killing."

"Is there no way of defeating him?"

"Lorry, as I hinted, hit on a notion. I have no means of knowing exactly what legal steps Carmac and Stella took to make their marriage valid. Carmac might have been advised to establish, or secure, American citizenship. Moreover, French law may adapt itself readily to American standards. Those are points for lawyers; but I want you to go into the matter thoroughly with your mother, and ascertain whether or not there exists any sort of legal barrier that may serve to keep this jackal from devouring her. That is one reason why I have opened my heart to you to-night."

Sarcastic!

The best Kitchener stories are those told of his tours of inspection. Quite a gem in its way is the story of a certain commanding officer who was putting his troops through a series of manoeuvers before Lord Kitchener. Somehow or other, he managed to get his men thoroughly mixed up. In the end, however, the C. O. bobbed up smiling, and, trotting proudly up to "K. of K.," remarked, "There, sir; I flatter myself that that was extremely well done." 'Oh, excellently, excellently!" was the suave reply. "May I ask what on earth you were trying to do?"

India's Jute Output.

The value of raw jute exported from India in 1829 was approximately $2,500, in 1913 it was close on $100,000,000. The output of the manufactured article in 1855 was about eight tons per day; now it is getting on for 2,000 tons per day, or nearly four times as much as Dundee produces. The Calcutta mills, from an annual consumption of a few thousand bales in 1855, now take over five million bales and it is quite likely that the next few years will see a further expansion.

Was Troubled With BOILS
ALL OVER HIS BODY.

When the blood becomes impure the first symptoms manifesting themselves are a breaking out on some part of the body of various sorts of bad blood troubles, such as boils, pimples, abscesses, ulcers, etc.

How many times have you met a friend with a handkerchief tied around his neck, and have asked him: "What is the matter with you?" "Oh! I have a boil on the back of my neck; I guess I will have to take something for my blood."

The best blood cleansing remedy on the market to-day is Burdock Blood Bitters, and the speediest and most thorough method of expelling all the useless and corrupt matter from the blood is to use this old and well tried remedy that has been on the market for the past forty years.

Mr. W. R. Cockerill, Goldau, B.C., writes: "I was troubled with boils all over my body, and my blood was very bad. I tried all kinds of medicines and salves, but got no relief. I had to quit work, as I could not stoop to do anything. My boss told me to use Burdock Blood Bitters, after I had told him I had tried nearly everything else. I got one bottle of B.B.B., and before I had finished it the boils were all gone. It is the best blood cleanser I have ever taken. I have told several others who were suffering with boils and they all say it is great medicine. I am forty-seven years of age, but I feel like sixteen since I got rid of the boils."

B.B.B. is manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Clearing Up the Battlefield, Searching and Identifying Those Who Have Fallen in the Fight.

Five Days on Bull Run Field.

By CAPTAIN GEORGE EDWARD HALL.

WE were four kids, nine months after our mother died—dirty and ragged—Jack, George, Mart and Nellie. Dad wearied of looking after us, so he found a woman. But she wouldn't take the job unless he married her. So we were all stood up in a row, Dad and the woman at the head, and the country parson bound us all together.

And then the said woman began her reign with a big hickory stick. May God bless her ashes, for she had no soul.

Then commenced the journey to our destiny. Jack was a fighter and fed the family on woodchucks, and he grew so bad that the woman decreed that either he or she must leave. So Dad, put him to learn the harness trade, and I, alas!—the poet of the family—would flee from the big stick and put my head in at the window where she could not whack me without breaking the glass, and I'd sing my first song:—

"O Mother, Mother! Don't let your angry passions rise.
If you do, you will not meet your God in the skies."

This, too, was too much. I, too, had to go.

One day Hillier, the Dutch baker, called, he who had his shop twelve miles down the river in the then beautiful village, now the great city of Binghamton, where the Chenango joins the beautiful Susquehanna.

"Hillier!" said the woman, "here is a bad boy. Take him and mix him in your dough." And Hillier said to me:—

"Bub, how would you like to drive my wagon and learn the trade?"

Dad was consulted, and I left the house of our birth to sleep in the cellar of a dough shop.

I remember, beside a galaxy of boils that came out on my back, of feeding out of the window the hogs that infested the Chenango dough mixed with hartshorn or ammonia, and how the poor things went squealing down into the waters and how the people stood on the bridge and wondered at their antics.

And now comes the event that prepared me for the command of the White House guard. Jack got pious and sang in the choir and was commissioned to look after my spiritual welfare. So one night he took me to prayer meeting, and it chanced that there was a case of smallpox at the next door, and we both took it bad. And the health authorities, having no pest house, bundled us into an old cart, which stopped at the house of our birth. The woman protested, but Dad said:—

"Come in, boys."

We all had the plague together, and Dad lost his left eye, and a neighbor's babe was born with a postule on her nose. All this came to me for going to church and being good, a good that has ended well in my love for Lincoln.

AFTER THE ACTION—A PARTY OF BRITISH SOLDIERS SEARCHING THE BODIES OF THE DEAD FOR PAPERS AND IDENTIFICATION MARKS.

After an action with the Germans along a section of the front where the tension is not too great and the general feeling between the contending forces permits, or where the nature of the country renders it possible, it is the usual practice of the British to send out parties to bring back those wounded in the fight and to search the dead in order to identify them. Where this is not possible the wounded remain between the lines untended and the dead unburied. The work is carried out with thoroughness, and no discrimination between friend and foe is made. Each dead German is searched, and a careful inventory is made by the officer in charge. Anything which would help to give the name and regiment of the deceased soldier is carefully noted down.

Drawn by F. Matania for the Sphere, London. Copyright in the United States by the New York Herald Co.

Jack returned to his fiancee, and in spite of the pitted face she married him. I was apprenticed to learn the harness business with him.

Soon a turbulence arose within the land, and I went forth to sell "The Life of Lincoln" and Helper's "Impending Crisis." North and South were arrayed against each other, and Lincoln elected. The war came on, and I was in it up to the second Bull Run. While lying wounded there Colonel Broadhead was laid by my side. He borrowed my pencil and wrote to Lincoln:—

"I die by the imbecility of Pope and the treachery of McDowell." But Lincoln didn't believe it, and McDowell was acquitted by the famous court of inquiry.

And then came a time when the smallpox was rampant in Washington, and the War Department sought men immune of it to guard the White House grounds and the City Hospital. Then, because of immunity gained in my earlier tribulation, I was promoted to captain and placed in charge. I remember Stanton calling me in one day, bidding me to place double guard on the path that led from his door across to the White House.

"For," said he, "Lincoln often goes this way by day and by night."

Lincoln had the habit of going to see his subordinates rather than sending for them. And here I was taught the dreadfulness of war, among the poor fellows that came mutilated from the front.

Of all the calamities that befall the human race, war stands first. And when I read of the slaughter now taking place over the sea my memory returns to that awful first night I lay wounded on the field of Bull Run. I hear the moans, the groans, the calls for loved ones. I see the tramping hosts of victors go by, and I hear one robber say:—

"Give me your sword, pistol and purse," and I replying to him:—

"I am wounded, sir. Have pity."

He unbelted my sword and took my pistol and again demanded the purse. And while I was groaning he took it and led his dark horse away.

Through the night air came the wails of the dying. Five days I laid there. Blessed are the dead that die at once and do not live a crippled death! Well be it with those who pass on. The terror is with those mutilated that live on in sorrow of an afflicted life. And to live a life of mental activity in a crippled body is worse than a thousand deaths. This, not death, is the horror of war.

The saddest thing of earth is to live while your energies are dead and other men crowd you to the wall. How sad is the consolation to feel that you have fought for the flag that others are strong to enjoy!

Our war was tame and gentle compared to that diabolical conflict across the ocean. And since our war resulted in such sadness to the world because of so many cripples, what can we expect in the future of the present war? God have mercy on those who caused it and who prolong it. History and the men to come after will scorn them all.

A LIFETIME OF SICKNESS

Worn Out, Thin and Miserable Until She Took "Fruit-a-tives"

PALMERSTON, June 20th, 1914.

"Stomach Trouble and Distressing Headaches nearly drove me wild. Some time ago, I got a box of "Fruit-a-tives," your famous fruit medicine, and they completely relieved me. To-day I am feeling fine and a physician, meeting me on the street, asked the reason for my improved appearance. I said, "I am taking Fruit-a-tives." He said, "If Fruit-a-tives make you look so well, go ahead and take them. They are doing more for you than I can."

MRS. H. S. WILLIAMS.

50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size 25c. At dealers or sent postpaid by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

Just Like a Queen.

An officer who has just been discharged from one of the London hospitals, has been telling me a delightful story of Queen Alexandra. One day Her Majesty visited the hospital, and chatted with my friend for a few minutes. "Do you know what she said to me?" he asked. "She sat on my bed for nearly five minutes, and as she was leaving said: 'I know your needs are well looked after, but if there is anything extra you would like, tell me.'"

SIMPLE WAY TO END DANDRUFF

There is one sure way that has never failed to remove dandruff at once, and that is to dissolve it, then you destroy it entirely. To do this, just get about four ounces of plain, common liquid arvon from any drug store (this is all you will need), apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

By morning, most if not all, of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it, no matter how much dandruff you may have.

You will find all itching and digging of the scalp will stop instantly, and your hair will be fluffy, lustrous, glossy, silky and soft, and look and feel a hundred times better.

KING OF GAMBLERS

Francois Blanc, the Ex-Convict, Who Bought Monaco.

THEN STARTED MONTE CARLO.

A Bold and Reckless Soldier of Fortune, He Instituted the Gilded Gaming Palace That Now Wins Millions Yearly For Its Wealthy Owners.

Francois Blanc, an ex-convict from Homburg, bought the principality of Monaco, boots and baggage. The genius of gambling had claimed many an individual, many a noble and his estate and not infrequently an entire city, but it had never before undertaken such a conquest as this.

Francois Blanc's one of the most remarkable of all soldiers of fortune. Of his early history little is known. He was seized by the authorities of Homburg for having made fraudulent use of the telegraph in relation to stock exchange news received from Paris. His method was one of the very oldest —namely, the corruption of the employees. It seems that at this time the German law did not precisely cover this species of swindling, and he and his twin brother escaped with a sentence of seven months.

Francois Blanc was not discouraged. He had accumulated 100,000 francs, and with that sum he established the Kursaal at Homburg. The Kursaal flourished, and Blanc might have gone on there to the realization of his ambitions but for the national sentiment he was shrewd enough to foresee. Blanc realized that the time was not far distant when the German people would put down the sort of gambling in which he was engaged, so he began to look about for some new country in which to set up his temple of fortune.

On the coast of the Mediterranean, between the kingdoms of France and Italy, there was a little independent principality. It was not more than two miles and a quarter long and hardly three-quarters of a mile wide, but it was an independent kingdom, with an old and royal house.

Charles III. was the reigning prince, but he was a tattered monarch, and his court was a beggarly make believe. In his desperate situation it is said he applied to a shrewd Parisian for counsel, who advised him to set up gaming tables and thereby "ruin other people's subjects since you have already ruined your own."

Charles III. followed that pregnant advice. He sold a gambling concession in the principality to two adventurers, Duval and Lefevre. These men built the casino, but their venture was not particularly successful. They asserted that Charles' avarice could not be satisfied and when Francois Blanc arrived on the Mediterranean, around 1860, he bought the concession and moved his gambling establishment from the Kursaal at Homburg to Monaco.

Francois Blanc was a bold and daring adventurer. The little principality was divided practically into three towns—Monaco, Condamine and Monte Carlo. It was the last that Francois Blanc occupied. He employed the best architect to be had, built a great casino, laid out beautiful gardens and terraces and expended over $3,000,000 upon the mere prospect of making Monte Carlo the gambling headquarters of Europe.

Francois Blanc, the ex-convict from Homburg, was no ordinary man. Lord Brougham said that Blanc was the greatest financier of his time. At any rate, his great financial adventure justified itself. Blanc came to live in splendor. He married his daughters to princes, he accumulated a fortune of 250,000,000 francs, and he left behind him an establishment that nets at least $6,000,000 a year in profits.

More than this, Francois Blanc bought and paid for the principality of Monaco. He paid Charles III. 500,000 francs a year and all his expenses, with a percentage of the profits; he kept up all the roads and gardens for the principality; he paid the police and magistrates and all fixed charges of the kingdom. Moreover, when the merchants of Nice endeavored to persuade the French senate to resist gambling at Monte Carlo and when the subjects of the principality threatened to revolt Blanc, daring and full of resources, had Charles issue an edict abolishing all taxes in the principality, and out of his concession, in addition to what he had already paid, Blanc paid all the taxes of Monaco.

When Albert Honore Charles, the present Prince of Monaco, came to the throne he remained under the thumb of the famille Blanc, and in 1898 the concession they had obtained was renewed for fifty years upon the payment of 10,000,000 francs down, 15,000,000 to be paid in 1914 and other vast sums, together with practically all fixed charges of the principality. All this is done by a company called La Societe des Bains de Mer de Monte Carlo.

And so the genius of gambling ate a king and his court, a monarch of one of the oldest reigning houses in Europe—a palace, an army, a principality with its subjects, and a bishop and cathedral to boot!—Melville Davisson Post, in the Saturday Evening Post.

BACKACHE, LUMBAGO AND RHEUMATIC TROUBLES.

Dear Mr. Editor—I wish to state that I suffered greatly from backache, lumbago and rheumatic troubles. I used "Anuric," the latest discovery of Doctor Pierce for backache and kidney troubles, and I can cheerfully recommend the "Anuric Tablets" to anyone suffering from any of these maladies.

Yours truly,
J. F. GAGNON.

Worry: It is now asserted with confidence that these painful effects due to uric acid in the system are entirely eradicated. A new remedy, called "Anuric," has been discovered by Dr. Pierce, and is the cause of a drainage outward of the uric acid with which it comes in contact within the body. It will ward off backache, headache, and the darting pains and aches of articular or muscular rheumatism—of these diseases which are caused by too much uric acid, such as gout, sciatica, sciatica, renal calculus. "Anuric" prolongs life because old people usually suffer from hardening and thickening of the walls of the arteries, due to the excess of uric acid in the blood and tissues.

Dr. Pierce, who is director and chief physician at the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y., has been testing this wonderful medicine for the relief of over-worked and weakened kidneys. The relief obtained by sufferers has been so satisfactory that he determined to place "Anuric" with the principal druggists in town where people could get this ready-to-use medicine. "Anuric" is not harmful or poisonous, but aids nature in throwing off those poisons within the body which cause so much suffering, pain and misery. Scientists assert this remedy is 27 times more potent than Lithia. Send 10 cents for large trial package.

"Anuric" is building up a reputation as good as Dr. Pierce's other well-known medicines which have been proved reliable during nearly fifty years, such as Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription for the ills of women, Doctor Pierce's Pleasant Pellets, the liver regulator, and Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery for red blood.

NOTABLE SURRENDERS

SCENES WHICH STAND OUT IN THE ANNALS OF WAR.

The Meeting of the Victor and the Vanquished Is a Dramatic Moment and Has Been Marked by Episodes Which Show the Calibre of the Great Warriors—Napoleon Surrendered In State.

In the story of war there is no chapter more thrilling than that which tells how, a generation ago, a comparative handful of Turks held the village of Plevna for five months against a quarter of a million of Russia's picked soldiery.

Again and again the Muscovites hurled themselves against Osman Digna's trenches and redoubts, to be swept back again and again, leaving thousands of slain behind them. And it was only when hunger and disease had this band of heroes in their grip that the gallant Turkish leader made his desperate and historic effort to hew his way through the enemy's lines —a "forlorn hope" which ended, as it was bound to end, in failure.

But not until the Turks were surrounded by the Muscovites in overwhelming numbers and Osman himself was seriously wounded, did the white flag at last give the signal of surrender. When, later, the vanquished hero was led before the Russian Czar, carrying himself as proudly in defeat as in victory, Alexander, with a cordial hand-grip, gave him this generous greeting: "Sir, I congratulate you on your fine defence. It was one of the most splendid feats in the history of war."

It was with still a bolder front that Mahmud met his conqueror, after his dervish army had been wiped out of existence on the banks of the Atbara River. When, his hands tied behind his back, he was conducted into the presence of the Sirdar, it was with his head carried high and a mien of defiance. "Are you Mahmud?" asked the Sirdar. "Yes," was the answer; "and I am the same as you." "Why did you come to make war here?" "I came," answered Mahmud, proudly, "because like you, I was told to come."

For five months, in 1855, the Turks under General Williams, held the mountain fortress of Kars against a Russian army more than three times their number; and only when food and ammunition both were exhausted, and further defence became hopeless, did the brave English leader even think of surrender. Then it was that the Russian General, Mouravieff, wrote to him one of the most generous messages ever sent to a defeated enemy. "General Williams," he wrote, "you have made yourself a name in history; and posterity will stand amazed at the endurance, the courage, the discipline which this siege has called forth in the remains of an army. Let us arrange a capitulation which will satisfy the demands of war without disgracing humanity."

When General Cronje, after his brave fight on the bank of the Modder River, was compelled to surrender to Lord Roberts, with 4,000 of his army the bitterness, as he afterwards said, was taken out of his humiliation by the gracious words addressed to him by his victor, who, with a warm handclasp, said to him: "Commandant Cronje, you have indeed made a gallant defence, which will win the admiration of the world."

The first Napoleon, after the crowning disaster of Waterloo, finding escape from France impossible, surrendered to Captain Maitland, of the Bellerophon, on July 15th, 1815. As he stepped on board, his breast ablaze with decorations, and escorted by an imposing retinue of officers and servants, it was almost with the air of a conqueror that he addressed the captain: "Sir, I come to place myself under the protection of your King and your laws."
